For these reasons we set aside the decree of the Subordinate Judge and decree the suit as a suit on a mortgage-bond against defendants Nos. 4 to 6 and as against defendants Nos. 1 to 3. If the money be not paid within three months from this date the mortgaged properties will be sold. The issue as to the personal liability of defendants Nos. 4 to 6 will be decided should the plaintiff hereafter find it necessary to apply for a decree under the provisions of Order XLIV, rule 6, Civil Procedure Code. This appeal is, therefore, decreed with costs against the contending defendant No. 4 throughout and with costs on the ex parte scale throughout against the other defendants.

RICHARDSON, J.—I agree.

GHULAM HAIDAR—PLAINTIFF

—PETITIONER

Musammat BHAGAN—DEFENDANT

—RESPONDENT.

Co-operative Benefit Society—Manager refusing to receive subscription of contributory—Contributor whether entitled to refund of past subscriptions.

Plaintiff was a member of an association each member of which was bound to contribute a certain monthly sum, and the total contributions were then placed at the disposal of each contributor in turn. He alleged that the defendant who was the organiser of the scheme had improperly refused to receive his contributions, and he claimed to recover the sum of his past contributions on the ground that by the action of the defendant he had lost all prospect of taking the pool.

Held, (1) that if it was found that it was the plaintiff who refused to continue his contribution he must prove that he had a right to a refund, and if so at what time; [p. 413, col. 1.]

(2) that if, on the other hand, the defendant was responsible for the breach, the burden lay on him of proving that no refund was claimable. [p. 416, col. 1.]

Revision from the decree of the District Judge, Sialkot, dated the 30th March 1917.

Mr. Abdul Rashid, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Ghulam Rasul, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff's claim was for the aggregate of his subscriptions to a certain pool, generally called a "committee." He alleged that the organizer and manipulator of the scheme had refused to continue to receive his subscriptions, he, therefore, had lost all prospect of taking the "pool" and he consequently demanded a return of his subscriptions.

The defendant denied all knowledge of the matter and averred that her mother was responsible, but this the mother denied. The first Court decreed for plaintiff, but the learned District Judge without coming to definite findings of fact held that the plaintiff had shifted his ground and had not established the rules of the "pool" governing the question of refund.

I cannot find any ground for holding that the plaintiff in his pleas varied the position he had taken up in his plaint, nor is it necessary to consider the reductio ad absurdum deduced by the learned District Judge.

If the District Judge agrees with the first Court that the defendant ran the scheme and for reasons quite unconnected with the scheme refused the subscriptions of the plaintiff, she is bound to indemnify him in respect of past subscriptions.

The enforcement of the liability of these individuals who work these schemes is imperative, for I understand that they are very numerous and, when honestly conducted, are a form of co-operation whereby capital is placed at the disposal of each contributor in turn on the condition that he shall pay a monthly subscription to the "pool", and I understand further that when a contributor is unable to continue his subscription, always provided that he has not yet taken the "pool", he generally receives the aggregate of his subscriptions after all the other regular contributors have drawn the "pool".

If the lower Appellate Court finds that it was plaintiff who refused to continue his subscription, plaintiff must prove that he has a right to a refund, if so, when? The learned District Judge has held that plaintiff has not proved such a right, but if the defendant is responsible for the breach, on her will lie the burden of proving that no refund is claimable.

For these reasons I accept the petition, set aside the lower Appellate Court's decree and remand the case for fresh decision on the points indicated.

Costs shall follow final event.

ABDUL JABBAR MIAJI—PLAINTIFF—
RESPONDENT.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 85—Under-raiyati lease, permanent, validity of—'San ba san,' meaning of.

A permanent under-raiyati lease registered in contravention of section 85 (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act is not operative even as against the raiyat who granted it. [p. 418, col. 1.]

A registered under-raiyati lease, while making provision for the holding passing from generation to generation and for being sold by the under-raiyat, described itself as a san ba san (year to year) lease and stipulated that if the under-raiyat ever reduced the rent by raising any objection he would be liable to ejection without notice.

Held, that the under-raiyati lease was a permanent lease and as such contravened the provisions of section 85, Bengal Tenancy Act, and was, therefore invalid. [p. 418, col. 1.]

Appeals against the decrees of the District Judge, Noakhali, dated the 5th of March 1917, affirming those of the Munsif, 2nd Court at Lakhipur, dated the 27th of July 1915.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Romesh Chander Sen, for the Appellants.—The appeals arise of two suits for recovery of possession of lands covered by two under raiyati leases from the heirs of the deceased under-raiyat. The question is, whether the leases are in contravention of the provisions of section 85 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and whether the plaintiffs are not estopped from questioning their validity. The leases are described as san ba san (year to year) and at the same time they are not transferable and heritable from generation to generation. The leases are from year to year and, therefore, do not contravene the provisions of section 85 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Assuming the leases do contravene the provisions of section 85, the lessors cannot now turn round and rely on the invalidity of the leases. Referred to Gonesh Mondol v. Thanda Namasundrani (1).

Section 85, sub-clause (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act, refers to registration of the document so far as landlord is concerned and unless registered the sub-lease is not valid as against the landlord. A sub-lease by a raiyat is valid against the raiyat, otherwise the Legislature would have made a provision to that effect. See Temijudli v. Asgar Howladar (2), Manik Borai v. Bani Charan Mandal (3).

A sub-lease granted by an under raiyat is operative. Referred to Guru Das Das v. Kali

(2) 1 Ind. Cas. 942; 36 C. 256; 13 C. W. N. 183.

(3) 10 Ind. Cas. 469; 13 C. L. J. 649.

KARIM BAKSHA v. ABDUL JABBAR MIJJI.

Das Changa (4), Hari Mohon Pal v. Atul Krishna Bose (5), Bamandas Bhattacharyya v. Nilmadhab Saha (6), Abdul Karim Patwari v. Abdul Rahman (7).

[WALMSLEY, J.—Telam Pramanik v. Adu Shaikh (8) is clearly against you.]

Carnduff, J., came to that conclusion with great reluctance. Even assuming the lease is invalid also against the raiyat and contravenes the provision of section 85, still in this case the lease is from year to year as the word "san ba san" occurs in the first part, middle and last part of the lease.

So far as estoppel is concerned, there is no contrary case.

The Courts should construe a document so that it may be operative. Referred to Lini Miah v. Muhammad Easin Mia (9).

Dr. Sarat Chander Bysak (with him Babu Amulya Churn Banerjee), for the Respondent.—The lease expressly says that you should enjoy and possess the property from generation to generation. It is a permanent grant and the rent was fixed for ever, the grant was heritable and transferable.

On the 2nd point I submit there are numerous cases on the point but not consistent. So far as section 85, sub-clause (2), is concerned, the prohibition is with regard to the registration of the deed. All the cases decided that so far as the lease is concerned, it is not admissible in evidence. The latest case on the point in which all the other cases are reviewed, is Chandi Charan Nath v. Somla Bibi (10), Mohim Chandra Dey v. Baidya Nath (11) and Bamandas Bhattacharyya v. Nilmadhab Saha (6) are referred to in Chandi Charan Nath v. Somla Bibi (10). Under the authority of this Court so far as the lease goes, it is void and no oral evidence is admissible on the point.

As to estoppel, there is no issue and the observation of Beachcroft, J., in Chandi Charan Nath v. Somla Bibi (10) would apply here with equal force. There is no estoppel against a Statute.

Babu Romesh Chandra Sen, in reply.—In Mohim Chandra Dey v. Baidya Nath (11) the lease is not from year to year. The opinion of Beachcroft, J., in Chandi Charan Nath v. Somla Bibi (10) in view of the authorities cannot be taken as binding authority.

JUDGMENT.

WALMSLEY, J.—The plaintiff brought the two suits out of which these two appeals arise to eject the defendants from two holdings. His allegation was that he had granted an under-raiyati to Makram Ali, the predecessor of the defendants, and that on Makram Ali's death he wanted to take khas possession, but the defendants who were Makram Ali's heirs had not given possession to him. The defendants replied that the plaintiff had executed two pattahs, one in respect of each holding, conferring upon Makram Ali permanent and heritable rights. They also said that the plaintiff, although he described himself as a raiyat, was really a tenure-holder.

The first Court found that the plaintiff was, as a matter of fact a raiyat and this was not disputed in the lower Appellate Court. The Courts below further found that the leases granted by the plaintiff to Makram Ali were permanent and heritable leases and they held that the leases had been registered in contravention of the provisions of section 85 (2) of the Tenancy Act and that they were not admissible in evidence, consequently the plaintiff's suits were decreed in both the lower Courts.

It is now contended on behalf of the defendants that the leases ought to have been regarded only as leases from year to year which might properly have been registered under section 85 (2). The translations of the leases have been placed before us and we find that they make provision for the holdings passing from generation to generation and for the holdings being sold; and the only stipulation with regard to ejectment is in these terms: "If you do reduce the rent by raising any objection then you will be liable to be ejected from the land without notice." At the beginning and the end of the documents, however, occurs the word san ba san; and we are asked to hold that that word should modify our view of the nature of the agreement. It appears to me that it is much more important to consider the other parts of the document. The terms about heritability and transferability are terms which generally occur in permanent leases and I think the proper view to take of these pattahs is that they were intended to create a permanent interest, and I may add that the defendants fought the cases in the lower Courts on the footing that they had acquired a permanent interest. That being so, I think the provisions of section 85 (2) come in and the documents ought not to have been registered. It is urged, however, that the plaintiff as lessor cannot raise this question. Numerous authorities have been cited to us upon this matter of the proper construction to be put upon section 85 (2). It is not necessary to refer to more than a few of them, for they have all recently been dealt with in a judgment delivered by Mr. Justice Beachcroft in the case of Chandi Charan Nath v. Somla Bibi (10). The particular cases to which I refer are Jarip Khan v. Durfa Bewa (12), Telam Pramanik v. Adu Shaikh (8) and Mohim Chandra Dey v. Baidya Nath (11). The facts of those cases are generally similar to those of the present case and I think, following the principles adopted in those cases, that these appeals should be dismissed.

One other point has been raised, and that relates to the matter of compensation. It is urged that the plaintiff should be called upon to pay compensation to the defendants. No issue, however, was raised on this subject in the first Court and there appears to be no material on which it could be ascertained what sum, if any, ought to be paid as compensation.

The appeals must be dismissed with costs.

PANTON, J.—I agree.

Appeal dismissed.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 92, applicability of—Sale or mortgage—Sale-deed—Oral evidence to show that transaction was mortgage, admissibility of—Pre-emption—Pre-emptor, position of.

A deed of sale, containing a stipulation that the sale was an out and out one and that there was no agreement to reconvey the property was duly executed and registered. The next day the vendee executed an agreement, which was duly registered to reconvey the property sold by the deed of sale to the vendor, provided the latter repaid the purchase-money together with the price of improvements within two years. One F. instituted a suit for pre-emption of the property:

Held, (1) that the sale-deed being an out and out sale in express terms, as soon as that sale was completed the right of pre-emption accrued and F. was, therefore, entitled to a decree; [p. 419, col. 2.]

(2) that oral evidence to show that at the time of the execution of the sale-deed the agreement to reconvey was in contemplation was inadmissible under section 92 of the Evidence Act. [p. 419, col. 2.]

Obiter dictum—Had the litigation lain solely between the vendor and the vendee, it might have been held that the two transactions taken together amounted merely to a conditional sale or to an English mortgage. [p. 419, col. 2.]

Second appeal from the decree of the Additional Divisional Judge, Delhi, dated the 26th March 1913.

Dr. Muhammad Iqbal, for the Appellants.

The Hon'ble Mr. Fazl-i-Hussain, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—On the 13th of July 1911 Nasir Shah, son of the original plaintiff Musammât Nasira Begam, purchased a stamp paper on which the endorsement by the stamp vendor is to the effect that the paper is to be used for engrossing a deed of conditional sale. On the 14th of July 1911 a deed of sale was executed by Musammât Nasira Begam in favour of Mutmaz Hussain, her relation. The deed contains a distinct stipulation that the sale is an out and out one and that there is no agreement to reconvey the property. This stipulation was entered in the deed apparently to meet any objection that might have been based on the stamp vendor's endorsement. The deed of sale was registered on the 15th of July 1911 and on the same day, the vendee purchased another stamp paper on which he executed an agreement to reconvey the property sold by the deed of sale of the 14th of July 1911 to Musammât Nasira Begum, provided that she repaid the purchase-money together with the price of improvements within two years. This agreement to reconvey was registered on the 17th of July 1911. On the 6th of July 1912 Faizul Hassan, the maternal uncle of the vendee, instituted a suit for pre-emption, whilst on the 12th of July 1912 Musammât Nasira Begam, the plaintiff in this case, instituted a suit for possession of the house in terms of the agreement executed by Mumtaz Hussain on the 15th of July 1911. Musammât Nasira Begam succeeded in the first Court, but the learned Additional Divisional Judge on appeal dismissed her suit and gave Faizul Hassan a decree for possession by pre-emption of the property sold, holding that the sale of the 14th of July 1911 was an out and out sale and that the pre-emptor is not bound by the subsequent agreement entered into by the vendee to reconvey the property under certain conditions and within a certain time to the vendor.

Musammât Nasira Begam has come to this Court on second appeal, and it has been argued before us that as the interval of time between the deed of sale and the agreement to reconvey was only one day, the transactions should be considered as one only and consequently the transaction amounted to a mortgage and no right of pre-emption accrued. The following cases have been cited before us: Palaniappin v. Subbaraya Gounden (1), Bhagwan Sahai v. Bhagwan Din (2), Ram Saran Lal v. Amirta Kaur (3) and Balkishen Das v. W. F. Legge (4). These cases, however, are not of great value in connection with this case, for in them the relation of the vendor and the vendee or the mortgagor and mortgagee is considered. In this case the position of a third party, viz., the pre-emptor, has to be considered and that circumstance distinguishes this case from those cited. It would appear that the original intention of the parties was to execute a deed of conditional sale, but we are not concerned with the original intention of the parties but only with the intention of the parties at the time when the deed of sale was executed. At that time the parties had resolved to abandon their original intention and clearly determined, for reasons best known to themselves, on the execution of an out and out sale. It is no doubt true that at that time the agreement to reconvey was in contemplation, but we are unable to receive any oral evidence as to a contemporaneous oral agreement varying the terms of the sale-deed, for such evidence is barred by section 92 of the Indian Evidence Act. As a fact the sale-deed executed on the 14th of July 1911 was an out and out sale in express terms and as soon as that sale was completed, the right of pre-emption accrued. Had the litigation lain solely between the vendor and the vendee, we might have held that the two transactions taken together amounted merely to a conditional sale or, perhaps, to an English mortgage, but we find that on the 14th of July 1911 an absolute sale was accepted by the vendor and the vendee and that transaction opened the door to pre-emption. In this view we agree with the learned Additional Divisional Judge that the sale from the pre-emptor's point of view was a sale absolute and he is entitled to his decree.

We dismiss the appeal, but in the peculiar circumstances of the case we leave the parties to bear their own costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII B. C. of 1885), ss. 105, 106, 109—Application under s. 105, subsequently withdrawn, effect of—Suit under s. 106, dismissed for non-joinder of parties, whether bars civil suit—Landlord and tenant—Rent, non-payment of, whether bars landlord's right to assess rent—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 130, applicability of.

An application made under section 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act for assessment of fair rent but subsequently withdrawn should be treated as if it had never been made, so that it cannot bar a suit in the Civil Court for the same purpose under section 109 of the Bengal Tenancy Act [p. 421, col. 2; p. 422, col. 1.]

Where a suit brought under the provisions of section 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, for a declaration that an entry in the Record of Rights that no rent was paid in respect of a tenure was wrong and that in fact a certain sum was payable as rent, is dismissed for non-joinder of parties, section 109 of the Act is no bar to a subsequent suit in a Civil Court for assessment of fair rent upon the tenure. [p. 421, col. 2.]

The mere non-payment of rent, for a certain period does not bar the landlord's right to have the rent assessed and to recover it from his tenant. [p. 422, col. 1.]

Unless and until a tenure is found to be a rent-free tenure, Article 130 of the Limitation Act can have no application to a suit for assessment of its rent. [p. 422, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Officiating Subordinate Judge, 2nd Court, Barisal, dated the 16th September 1912, affirming that of the Munsif, 4th Court at Patuakhali, dated the 21st of September 1911.

FACTS.—This appeal is on behalf of the plaintiffs and it arises out of a suit for assessment of rent on a nim howla tenure. In respect of the area within which this tenure is situate, a Record of Rights was prepared and published under Chapter X of the Bengal Tenancy Act. In that Record of Rights, this tenure was entered as one for which no rent was paid but as one which was liable to assessment of rent. The plaintiffs then brought a suit under section 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act for a declaration that the entry in question was incorrect and that the annual rent payable for the tenure was Rs. 13 and odd. That suit was dismissed for defect of parties. There was also an application under section 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act which was subsequently withdrawn. Thereafter the present suit was instituted. The suit has been dismissed by both the Courts below as being barred by the provisions of section 109 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and also by Article 130 of the Limitation Act.

Babu Dwarka Nath Chakraborty (with him Babus Gunoda Charan Sen, Surendra Nath Guha and Nakuleswar Mukherjee), for the Appellants. —The suit under section 106 was dismissed on the ground that the plaintiff being a co-sharer landlord could not alone maintain such a suit, and, therefore, the Courts below have thought that the present one is barred by section 109 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The Courts below are wrong in so holding, because in that suit there was no adjudication on the merits. Section 109 is only a corollary to section 107 of the Bengal Tenancy Act; it provides that the same matter should not be dealt with by two concurrent Courts. The question here is, what is the effect of the judgment in section 106 case, which was dismissed for non-joinder of parties and which did not at all touch the question now at issue. In section 106 case the prayer was for declaration that the rent of the tenure was Rs. 13 and odd and that the entry in the Record of Rights that no rent was paid for the tenure was incorrect, and that case was dismissed because all the co-sharer landlords were not joined, whereas the present suit is for assessment of rent. The scope and subject-matter of that suit is quite different from that of the present suit.

As regards the application under section 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act it appears that that application was withdrawn; it was not an application in respect of which there was any trial, and so it cannot bar this suit, because it can be taken to be one which was never made. The Courts below have, therefore, erred in holding that the present suit is barred. Chiodith v. Tulsi Singh (1), Parbati v. Toolsi Kapri (2), Barhamdal Missir v. Krishna Sahay (3).

ents.—The suit under section 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act was no doubt dismissed for defect of parties, but in deciding that suit the learned Judge also entered into the merits of that case. Section 109 provides that a Civil Court shall not entertain any application or suit concerning any matter which has already been the subject of an application made or a suit instituted under sections 105 to 108. Here there was a suit under section 106 and that suit was dismissed, and so the present suit in the Civil Court is barred. The case comes under section 109, as there was a decision in a suit under section 106. The scope of section 109 is wider than that of section 107. Section 109, does not require that to bar a suit in the Civil Court there shall be a final decision.

As regards the application under section 105 it cannot be treated as one never made, because it was not withdrawn with the leave of the Court.

The next point is that the case for the defence is that no rent was ever realized in respect of the tenure and that this nim howla is a rent-free tenure. Both the Courts below have found that no rent was realized for this tenure at least from the year 1882. So clearly the present suit is barred by the provisions of Article 130 of the Second Schedule to the Limitation Act. The fact that for a long time past no rent was realized from this tenure, raises a presumption of the Lakheraj character of the tenure. Refers to Birendra Kishore Manikya Bahadur v. Bhairab Chandra Chakrabarti (4). In the case of Bipradas Pal v. Monorama Debi (5) the plaintiffs were recorded under the Settlement proceedings as persons in possession of a number of plots, each less than 50 bighas in area, without payment of rent but as liable to pay rent. They instituted suits under section 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and proved long possession without payment of rent. It was held that their long possession without payment of rent raised a presumption of Lakheraj right in their favour. If, therefore, the tenure can be presumed to be a rent-free tenure, then there can be no assessment of rent.

Babu Dwarka Nath Chakraburttty in reply.—As the tenure has not been found to be a rent-free tenure, Article 130 of the Limitation Act does not apply to this case.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought for assessment of rent on a certain tenure which is spoken of as a nim howla. The Court of first appeal dismissed the suit on two grounds, namely, that the suit was barred by reason of the provisions of section 109 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and, secondly, that it was barred by the rule of limitation to be found in Article 130 of the Schedule to the Indian Limitation Act.

It appears that in respect of the area within which this nim howla lies a Record of Rights was prepared under the provisions of Chapter X of the Bengal Tenancy Act and was finally published on the 18th May 1906. In that Record of Rights this tenure was entered as one in respect of which at the moment no rent was paid but as one liable to pay rent. Thereupon the plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2, who are co-sharer landlords of the howla, brought a suit under the provisions of section 106 of the Act. In that suit they prayed to have it declared that the entry in the Record of Rights was incorrect and that as a matter of fact the rent annually payable in respect of the nim howla was a sum of 13 Rupees odd. That suit was dismissed, and dismissed in effect on the ground that the other co-sharer landlords were not made parties thereto. The Subordinate Judge has held that the institution of that suit by reason of section 109 bars the entertainment of the present suit in the Civil Courts. We are unable to agree with him in this opinion, as it seems to us that the subject-matter of the suit under section 106 and the subject-matter of the present suit are entirely different. The first suit was brought in order to have it declared that the rent annually payable was a certain sum. That suit having failed, the plaintiffs bring their present suit in order that fair rent should be assessed upon the holding. That is a matter different from the subject matter of the present suit.

Reference has next been made to an application which was made under section 105 for assessment of fair rent on this nim howla. That application, it appears, was withdrawn.

(4) 27 Ind. Cas. 12; 20 C. L. J. 295.

(5) 47 Ind. Cas. 49; 22 C. W. N. 396; 45 C. 574.

BRIDGES & CO. v. SHAMAS DIN & CO.

We are of opinion that that also does not bar the present suit, as we think, agreeing with the view taken in the case reported as Chiodith v. Tulsi Singh (1), that an application made but withdrawn is to be treated as one never made.

The next question is, whether the suit is barred by limitation. In the Court of first instance that issue was raised, but at the trial it was abandoned. The mere non-payment of rent for a certain period does not bar the landlord's right to have the rent assessed and to recover rent from his tenant. We are of opinion that unless and until this tenure is found to be a rent-free tenure, Article 130 of the Limitation Act can have no application.

Having taken the view he did on these two points, the Subordinate Judge did not enter into the merits of the case. Differing from him on the issue in bar, we set aside his decree and remand the appeal to him in order that it may now be tried and disposed of on the merits. Costs of this appeal will be costs in the case.

Case remanded.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O XXX, rr. 1, 6—Suit against firm—Plaintiff, right of, to know names of persons constituting firm—"Individually," meaning of—Partner, appearance of.

Under Order XXX, rule 1 of the Civil Procedure Code, a plaintiff suing a firm is entitled to know who the persons are who constitute the firm and the information cannot be withheld. The information is necessary so that the plaintiff may know who will be personally liable in execution for the satisfaction of his decree.

The word "individually" in Order XXX, rule 3 of the Civil Procedure Code, is not synonymous with "in person". No partner can be forced under this rule to appear in person, but in his absence after service of summons, he will be dealt with ex parte. If, however, appearance is put in for him, it will be reckoned as his individual appearance.

SUKLAL BANIKYA v. BIDHU MINDHU.

Revision from the order of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Amritsar, dated the 6th October 1917.

Mr. Brandon, for the Petitioners.

Mr. Muhammad Hussain, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The Court below has evidently not understood the law nor its object.

Under Order XXX, rule 1, a plaintiff suing a firm is entitled to know who the persons are who constitute that firm and the information cannot be withheld. The information is of course necessary so that plaintiff may know who will be personally liable in execution for the satisfaction of his decree.

Order XXX, rule 6, also has been misconstrued. "Individually" is not synonymous with "in person." No partner can be forced under this rule to appear in person, but in his absence after service of summons, he will be dealt with ex parte. If, however, appearance is put in for him, it will be reckoned as his individual appearance.

I accept the petition with costs and direct that plaintiff be supplied with the information he prays for. Pleader's costs Rs. 32.

RESPONDENT.

Bengal Land Revenue Sales Act (XI of 1859), s. 33—Suit to set aside revenue sale—Ground not urged before Commissioner taken in suit—Plaintiff, whether can succeed.

In a suit to set aside a revenue sale the plaintiff cannot urge any ground which he did not take in his appeal to the Commissioner under section 2 of Bengal Act VII of 1868. [p. 42, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Dacca, dated the 15th of May 1916.

SUKLAL BANIKYA V. BIDHU MINDHU.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Basanta Kumar Bose (with him Babus Prokash Chandra Pakrasi and Nilkanta Ghosh), for the Appellant.—I submit there was no irregularity; non-mention of certain Mouzas in the notice cannot vitiate the sale. Again this ground was not specifically taken before the Commissioner nor in the plaint. A general ground won't do. Section 33 of Act XI of 1859 says that the ground must be specifically taken before the Commissioner.

Again I invite your Lordships' attention to Ramgopal v. Shamskhaton (1), which says that "specified" means "specifically taken in the memorandum of appeal."

[N. R. CHATTERJEA, J.—I suppose there are other rulings to this effect.]

Yes, my Lord, there is one in Sheikh Mohammed Aga v. Jadunandan Jha (2), per Mookerjee and Newbould, JJ. There is another case in Radha Charan Das v. Sharfuddin Hossein (3). There is also another case in Gobind Lal Roy v. Ranjanam Misser (4) and another in Lala Gauri Sanker Lal v. Janki Pershad (5), and all these cases support my contention that the ground must be specifically mentioned.

Babu Akhoy Kumar Banerjee, for the Respondent.—Although the ground was not specifically taken it was taken in general words in grounds Nos. 2 and 7. However, I leave the matter in your Lordships' hands.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit to set aside a sale held under the Revenue Sale Law (XI of 1859).

The sale was in respect of a residuary share only. Various irregularities were alleged in the plaint, but the learned Subordinate Judge held that the omissions to mention some of the kismats in the notice under section 6 was an irregularity, and further that the understatement of the Government revenue in the sale proclamation was also an irregularity. He was of opinion that the first named irregularity, namely, the omission to mention some of the kismats in the notice under section 6 resulted in substantial injury to the plaintiff and accordingly set aside the sale.

(5) 17 C. 809; 17 I. A. 57; 5 Sar. P. C. J. 518; 8 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 1083 (P. C.).

The defendant purchaser has preferred this appeal.

It is contended on his behalf that the ground upon which the sale has been set aside was not specified in the ground of appeal to the Commissioner, nor was it mentioned in the plaint in the present suit, and that being so, the sale cannot be set aside.

Having regard to section 33 of the Act we think that this contention must prevail.

The omission to mention some of the kismats in the notice under section 6 was not at all specified in the ground of appeal to the Commissioner. That being so, it is not open to the plaintiff to set aside a revenue sale upon any grounds other than those urged before the Commissioner [see Gobind Lal Roy v. Ranjanam Misser (4) and Sheikh Mohammed Aga v. Jadunandan Jha (2)].

The objection based on the understatement of Government revenue appears to have been taken before the Commissioner; but the learned Subordinate Judge has not found that that has affected the sale or resulted in substantial injury.

It may be mentioned that neither of the two grounds on which the sale has been set aside, was taken in the plaint in the present suit.

Under the circumstances, the sale cannot be set aside and the decree of the lower Court must accordingly be reversed, the result being that the sale will stand and the suit dismissed with costs of this litigation, which we assess at Rs. 350 in all for both Courts.

This, no doubt, is a hard case for the respondent. The appellant, however, agrees to grant a permanent lease to the respondent of 3 kanis of khamar land and the actual homestead land, which before the sale belonged to the plaintiff, at an annual mokurari rent of Rs. 15 (rupees fifteen) in consideration of the respondent paying to the appellant the costs mentioned above, namely, Rs. 350, within three months from this date. If the respondent fails to pay the said amount within the time specified above, this appeal will stand decreed with costs, in all Rs. 350 for both Courts.

If the amount is paid, the appellant agrees to execute a permanent lease and the respondent agrees to execute a kabuliya with respect to the khamar and the homestead land within three months of the said payment. It is agreed that the lease is to commence from the 1st Baisak 1325 B. S.

Decree reversed.

APPEAL FROM THE OUDH JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT.

May 2, 1918.

Present:—Viscount Haldane, Lord Dunedin, Lord Sumner, Sir John Edge and Mr. Ameer Ali.

LAL SRIPAT SINGH—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

versus

LAL BASANT SINGH—PLAINTIFF—
RESPONDENT.

Oudh Rent Act (XIX of 1868), ss. 3, 52, 102—Oudh land laws—Tenures recognised in Oudh—Proprietor, under-proprietor and tenant—Incidents of tenure attached by law, whether can be varied by consent of tenure-holder.

The Oudh Rent Act, 1868, recognises three classes of persons, and three only, as having an interest in and entitled to hold land for the purposes of the Act in the province of Oudh, viz., "proprietor", "under-proprietor" and "tenant". [p. 427, col. 2.]

The law attaches to the status of under-proprietor certain rights, among them the right to transfer; and while he retains that status he cannot be divested of any of those rights. [p. 428, cols. 1 & 2.]

Where, therefore, at the time of settlement a landowner applied to be recorded as an under-proprietor, and under pressure from the Settlement Officer consented to be recorded as an under-proprietor without right of transfer:

Held, that this was creating a tenure unknown to the law and that no effect could be given to the words "without right of transfer" in the Settlement Officer's decree. [p. 428, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decree of the Judicial Commissioners (Stuart, A. J. C., and Kanhaiya Lal, A. J. C.), Oudh, dated the 29th April 1914, reported as 25 Ind. Cas. 743, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge, Partabgarh, FACTS of the case are sufficiently stated in their Lordships' judgment.

The plaintiff sued to recover possession; he had been ejected by the Rent Court, which had jurisdiction to eject him if he were a "tenant", but not if he were an "under-proprietor" within the meaning of Act XIX of 1868. The suit was decreed by the Subordinate Judge, who held that plaintiff was an under-proprietor within the meaning of the Act, and this decision was affirmed by the Judicial Commissioner's Court. Hence this appeal.

Mr. De Gruyther, K. C. (with him Mr. Dube), for the Appellant:—All rights in Oudh having been confiscated after the Mutiny, every person there has to show a re-grant from Government. Here the second Summary Settlement was made with Sheoamber and conferred an absolute interest on him. The respondent's only claim is under the compromise, which was long prior to Act XIX of 1868. The Settlement Officer could only give effect to that compromise. The words kabiz darmiani, translated as under-proprietary right, do not of necessity mean a heritable and transferable interest. The Settlement officer's order shows that those words are not conclusive. We say the interest he got was heritable, but not transferable.

[VISCOUNT HALDANE.—Suppose a Judge has declared him to be an under-proprietor without power of transfer, what is the legal effect of such declaration?]

[LORD SUMNER.—The Act of 1866, which was in force at the time of the compromise, only gave statutory force to administrative orders which were in effect before—since 1856.]

That date is wrong: see Sykes' Taluqdari Law, page 144 at top.

[LORD SUMNER.—But from 1866 at all events 'under-proprietor' had a definite sense.]

The Settlement Officer could not have understood that kabiz darmiani meant under-proprietor in that sense, or he would never have directed an enquiry.

[LORD SUMNER.—The Settlement Officer had no authority to adjudicate: he might refuse to record the agreement, but he could not pass a separate decree.]

[LORD DUNEDIN.—It may be kabiz-darmiani was ambiguous and the intention of the parties could not be gathered from the document alone.]

LAL SRIPAT SINGH v. LAL PASANT SINGH.

[LORD SUMNER.—That would mean they had not come to terms. Unless they were ad idem the decree had no binding effect.]

The Settlement Officer was not bound by any Civil Procedure Code: he had instructions from Government to compromise disputes as much as possible. They came to him with a vague agreement and he got them to come to a more definite one. The plaintiff's only right is under the Settlement Officer's decree, and that does not make him an under-proprietor within the meaning of the Act.

Mr. H. N. Sen, for the Respondent, was not called upon.

JUDGMENT.

MR. AMEER ALI.—The sole question for determination in this appeal relates to the status of the plaintiff-respondent under the Oudh Land Laws, viz., whether he is an "under-proprietor" or, as the defendant alleges, a mere lessee. The suit was brought in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Partabgarh to recover possession from the defendant, the talukdar of Rajapur, of the village of Daulatpur, lying within the taluka, on the ground that it was owned by the plaintiff as "under-proprietor," and that he had been wrongfully dispossessed therefrom by the defendant in execution of a rent-decree. The defendant denied the plaintiff's title as "under-proprietor," and alleged that he was only a lessee, and was, therefore, liable under the Rent Law to ejectment for default in the payment of his rent. The Subordinate Judge held in favour of the plaintiff, and decreed his claim for possession and for mesne profits during the period he has been kept out of possession. And this decree has been affirmed by the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh. The defendant now appeals to His Majesty in Council.

A short statement of the facts will explain the relative position of the parties, as also the nature of their respective contentions. The plaintiff and defendant are closely related, being cousins in the first degree. The taluka of Rajapur, now held by the defendant, was settled with his father, Sheoamber Singh, in 1859. In 1861, in the course of the Regular Settlement, the plaintiff applied for a settlement of a half share with him on the ground that he was jointly entitled to the estate with Sheoamber. On this petition he was directed to "bring a claim at the time of settlement." Six years later, whilst the Regular Settlement was still proceeding, he applied again to the Settlement Authorities to have his name recorded as a co-owner in respect of a moiety of the taluka.

In this petition the grounds of his claim were more specifically stated: that his father, Lal Din Singh, and Sheoamber were full brothers and members of a joint family, and that the taluka had been acquired in the name of Sheoamber for the benefit of both brothers. This petition was entered as a suit before the Extra Assistant Commissioner of Partabgarh. Sheoamber contested the claim of the plaintiff to a half share of the property, but admitted his right to maintenance as a junior member of the family. Before trial, however, the parties compromised the dispute. The terms of the settlement arrived at are embodied in a joint petition filed in Court on the 29th October 1867. By this compromise, in consideration of the plaintiff withdrawing his suits and abandoning his claim to a share of the taluka, Sheoamber gave to him the village of Daulatpur, at a rent of Rs. 461-4-0, being the Government revenue payable thereon, together with certain lands situated in other villages at fixed rentals. As regards the village of Daulatpur the plaintiff was to pay, besides the "rent," the wages of the patwari and chowkidar and the village expenses. And then followed the conditions of the grant, "that the plaintiff will pay to the talukdar, the defendant, the above-mentioned jama every year; that the plaintiff and his heirs will appropriate the profits of the above-mentioned village and lands, and that the defendant will have no right to resume them or to enhance the rent."

The prayer of the petition is important. It runs thus:—

"The plaintiff, therefore, prays that all the suits filed by the plaintiff, with the exception of these in respect of the village Daulatpur, 34 bighas land of village Jogapur, and 26 bighas (sic) land of village Rajapur, be dismissed, and that a decree for the under-proprietary right of the entire village Daulatpur, 34 bighas land of village Jogapur and 26 bighas (sic) land of village Rajapur be passed in favour of the plaintiff."

There is no dispute that the words qabiz-darmiari in the original of this petition are correctly rendered as meaning an "under-proprietary right."

On the 1st November 1867, the Extra Assistant Commissioner made an order that the "under-proprietary rights" in respect of the lands within his jurisdiction should be decreed to the plaintiff in terms of the compromise; and that as regards Daulatpur, which apparently lay outside his jurisdiction, the petition should be referred for final orders to the Settlement Officer.

The matter relating to Daulatpur then came before the Settlement Officer (Mr. Forbes) on the 8th June 1869, and he recorded the following order on the petition of compromise:—

"Plaintiff has filed a deed of compromise setting forth that defendant has agreed to grant plaintiff an under-proprietary right in Mouza Daulatpur, subject to an annual payment of Rs. 461-4-0, and certain sir in two other villages (which has been judicially recorded by the S.M.). Plaintiff to bear patwari's and choukidar's dues. Defendant never to have the power, he or his posterity, of ever increasing the demand now fixed. This is verified by the parties in my presence. As, however, there is no grant or reservation of the right of transfer, the Court sends for defendant, his agent being too ignorant and useless, and will have the matter formally cleared up before passing any orders."

On the 14th June the case was again placed before the Settlement Officer, when the final order which has given rise to the present contest was made. It is in these terms:—

"Decree—an under-proprietary right in Mouza Daulatpur in favour of plaintiff without right of transfer, subject to an annual payment of Rs. 461-4-0 and subject also to the other conditions contained in the deed of compromise."

On the 21st October 1872, a further agreement was entered into between Sheoamber and the plaintiff describing themselves, respectively, as "the proprietor and under-proprietor" of the village of Daulatpur. The terms of this document have an important bearing on the contentions of the defendant and his attempt to reduce the plaintiff's status to that of a lessee. The first clause recites that—"The Government has assessed the jama of this village at Rs. 450. The income from mines is separate from this. If any mine be discovered in our village, then we, the superior and-under-proprietor, will be liable to pay to the Government a share out of the income (of those mines)."

In the third clause Sheoamber Singh declares that he is the talukdar and "lambardar of Rajapur," that after his death the taluka would devolve in the male line to a single heir by rule of primogeniture. The description "lambardar" is significant; it shows that the Government revenue in respect of Daulatpur is paid through him.

The fifth clause among other matters records the under-proprietor's undertaking to pay "the salaries of the patwaris and choukidars along with the last instalment." And further that, "the leases and receipts will be given to the tenants after getting them recorded by the patwari;" and the under-proprietor undertakes to "get the payments made by each tenant recorded in the patwari's siah": "In case of any fault being committed by a patwari or a choukidar, the under-proprietor was at liberty to make an application to the Government for his dismissal, and in case of his dismissal to get other nominee of his appointed in the place of the dismissed patwari or choukidar with the sanction of the Government."

It is clear from this document that the acknowledged status of the plaintiff was quite different from what is now attempted to be fixed upon him.

Since 1869 the plaintiff's name stands recorded in the village register as "under-proprietor", and a sub-settlement appears to have been made with him. In August 1899 the defendant himself brought a suit against the plaintiff for arrears of rent in which he described their relative positions as that of "superior proprietor and under-proprietor" respectively, of the village of Daulatpur. From 1872 to 1909 there does not appear to have been any contest regarding the status of the plaintiff. In 1902 he mortgaged the village to one Safdar Hossain and let him into possession. This man defaulted in the payment of the rent and the defendant thereupon brought a suit against the plaintiff under section 52 of the Oudh Rent Act (XXII of 1886) and obtained a decree. In execution of this decree the defendant ejected the plaintiff and took possession of the village. The plaintiff then brought a suit under clause 10, section 108 of the Rent Act, for recovery of possession and obtained a decree in his favour in the Court of the Deputy Collector, which, however, was set aside on appeal by the Commissioner, whose order of dismissal of the plaintiff's action was affirmed by the Board of Revenue, on the ground that so far as the Revenue Courts were concerned the matter was res judicata in consequence of the decision in the defendant's suit under section 52 and that the plaintiff's remedy lay in the Civil Courts. This view of the Board as to res judicata has necessitated further litigation extending over six years.

The Board's order was made on the 30th November 1911, and the present suit was brought on the 2nd August 1912.

Their Lordships cannot help observing that, so far as appears from the record, the defendant for the first time in 1909, in the proceedings in the Revenue Courts, put forward the contention that the plaintiff was not an "under-proprietor" but only a "lessee." In his written statement in the present action he did not commit himself specifically to that contention. In paragraph 3 he simply states:—

"It is admitted that a compromise was entered into, but the power of transfer was never allowed. The word qabiz-darmiani during those days did not particularly mean what it now means in legal phraseology."

He does not say, however, what it actually meant. This was left to his Pleader to develop in the statement recorded by the Court under the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code. It was then that he expressly took up the position that the plaintiff was a mere "lessee" and, therefore, liable to ejectment. And he based his contention on the words, "without right of transfer," introduced as would appear ex abundanti cautela by the Settlement Officer (Mr. Forbes) in his order of the 14th June 1869 on the petition of compromise jointly executed by Sheoamber and the plaintiff.

The position of a qabiz-darmiani or "under-proprietor" was fully understood in Oudh before the passing of Act XIX of 1868, which definitely crystallized and gave statutory recognition to his rights and status. It had come into being from the circumstances of the times; the exactions of the revenue collectors under the old regime had forced many small proprietors to protect themselves against oppression by engaging with some more powerful neighbour to pay the Government revenue through him, but retaining their right in the property. In 1866 the Indian Legislature recognised their right to obtain a sub-settlement of their property, and the Act of 1868 clearly defined their position.

It recognises three classes of persons, and three only, as having an interest in and entitled to hold land for the purposes of the Act in the province of Oudh, viz., "proprietor," "under-proprietor," and "tenant". It defines a "proprietor" thus: "Proprietor" does not include an under-proprietor. Where there are two private rights of property, one superior and the other subordinate, in the same land, "proprietor" means the holder of the superior right only. (The importance of the words "rights of property" cannot be overlooked in connection with the present dispute.)

An "under-proprietor" is defined in the following words: "'Under-proprietor' means any person possessing a heritable and transferable right of property in land, for which he is liable to pay rent."

And a "tenant" is defined to mean any person, not being an under-proprietor, who is liable to pay rent.

That the Act does not recognise any other status except the three it defines is clear from section 102, which gives the right to sue under its special provisions for the recovery of land from which the "applicant" has been illegally dispossessed to "landlord, under-proprietor, and tenant." "Tenants" are divided into two classes, viz., those with the right of occupancy and those without such right. Tenants with a right of occupancy have a "heritable," but not a "transferable," right, and all tenants are entitled to a lease and are liable to be ejected for default in the payment of rent, which they may resist on different grounds.

It is thus absolutely clear that the Act draws a sharp distinction between an

MAHAMMAD SHAFIKUL HUQ v. KRISHNA GOBINDA DUTTA.

"under-proprietor" and a "tenant." And this was the law when Mr. Forbes made his "decree" on the 14th June 1859. The parties had come to a compromise and embodied the terms in a document which both had signed. Sheoamber had given to the plaintiff, in consideration of his withdrawing his suits, then pending, for a half-share of the taluka, the "under-proprietary right" in the village in question on a rent which was the exact amount of the revenue payable thereon to Government, and had expressly abandoned any right "to take back or resume the property" so given. Nothing could be clearer than the intention of the parties expressed in this document, that Sheoamber intended to give and the plaintiff intended to take the properties as "under-proprietor." When the matter went before the Settlement Officer, he, in an excess of caution, wanted to ascertain from Sheoamber whether the talukadar wished to convey to the plaintiff "the right to transfer." Sheoamber was sent for, but failed to attend; and the plaintiff, to avoid further harassment, appears to have agreed to the passing of a decree without "right of transfer." The Settlement Officer's order involves a contradiction in terms. He "decrees" to the plaintiff the status of an "under-proprietor," and then adds the words "without right of transfer," which totally nullifies the previous declaration. He must have been aware of the law, and must have used the word "under-proprietor" in its statutory and, what is more, its ordinary sense, the sense in which the parties had, their Lordships have no doubt, used it in their deed of compromise. As the Commissioner in the suit under section 52 observed, Mr. Forbes' decree "created a tenure which is quite outside the Rent Act as it now stands." More correctly, it created a tenure unknown to the law as it then stood.

A good deal of stress has been laid on the fact that the plaintiff agreed to a decree with those words added, showing that he himself gave up before the Settlement Officer his right to transfer. The plaintiff was declared to be an "under-proprietor" in accordance with the terms of the compromise; the law attaches certain rights to that status, so long as he retains that status he remains clothed with those rights and he cannot be divested of those rights unless and until he loses that status. Their Lordships are of opinion that the words "without right of transfer" in Mr. Forbes' decree do not affect the rights of the plaintiff as under-proprietor; and that the decrees of the Courts in India are perfectly right. Their Lordships will accordingly humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 54, whether exhaustive—Ejectment—Equities in favour of person in possession—Agreement, unregistered, for conveyance, whether can be pleaded by defendant in answer to ejectment suit.

Under the influence of the defendant brought to bear upon the execution-purchasers of his lands, the plaintiff got from them a transfer of those lands for a consideration subject to an oral agreement to reconvey a part thereof to the defendant. While the defendant was in possession of that part the plaintiff brought a suit to eject him therefrom:

Held, that as the defendant's possession was itself a title which the plaintiff must displace before he could eject the defendant, the plaintiff's suit could not succeed even though it was too late for the defendant to sue for specific performance of the oral agreement. [p. 432, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

TEUNON, J.—In execution of a mortgage decree three taluks belonging to the defendant-respondent in this appeal were brought to sale. The sale took place on the 4th May 1901, and was confirmed on the 1st of March 1902.

On the 8th of March the auction-purchaser transferred the properties by a conveyance executed ostensibly in favour of the present plaintiff-appellant.

His case is that the purchase was one made by him on his own account, while the defendant-respondent alleges that the purchase was for his benefit and that the plaintiff was his benamidar.

The question thus arising is the only question of fact we have to determine in this appeal.

It is not disputed that the purchase-money was in fact provided by the plaintiff but this, the defendant says, was in pursuance of negotiations initiated before the execution sale and was in part payment to the defendant of a sum of Rs. 6,000 for which the defendant had agreed to sell to the plaintiff two smaller Bhils (Rongia Bhil and Rongia Howar) and an 8-anna share in a larger Bhil, the Souleswar Bhil. These Bhils, are part of the properties included in the mortgage and sold under the mortgage-decree first referred to. The remaining 8-anna share in the Souleswar Bhil had been previously sold by the defendant to one Abdul Hamid and others, this sale taking place after the mortgage but before the institution of the suit thereon. The Bhils, it may be observed, are excluded from the plaintiff's claim.

That there was what may be called a secret arrangement between the parties is admitted by the plaintiff, who says however that the arrangement was not with regard to the 3 Bhils but with regard to the defendant's homestead, 5 nals of land adjoining the homestead and also a parcel of land outside the 3 mortgaged taluks known as Kobadigha Kotta.

The learned Subordinate Judge has accepted the case made for the defendant, and having been taken over the whole of the evidence I agree in his conclusions.

The auction-purchasers who executed the conveyance now in question were 4 in number, of whom two are dead. Of these two the son of one and the two brothers of the 2nd, and of the two survivors (both Mohammadans) one Mohammad Jaifar have been examined by the defendant. They are disinterested witnesses and I cannot but attach importance to their evidence. That evidence is in itself reasonable and clearly explains how it was that for a small profit of Rs. 400 plus small portions of the lands in suit (including a 2-anna share in each of 3 Bhils), they consented to give up to the defendant the valuable properties they had purchased and the defendant thereupon discontinued his application for setting aside the sale. The defendant's evidence is further corroborated by that of Abdul Hamid, one of the purchasers of the second half of the Souleswari Bhil. As the result of the negotiations with the defendant, out of the 8 annas they gave up $3\frac{1}{2}$ annas. The defendant's case is further supported by the value of the 3 Bhils, and by the possession given by the defendant to the plaintiff immediately after the date of the conveyance of the remaining $9\frac{1}{2}$ -annas share of Souleswari Bhil. The original arrangement with the plaintiff no doubt was that he was to take 8 annas in Souleswari and the extra $1\frac{1}{2}$ annas represents the 2 annas in the Rongia Bhil surrendered to the auction-purchaser.

The case for the plaintiff is supported only by the evidence of interested witnesses. For the reasons I have given I agree with the Subordinate Judge in holding that under the conveyance in question the real purchaser was the defendant and that plaintiff was merely his benamdar.

In this view of the case it is not very necessary to discuss the contention advanced by the learned Pleader for the appellant, namely, that title being in the plaintiff by virtue of the conveyance, the defendant cannot resist his claim for possession on the basis of a mere agreement to reconvey. In support of this view he has placed before us section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act and the cases of Immudipattam Thirugnana Kondama Naik v. Periya Dorasami (1), Timangowda v. Benepgowda (2), Kurri Veerareddi v. Kurri

Bapireddi (3) and Maung Shwe Goh v. Maung Inn (4). Even if I were to accept the appellant's contention that title is in him, having regard more particularly to the immediate delivery of possession of Souleswari Bhil by the defendant, I should be inclined to hold that the present case falls within the principle enunciated in Puchha Lal v. Kunj Behary Lal (5).

In the result in which my learned brother agrees, we dismiss this appeal with costs.

RICHARDSON, J.—The appellant is the plaintiff in a suit for the declaration of his title to certain land, for possession and for mesne profits. The dispute relates to three taluks known by their numbers as No. 60, No. 32 and No. 21. These taluks originally belonged to the principal defendant, the defendant No. 1, Krishna Gobinda Dut. He mortgaged them to the Sylhet Loan Co., and then sold a portion to the defendants Nos. 3 to 10, or partly to some of those defendants and partly to the predecessors of others. The mortgagee obtained a decree on the mortgage and in execution, on the 4th May 1901, taluk No. 60 was bought by defendants Nos. 14 and 15, taluk No. 32 by defendant No. 13 and taluk No. 21 by the father of defendants Nos. 11 and 12, the total price paid being Rs. 3,065. On the 8th March 1902, in pursuance of an agreement arrived at on 18th February 1902, when the plaintiff paid Rs. 400 as earnest money, the purchasers sold to the plaintiff for Rs. 4,000 all the lands so bought with certain exceptions. Formal possession was delivered to the plaintiff by the Court on the 26th April 1903 and confirmed on the 16th May 1903.

The plaintiff founds on the title created in his favour by the conveyance of 8th March 1902, but the suit does not extend to all the lands covered by that document. The three taluks comprise lands both on the north and on the south of the Kushi River. The lands on the south are known as Souleswari Bhil, Rangia Howar and Rangia Bhil. The case for the defendant No. 1 is that the plaintiff's purchase was made on his behalf under an oral agreement whereby the lands on the north of the river were to be his property and the plaintiff was to have the greater part of the lands on the south of the river at a valuation of Rs. 6,000, so that defendant No. 1 would receive from the plaintiff a sum of Rs. 1,600 in addition to the Rs. 4,000 which he had paid to the auction-purchasers and in addition to two sums aggregating Rs. 400 advanced by him during the course of the litigation.

As to the lands on the south of the river it is not disputed that the plaintiff is in actual possession of a $9\frac{1}{2}$ -annas share of Souleswari Bhil. There were certain subsidiary agreements between the plaintiff and the other parties interested, namely, the prior purchasers from the defendant No. 1 and the auction-purchasers. In the case of the Souleswari Bhil a $4\frac{1}{2}$ -annas share was taken by some of the prior purchasers, Hamid Ali and others, in lieu of the Sannas (subject to the mortgage) which they had bought from the defendant No. 1. A further one-anna share was retained by certain of the auction-purchasers. I need not further refer to this and the other subsidiary agreements, except to say that it is in controversy whether the plaintiff or the defendant No. 1 was instrumental in bringing them about. On the evidence I agree with the Subordinate Judge that the agreement was procured by the exertions of the defendant No. 1.

As to the remainder of the lands as well on the south as on the north of the river, the further case made for the defendant No. 1 is that he has never been deprived of actual possession, though the lands were nominally sold to the plaintiff and possession was formally given to him. Both the plaintiff and the defendant No. 1 claim actual possession of Rangia Howar and Bhil (so far as they were nominally sold to the plaintiff). As the suit does not embrace these lands, the issue is not one on which a final opinion need be expressed.

The suit is confined to the lands on the north of the river, as to which the plaintiff asserts that he lost possession by reason of an order made by the Magistrate under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code on the 15th March 1912. On the evidence I accept the finding of the Court below that the defendant No. 1 was in possession throughout.

This statement of the facts leads to the crucial issues in the case, whether there was such an agreement between the plaintiff and the defendant No. 1 as the latter alleges, and if so, what was its legal effect. There is no doubt that these persons were at the time excellent friends and that the plaintiff intervened in the affairs of the defendant No. 1 at his request and in order to assist him. The evidence is that there were two agreements, one prior to the sales in execution and the other subsequent to those sales, in view of the altered position which then arose. It is common ground that the conveyance in the plaintiff's favour was preceded by some agreement between him and the defendant No. 1, but the parties differ as to its terms. The question is not entirely free from difficulty, but I agree with the learned Subordinate Judge and my learned brother that the evidence establishes the case made for the defendant No. 1. As in the case of the subsidiary agreements, it was he who induced the auction-purchasers to part with their rights for the small sum of Rs. 4,000 and as part of the whole arrangement he withdrew from the proceedings which he had instituted to have the auction-sales set aside.

It having been found that the agreement set up by the defendant No. 1 is established, the next question is whether it is in law a good defence to this action.

It is urged for the plaintiff that he has the legal title and that the legal title cannot be defeated unless the defendant No. 1 is in a position to prove a countervailing title under an instrument formally executed and registered, in compliance with the requirements of section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act. The learned Pleader referred among other authorities to the decision of a Full Bench of the Madras High Court in Kurri Veerareddi v. Kurri Bapireddi (3) followed in Chidambara Chettiar v. Vaidilinga Padayachi (6) and in (6) 30 Ind. Cas. 408; 38 M. 519.

Ramanathan v. Ranganathan (7) and to the observations of the Privy Council in Maung Shwe Goh v. Maung Inn (4). No reference was made by him to the decisions of this Court based on Walsh v. Lonsdale (8) such as Puccha Lal v. Kunj Behary Lal (5) and Khagendra v. Sonatan (9), but it was contended that if there was ever an agreement capable of being specifically enforced, the appropriate remedy had not been sought within the time prescribed by the law of limitation and the defendant No. 1 was now too late to avail himself of any such rights.

Before dealing with these agreements, let me turn for a moment to the nature of the transaction. It was suggested for the defendant No. 1 in the first place that the plaintiff was a mere benamidar and that the position was as if the defendant No. 1 had borrowed the Rs. 4,000 and then made the purchase in the plaintiff's name. That, however, was not the form which the transaction took and it appears to me that the plaintiff was something more than a mere "name-lender." He paid the money out of his own pocket and he took in effect a substantial interest in at least a part of the property purchased. It seems nevertheless to come to this that as regards the land on the north of the river the plaintiff is a bare trustee. The plaintiff became the purchaser subject to the trust and confidence reposed in him by the defendant No. 1. In other words, he purchased the whole on behalf of the defendant No. 1 subject to the agreement between them. It is true that in the result the defendant No. 1 secures a part of the land without paying anything for it, but that was in accordance with the intention of all parties including the auction purchasers and it cannot be said that there was no consideration moving from the defendant No. 1 to the plaintiff. The consideration consisted of the influence which the defendant No. 1 brought to bear on the prior purchasers and the auction-purchasers in regard both to the principal agreement and the subsidiary agreements, of his withdrawal from the proceedings taken to annul the execution sales and of his promise that the plaintiff should retain a part of the land at a valuation. On the merits, the plaintiff's present claim is open to be stigmatized as fraudulent. He is seeking for an advantage which no one ever intended that he should obtain.

It is clear that the agreement has been in part performed. It was under the agreement that the conveyance was taken in the plaintiff's name, and this must be coupled with the fact that the plaintiff was allowed to remain in actual possession of the lands on the north of the river.

Again, there seems no reason why the agreement should not have been specifically enforced if the defendant No. 1 had instituted proceedings for the purpose within the time prescribed.

What then is the legal effect? As to section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act, the question is not as simple as might at first sight appear. Recent cases suggest that the Act does not contain the whole law on the subject of the transfer of property, because there are other Acts which contain provisions relating to the same subject: Bapu v. Kashinath (10) and Loke Yew v. Port Swettenham Rubber Co. (11). The Transfer of Property Act must be read for instance with the Specific Relief Act, by section 3 of which (subject no doubt to section 4) "trust" is defined as including "every species of express, implied or constructive fiduciary ownership," and "trustee" as including "every person holding, expressly, by implication or constructively, a fiduciary character." Illustrations (g) and (h) apply, in no narrow spirit, the principle underlying these definitions to concrete cases. Moreover by section 4 of the Transfer of Property Act, paragraphs 2 and 3 of section 54 are to be read as "supplemental to the Indian Registration Act, 1877." There may be a doubt as to the precise effect of those words but it is perhaps permissible to advert to section 48 of the Registration Act, which lays down that "all non-testamentary documents duly registered under this Act and relating to any property shall take effect against an oral agreement or declaration relating to such property, unless where the agreement or declaration has been accompanied or followed by delivery of possession." Apart, however, from that provision, which might raise a difficulty as to "delivery" of possession, section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act is not of itself sufficient to carry the plaintiff home.

As to the argument that the defendant No. 1 cannot rely on the agreement because it is too late for him to sue for specific performance, it may be that he cannot now actively enforce his rights under the agreement by legal proceedings, but the answer to the argument seems to be that possession is itself a title (at any rate to remain in possession) which a plaintiff must displace before he can succeed. Here the plaintiff fails because equities founded on the agreement block his way. The possession which the defendant No. 1 was allowed to retain lulled him into security or partial security and there is no reason for denying him any advantage which that possession gives him. The observation of Lord Moulton in Loke Yew's case (11) is apposite: "The present action from this point of view is an action by a bare trustee of land to eject the beneficial owner who is and has for years been in possession of the land and is cultivating it."

The defendant No. 1 states that he is still willing to perform his part of the agreement as regards the land on the south of the river.

I concur in thinking that the appeal should be dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

EMPEROR v. NUR MUHAMMAD.

PUNJAB CHIEF COURT.

CRIMINAL REVISION No. 1698 OF 1917.

February 2, 1918.

Present :—Mr. Justice LeRossignol.

EMPEROR—PROSECUTOR

versus

NUR MUHAMMAD—ACCUSED.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 304—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 399, applicability of, to Punjab—Reformatory Schools Act (VIII of 1897)—Offender under s. 304, Penal Code, whether can be dealt with under that Act.

Section 399 of the Criminal Procedure Code has no application in the Punjab where the Reformatory Schools Act of 1897 is in force.

As laid down in Punjab Government Notification No. 37 of 20th January 1906, a convict under section 304 of the Penal Code is not liable to be dealt with under the Reformatory Schools Act.

Case reported by the District Magistrate, Attock, with his No. 29 of 18th November 1917.

"The accused is aged 12. He had been playing with several other boys, at a game of kowdi, in the course of which he quarrelled with Karm Ilahi, a boy aged 17 or 18, and his brother. The accused's statement practically amounts to a confession, and he says the same as the P. Ws. Nos. 1 to 3, who are also boys who were present at the game. That is to say, accused was pushed against deceased, and so the latter and his brother and accused abused each other. Then accused took up a stick and hit deceased hard on the head. The blow must have been one of considerable violence (see the Civil Surgeon's statement P 10) and the boy died as a result of it.

The accused lost his temper, and was doubtless to some extent provoked, and though he did not intend to kill deceased, must have known the possibility of such a result. He is only 12. I, therefore, find him guilty under Indian Penal Code, section 304 (second paragraph), but think a light sentence will meet the case. I sentence him under Indian Penal Code, section 304, and Criminal Procedure Code, section 399, to one year's confinement in a Reformatory School."

The District Magistrate, Attock, forwarded the proceedings for revision on the following grounds :—

"(a) The Magistrate was not empowered to act under section 399, Criminal Procedure Code, as the Reformatory Schools Act, 1897, is in force in the Punjab.

GAJJU v. EMPEROR.

(b) Under the Reformatory Schools Act the sentence should have been one of detention for at least three years.

(c) A sentence of three years' detention is unsuitable in a case where a juvenile has committed an offence in a fit of anger. On proper amends being made by the juvenile's relations there would be no need to incarcerate the juvenile at all.

In the circumstances the case is submitted to the Chief Court with the request that the proceedings be quashed and the case sent back for retrial."

JUDGMENT.—The Magistrate's order, which purports to issue under section 399 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, is illegal inasmuch as that section has no application in the Punjab where the Reformatory Schools Act of 1897 is in force.

The conviction of the respondent has been had under section 304, Indian Penal Code, and as laid down in Punjab Government Notification No. 37 of 20th January 1906, a convict under that section is not liable to be dealt with under the Reformatory Schools Act.

The convict is at present confined in the Borstal Jail, Lahore, where he is in the company only of juvenile non-habitual offenders, so that his sentence will be undergone in surroundings least calculated to degrade him.

The learned District Magistrate suggests a re-trial, but there is nothing illegal in the trial and consequently no ground for quashing it. It is only the sentence that is defective and I alter it to one year's rigorous imprisonment in the Borstal Jail.

Sentence altered.

Public Gambling Act (III of 1867), s. 13—Public place, what is—Betting and gaming, distinction between—Betting, whether offence—Betting book, whether instrument of gaming.

GAJJU v. EMPEROR

The words "public place" in section 13 of the Public Gambling Act, 1867, signify a place to which the public resort as a matter of fact, whether of right or with the permission of a private owner. [p. 436, col. 2.]

In order to obtain a conviction under section 13 of the Public Gambling Act, it must be proved that the accused were found playing for money or other valuable thing with some instrument of gaming (ejusdem generis) with cards, dice or counters used in playing any game not being a game of mere skill. [p. 438, col. 2; p. 439, col. 1.]

Recording bets or laying bets about an uncertain event which the recorders and betters cannot prevent or bring about is not playing a game within the meaning of section 13 of the Public Gambling Act. [p. 439, col. 1.]

A book in which bets are recorded is not an "instrument of gaming" within the meaning of section 13 of the Public Gambling Act. [p. 439, col. 1.]

Mere betting is no offence in the Central Provinces or Berar. [p. 439, col. 2.]

Appeal against the order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Khamgaon, dated the 19th June 1917.

Mr. M. Chuckerbutty, for the Applicant.

The Hon'ble Mr. G. P. Dick, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The following twelve persons were convicted by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Khamgaon, in West Berar, under section 13 of the Public Gambling Act, III of 1867, as applied to Berar, and sentenced to the fines which I place against their names:—

	Rs.
1. Gajju, son of Sheonarayan ...	50
2. Jairamappa, son of Bapuappa	25
3. Rameshwar, son of Sanairam	25
4. Ramu, son of Hukamchand	25

10. Shujatkhan, son of Dilserkhan	15
11. Bhagwandas, son of Bakshram	40
12. Rangu Sheonarayan	15

Seven of the above persons have applied for revision by this Court, namely:—

5. Ramu	...	87-B	"
6. Vithoba	...	88-B	"
7. Shujatkhan...	"	89-B	"

These applications were heard simultaneously and this order will govern the disposal of them all.

The main facts are not disputed. The accused and other persons were assembled under a tree standing on some partially enclosed private land to which the public have access and holding what we should call a lottery or sweepstakes in connection with sales of opium in Calcutta. The transaction calls for a more detailed description than has been given by the learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate. Sales of opium by Government take place in Calcutta on one day in every month. The dates fixed for sale are previously advertised, with the number of chests of the commodity to be disposed of at each sale. Memoranda embodying this information are prepared by different firms and persons and circulated throughout the country. Exhibit P-3 is such a memorandum, setting out in a tabular form in English and vernacular the dates and amounts of Government Opium Sales in 1917 thus:—

GAJJU v. EMPEROR.

The vernacular part of this memorandum—called a proclamation by the Magistrate—also gives the corresponding dates of the commercial Sambat year—in this case Sambat 1973 74.

The chance upon which money is staked seems to be the figure of the highest bid made at each opium sale. But upon this point the evidence and the judgment of the Magistrate are by no means clear and complete. Among the ring of speculators are khaiwals and lagaiwals. The khaiwal resembles the betting man who offers odds at a race meeting or the 'banker' who receives the stakes in a gaming house; while the lagaiwal is the person who accepts the odds and stakes his money. A khaiwal in one transaction may be a lagaiwal in another connected with the same opium sale. Each khaiwal maintains two books, one called the farak bahi, and the other called the akhar bahi. The true significance of these terms has not been ascertained by the Magistrate. The words would suggest that one book recorded bets on differences and the other bets on the last figure. From the record it appears that in both cases the betting was on the chance of what would be the highest bid, and that while the farak-bahi contained figures from 1 to 100 the akhar-bahi contained figures from 1 to 10. Each lagaiwal stakes whatever he pleases on any figure or figures he fancied in both books, choosing his own odds with reference to the figure 100. These bets are booked early in the morning of each day fixed for an opium sale, either for cash paid (or agreed to be paid where credit is allowable) to the khaiwal. Then in due course a wire is received from Calcutta and settling follows. Each lagaiwal who has staked money on a figure which corresponds with the last figure of the highest bid in the case of the akhar-bahi or either the two last figures or only the last figure in the farak bahi, receives payment according to the odds laid by him, and the remainder of the stakes are pocketed by the khaiwal like a croupier.

The present case arose out of the transactions of the 6th June 1917, connected with the 6th of the monthly opium sales, and the following extract from the evidence of one of the lagaiwals, Megraj (P. W.

No. 5), who bet with the accused Gajju as khaiwal, keeping the two books, Exhibits P.1 and P.2, will facilitate a comprehension of the dealings:—

"I staked that day against the entries in the farak-bahi:—

	Rs.	a.	p.
I	...	1	0	0	at 4	per 100
II	...	0	6	0	" 3	" 100
III	...	0	10	0	" $2\frac{1}{2}$	" 100
IV	...	0	10	0	" $2\frac{1}{2}$	" 100
V	...	0	10	0	" $2\frac{1}{2}$	" 100
VI	...	0	10	0	" 2	" 100
XVI	...	0	12	0	" 3	" 100
XXXVI	...	1	0	0	" 4	" 100
LX	...	0	6	0	" $1\frac{1}{2}$	" 100
LXIV	...	0	6	0	" $1\frac{1}{2}$	" 100
I also had staked on akhar :—
VI	...	9			at $9\frac{1}{4}$	per 100
Zero	...	4			" $7\frac{3}{4}$	" 100
IX	...	3			" $9\frac{1}{2}$	" 100

"These were in Gajju's bahi, Exhibits P.1 and P.2. The telegram was received in my name. The highest bid was Rs. 3,203. I won Rs. 25 on the stake of No. III and lost all other stakes. I had staked in all Rs. 22 and I won Rs. 25. I was thus a gainer by Rs. 3.

"As khaiwal I got Rs. 4 on my papers but none of the stakers won and thus I got the whole amount."

It will be seen that he took a bet of Rs. 100 to Rs. 2-8-0 on No. 3, which proved to be the winning number. If he had staked Rs. 2-8-0 at those odds he would have won Rs. 100. He only staked 10 annas, or $\frac{1}{4}$ th of Rs. 2-8-0. Therefore he got Rs. 25 or $\frac{1}{4}$ th of Rs. 100.

The convictions are assailed before me on two grounds, namely:—

(1) that the place where the bets were booked was not a public place within the meaning of section 13, Act III of 1867; and

(2) that the betting above described does not all fall within the purview of that section.

Section 13 of the above enactment as applied to Berar, so far as it is material to this case, is worded thus:—

"A Police Officer may apprehend without warrant any person found playing for money or other valuable thing with cards, dice, counters or other instruments of gaming, used in playing any game not being a game of mere skill, in any public street, place or thoroughfare situated within the limits aforesaid.* * * *

GAJJU v. EMPEROR.

"Such person when apprehended shall be brought without delay before a Magistrate, and shall be liable to a fine not exceeding fifty rupees, or to imprisonment, either simple or rigorous, for any term not exceeding one calendar month."

As regards the first objection urged by the applicants I do not think it has any force. It is in the main a question of fact for decision on the evidence in each particular case: and with such findings this Court does not interfere in revision under the Code of Criminal Procedure save on the most exceptional grounds. But assuming that an inference of law is also involved, namely, whether a place "so situated and circumstanced as the place where the applicants were found betting is a public place within the meaning of that term in section 13, Act III of 1867, I am of opinion that such inference has been drawn correctly by the learned Magistrate. It is well established by a course of judicial decisions that in the sentence "public street, place or thoroughfare"

(1) the adjective "public" applies to each one of the three nouns "street," "place," and "thoroughfare" which follow after it; and

(2) that the word "place" means a locality ejusdem generis with "street" and "thoroughfare."

In support of these propositions I need only cite Emperor v. Jusub Ally (1), Emperor v. Hussein (2), in which the dictum of Jenkins, C. J., appears to be in conflict with the view adopted in Langrish v. Archer (3), Durga Prasad Kalwar v. Emperor (4), Queen-Empress v. Srilal (5), Queen-Empress v. Chote Lal (6), Emperor v. Ajudhia Prasad (7) and Ghoddu v. Empress (8). But it does not follow from this that a public place must be either a street or a thoroughfare, or that the term is confined to a locality to which the public have a right to resort. The question was well answered in Kitson v. Ashe (9), where it was held by Lawrence, J., that betting on private ground where people habitually resorted for betting was a betting in a place of public resort, since the locality was in fact a place of public resort in the ordinary sense of the words. In the same case Channell, J., said:—

"Does 'other place of public resort' mean a place to which the public are entitled to go as of right, or a place to which the public do go as a matter of fact? I am of opinion that the latter is the true meaning. As the owner of this piece of land does let the public go on to it, and the public do go there, I think it comes within the words of the by-law, and the appellant was rightly convicted."

I concur in this view and I hold that for the purposes of section 13, Act III of 1867, the words "public place" signify a place to which the public resort as a matter of fact, whether of right or with the permission of a private owner. It is found that the spot where the accused in the present case assembled to bet on the 6th June 1917 is a place to which the public go as a matter of fact. Therefore it is a public place within the above section.

The second objection of the applicants must prevail. There is a well-established difference between gaming and betting for the purposes of the criminal law, and except where it has been bridged over by special enactments going to include betting within the term gaming, the Courts have always refused to punish betting as an instance of gaming. The line of difference may be very fine in some cases, but it is always there. In the common usage of the two terms they may sometimes be employed interchangeably, but not always. If two persons play at cards for money, they are said to be gaming or gambling; but they are gaming because they lay a wager or make a bet on the result of the game, and therefore to say they are betting is equally appropriate. Without the wager they would still be playing a game but not gambling. But if two persons lay a wager upon the result of a pending election, it will be said that they are betting, but not that they are gaming. There is no gaming in which the element of the wager is wanting, but there is betting which the term gaming is not commonly made to embrace. The question was exhaustively considered by the Bombay High Court in Queen-Empress v. Narottamdas Motiram (10), in which at page 689, Jardine, J., after showing that there were earlier decisions by the same Tribunal to the same effect, remarked, "except by a metaphorical use of the word, contrary to the ordinary as well as the statutory use, a bet cannot, for the purposes of the criminal law, be treated as a game." This decision was referred to without dissent in Queen-Empress v. Govind (11), though the question of the difference between betting and gaming was not directly in issue. And although the dictum of Jardine, J., on this point in the earlier case was doubted by Stephen, J., in Hari Singh v. Jadu Nandan Singh (12), I am of opinion with due respect that the Bombay view is quite sound. Stephen, J., remarked:—

"What is the difference between gaming and betting? The Bombay case apparently regards gaming as betting on the result of a game, which is also a contest. The distinction between the two things is based on the scientific or historical meanings of gaming as given in standard works, to which the very high authority of Murray's Dictionary may now be added. But it seems to me to raise difficult questions as to the meaning of 'game' or 'contest' which can only be decided by a highly artificial use of language. I believe that a more satisfactory distinction, that is one that is plainer and more easy of application, is to be found by considering the popular rather than a scientific use of the word. I suggest that the difference between gaming and betting depends on the nature of the event, on which the bet is made. If the event is brought about solely for the purpose of being betted about, betting on it is gaming, otherwise it is not. Ordinary marine insurance is merely betting against the happening of certain events. In practice it is very difficult to distinguish it, in a legal point of view, from betting on the result of a cricket match or horse-race. A certain kind of marine insurance is in fact a well-known form of what is popularly described as gambling. On the other hand dicing, to take an old fashioned example, is a wholly insignificant act, if it is not done for the purpose of betting on the result. If I may descend to modern examples of those games of cards, to whose names we are accustomed in legal literature, I should say that playing at poker where stakes are essential, is gaming, and that playing at bridge, where stakes, though usual, are not essential, is not. If horse-racing degenerates into nothing, but an occasion for betting, it becomes gaming and the race horses probably become instruments of gaming. Apart from legislation rain gambling is gaming, if a complete apparatus is used for the purpose, otherwise it is not."

It is manifest that there is a great deal of deep and careful thought behind the above words. But it seems to me that in navigating the straits of legal interpretation in order to reach the true difference between gaming and betting the learned Judge only avoided the Scylla of the difficulties arising out of the Bombay opinion to suffer shipwreck on a Charybdis of his own creation. Wagering is universal both on the game of bridge and horse-racing throughout the British Empire. At what point does either amusement degenerate so as to fall within the learned Judge's conception of gaming? It seems to me that if bridge played for money in a public place can obtain emancipation on any ground from the Public Gambling Act, 1867, it must be because it is a game of skill. Again, a game is nonetheless game because it is simple and affords little amusement or excitement without wagering. Poker is certainly a game, even when played for "love" as the saying goes. Two persons throw dice for the evanescent pleasure of seeing who has the better luck or because for the moment they have nothing to do. They wager nothing on the result of any throw. They are neither gaming nor betting. They are playing, however foolishly, and the thing they play is a game, however poor and unskillful. The learned Judge of the Calcutta Court would describe as a game every event "brought about solely for the purpose of being betted about." But with due respect that is not interpreting the law but making the law. In Queen-Empress v. Narottamdas Motiram (10), Jardine, J., rightly said:—

"If this Court were to hold that a bet is converted into a game, and a betting house into a gaming house, and the betters there into offenders against the criminal law, because a rain-gauge, or hour glass, or other measure is contrived and used to settle the bet, I think the Court would assume to itself the work of legislation which Parliament has confided to another authority."

At any rate so far as Act III of 1867 is concerned, the "event" on which the bet is made must be a game played by those who bet, before it can be called gaming, as I shall presently endeavour to make clear.

In England betting has always been recognized to be possible without gaming, and has received distinct legislative treatment, the enactments against betting in public places being separate in many cases from Statutes directed against gaming. Betting is a staking of money by two or more parties against one another on the result of an uncertain event. Where such an event is not a game, betting does not amount to gaming. Where the bet is on the result of a game or some part or incident of a game then, under certain conditions specified by Statute, it will amount to gaming. In English Law gaming means playing at any game, sport, pastime, or exercise, lawful or unlawful, for money or any other valuable thing, which is staked on the result of the game, sport, pastime or exercise, i. e., which is to be lost or won according to the success or failure of the person who has staked: R. v. Ashton (13), Lockwood v. Cooper (14), Carlill v. Carbolic Smoke Ball Co. (15).

To my mind the real difficulty lies in the fact that any definition of betting (13) (1852) 1 El. & Bl. 286; 93 R. R. 138; 22 L. J. M. C. 1; 17 Jur. 501; 118 E. R. 444.

(15) (1892) 2 Q. B. 484; 61 L. J. Q. B. 696; 56 J. P. 665.

or of gaming, however carefully drawn, will be found to include many transactions which according to popular sentiment, or because of their advantages, fall clearly within such definition. This arises from the fact that neither games nor wagers laid on games or on uncertain events are ordinarily harmful. In some cases, e. g., marine insurance, they may be beneficial to the community. Gaming and Betting Enactments are aimed at acts committed ad commune nocumentum. In England no sport, pastime, game or exercise was unlawful at Common Law unless so carried on as necessarily to involve or actually to occasion a public nuisance or a real and not merely a technical breach of the public peace, or a danger to public morals: Sherbon v. Colebach (16), R. v. Rogier (17). To make a game unlawful it is, therefore, necessary to refer to the terms of some Statute, and the question of lawfulness or unlawfulness is one of law for a Court, and not of fact for a Jury: R. v. Davies (18). The Gaming Acts of the present day are evolved from ancient Statutes directed against specific games. Thus an Act of 1388 (12 Rich. II c. 6) was directed against specified games played by certain subordinate classes and described as 'importune' games. In time the law changed from a prohibition of playing games to a prohibition of playing them in such a way as to cause a nuisance or for a purpose considered to be against public morality. Under this change exceptions became inevitable and created the difficulties which are now felt by those who make as well as by those who have to interpret and administer the law. But by reason of all Statutes placing restrictions on games being of a special and penal nature the Courts have always insisted in construing them strictly in favour of the subject.

Following these principles I am of opinion that unless the facts show that persons accused of an offence under section 13, Act III of 1867, were, in the words of the section, found playing for money or other valuable thing with some instrument of gaming (eiusdem generis with cards, dice or counters) used in playing any game not being a game of mere skill, such persons cannot lawfully be convicted under that section. Every element necessary to constitute the offence must be present before the section can be enforced against an alleged offender. And here I am at one with Stephen, J., of the Calcutta High Court in thinking that the words "playing a game" should be interpreted with reference to their popular and general significance. Recording bets or laying bets about an uncertain event which the recorders and betters cannot prevent or bring about is not playing game in any reasonable sense of that expression. The enactment is directed against something which those wagering themselves bring about for the purpose of settling the bet. That something must be a game, it must be played with some instrument, the play being carried out for the purpose of ascertaining the result upon which the eventual right to the stakes depends.

It is manifest that there is nothing of the kind here. There was betting pure and simple upon an uncertain future result arising out of an event hundreds of miles away which the accused did nothing to bring about and which they could do nothing to prevent. The contingency upon which they bet was as much beyond their control as the date on which a monsoon arrives, the amount of rain which a monsoon yields, or the average temperature of a particular day. The learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate calls the books in which the bets were recorded "instruments of gaming." Some support for this view may be claimed from the decision in an Anonymous case (19), where it was held that lottery tickets, by reference to which it is to be decided whether the holder or purchaser wins the whole, or any part, of any stakes, are instruments of gaming within sections 1 and 4 of Act III of 1867. With due respect for the eminent authority (Peacock, C. J.) responsible for this proposition I am unable to accept it as sound. The judgment is extremely brief and the only reason given for the view is that lottery tickets "are instruments of gaming of a nature similar to cards." The only point of similarity I can see is that both tickets and cards are generally of an oblong shape made of cardboard. But there the similarity ends. Cards are essentially made to be played with in games of skill or of chance. They are part and parcel of the game on the result of which a bet may turn. There is no other way of using them. They are designed for the playing of games, and that is their use whether or not any wagers are laid. But who ever heard of a lottery ticket being used to play a game of any kind? It is a receipt or acknowledgment of a bet made or a chance taken, and beyond that its use has no control over the result on which the bet depends. Its only use is to allow of the holder of a winning number to be identified and the bets settled after the uncertain and unknown future event on which settlement depends has happened and been ascertained. It is a clear misnomer to call such a record an instrument of gaming. The decision in Emperor v. Lakhamji Malsi (20) has reference to a Bombay Act which represents a very considerable extension of criminal legislation against gambling, and cannot be any authority or even a guide for the interpretation of the Gambling Act of 1867. The Legislature has not seen fit so far to enter upon any criminal legislation against betting without gaming in the Central Provinces and Berar, and therefore, mere betting is no offence in either of those territories.

For the above reasons I think that the applicants were unlawfully convicted under section 13, Act III of 1867, as applied to Berar, and their convictions must be set aside and fines refunded.

The conviction of the applicant is set aside and he is acquitted. His fine, if paid, will be refunded.

Conviction set aside.

*Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 121,
514, Sch. V, Form XI—Security for good behaviour—Offence committed in Native State—Forfeiture of bond.*

A penal bond must be construed literally and strictly.

The subjects of the ruler of an independent Native State are not the subjects of His Majesty the King-Emperor.

A bond executed by a surety in the form prescribed by Schedule V, Form XI, of the Criminal Procedure Code, cannot be forfeited on the principal committing an offence in an independent Native State, inasmuch as the principal does not thereby make default in his undertaking to be of good behaviour towards His Majesty or His Majesty's subjects.

Revision from the order of the District Magistrate, Amritsar, dated the 31st August 1916.

Mr. Herbert, Assistant Legal Remembrancer, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—On the 1st of June 1914 one Sorain Singh as principal, and Ram Singh and Bahadur Singh as sureties, executed a bond for Rs. 2,000 under section 121, Criminal Procedure Code, for the good behaviour of the said Sorain Singh for the period of one year. On the 10th of April 1915 Sorain Singh was convicted by a Court of the Kapurthala State of an offence under section 457, Indian Penal Code, and as a result the said sureties were called upon to show cause why the security furnished by them should not be forfeited. After hearing the sureties, the Magistrate of the first class directed that the whole amount of Rs. 2,000 furnished by the sureties should be forfeited, whereupon they appealed to the District Magistrate of Amritsar, who by his order of 31st of August 1916 overruled their contention on the legal points urged by them but directed that the case should be returned to the Magistrate in order that further enquiries might be made as to whether Sorain Singh actually committed an offence in the Kapurthala State, the District Magistrate being of opinion that the evidence on the record on this point was defective. The sureties thereupon applied to this Court to revise the order of the District Magistrate on the ground that in any event their bond could not be forfeited, inasmuch as they had bound themselves to ensure the good behaviour of Sorain Singh only towards "His Majesty and all His Majesty's subjects" and not towards the subjects of a Native State.

The bond executed by Sorain Singh and the petitioners was in the form prescribed by Schedule 5, Form XI, of the Criminal Procedure Code, and so far as the sureties are concerned, runs as follows:—

"We do hereby declare ourselves sureties for the above named Sorain Singh that he will be of good behaviour to his Majesty the King-Emperor of India, and to all His subjects during the said term, and, in case of his making default therein, we bind ourselves, jointly and severally, to forfeit to His Majesty the sum of Rs. 2,000."

A penal bond, such as this, must be construed literally and strictly, and consequently the only question before us is whether by committing an offence in the Kapurthala State Sorain Singh made default in his undertaking to be of good behaviour towards His Majesty or His Majesty's subjects. The subjects of the ruler of an independent Native State are not the subjects of His Majesty the King-Emperor [see Musammatt Kishen Kour v. Crown (1), Empress v. Nawabji (2) and Roda v. Empress (3)], nor by transgressing the laws of the Kapurthala State, did Sorain Singh make any default in his undertaking to be of good behaviour towards His Majesty.

In the circumstances we must accept the petition and set aside the orders of the Magistrate and the District Magistrate. We are informed that each of the sureties has paid up Rs. 250 out of the amount due from him and if this is the case, the money should be refunded.

Revision accepted.

A Magistrate should not follow a ruling of a High Court to which he is not subordinate, when he has a ruling of the High Court to which he is subordinate before him. [p. 441, col. 2.]

Criminal revision from an order of the District Magistrate, Agra, dated the 27th February 1918.

Mr. Narain Prasad Asthana, for the Applicant.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for revision of an order passed by the Magistrate of Agra, whereby an order of a First Class Magistrate of Agra was confirmed. The First Class Magistrate of Agra had before him an application asking him to enforce the provisions of sections 1 and 2 of Act XIII of 1859. All that appears before me on the record is an order in which the learned Magistrate arrives at the conclusion that the suit does not lie under Act XIII of 1859. No evidence appears to have been taken and all that is on the record is the contract. Act XIII of 1859 is an Act which has been extended to the station of Agra. The contract is upon a stamp paper and it recites that it is a contract under Act XIII of 1859. The First Class Magistrate sets out what he believes to be the obvious object of Act XIII of 1859. He says that "it was designed to prevent coolies or labour contractors fraudulently bolting with the advances necessary for obtaining work from them and it was not designed to secure the employers enforcement of elaborate contracts with skilled artisans." I do not know from what source the learned Joint Magistrate obtains this. There is nothing in the Act to this effect. The learned Joint Magistrate will do well to consider the ruling by which he is bound, namely, Queen Empress v. Indarjit (1). Having placed this interpretation upon the object of the Act, the learned Joint Magistrate went on to pass an order for which there is no warrant that I know of. That order runs as follows:—"The accused till to-morrow should produce balance of money due to the complainant. If he does so and the complainant takes it, accused will be acquitted. If he does so and complainant refuses the money, the case will be dismissed. If he does not produce it, it will be a clear case of bad faith and I shall proceed against him under Act XIII of 1859." The morrow came and the accused produced the money required of him. The complainant refused to take it, saying that he wished to have the work done by the accused. The learned Joint Magistrate professed to act upon a ruling of the Bombay High Court*, to which he is not subordinate and which he should not follow when he has before him rulings of this Court. I cannot moreover sanction the unwarrantable language used by the Joint Magistrate regarding an Act in the Statute book. He says: "It is altogether preposterous that this Act, designed to protect people who make cash advances in order to import or secure manual labour from people not worth powder and shot in the Civil Court, should be prostituted in this way by employers of skilled artisans." The learned Joint Magistrate had no right to use language of this kind regarding a Statute which is in force and which he is bound to respect. The Act is in full force in the station of Cawnpur for instance, and for ought I know may be in full force in the station of Agra. I call the attention of the Courts below to the case of C. J. Lucas v. Ramai Singh (2) and Bakhtawar v. Emperor (3), both to be found in 16 A. L. J. R. 164. The learned Joint Magistrate says that he cannot compel Hansa to continue the work which he contracted to perform because it requires him to sit very near the fire. He is said

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 337, 339—Pardon, forfeiture of—Approver, trial of—Withdrawal of pardon, whether necessary—Approver, whether bound to disclose previous offence.

As a preliminary to the trial of an approver under section 339 of the Criminal Procedure Code it is unnecessary that there should be a formal withdrawal of the pardon. [p. 442, col. 2.]

It is not sufficient for an approver to help to secure the conviction of some of his accomplices, if he has screened the others. [p. 443, col. 1.]

An approver in order to satisfy the conditions of his pardon is called upon to make a full and true disclosure of the whole of the circumstances within his knowledge relative to the offence or offences which are being enquired into, and not relative to offences which are at the time not being enquired into [p. 443, col. 1.]

Criminal revision from the order of the District Magistrate, Hissar, dated the 3rd January 1918.

Messrs. Beechey and Ganpat Rai, for the Petitioner.

Mr. C. Bevan Petman (Government Advocate), for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In June or July 1917 it was ascertained that a sum of Rs. 53,000 had been withdrawn from the Hissar Treasury by means of forged vouchers and the Police made enquiries into the offences, which were held to fall under sections 467/420 of the Indian Penal Code; suspicion fell upon the petitioner Suraj Bhan in connection with those frauds and on the 14th July 1917 the District Magistrate authorised the tender to him of a pardon on the usual conditions as set forth in section 337 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The tender was accepted by Suraj Bhan and he appeared as a witness for the prosecution against his accomplices, three of whom have been convicted. Subsequently it was ascertained by the Police that Suraj Bhan had not made a full and true disclosure of the whole circumstances relative to those offences, and the District Magistrate has ordered his prosecution in accordance with the provisions of section 339 of the Code in respect of the frauds.

He has petitioned this Court and on his behalf it has been contended that though with the sanction of this Court his prosecution on a charge of perjury might be legally instituted, the District Magistrate was not competent to withdraw the pardon and to direct his prosecution on charges of fraud.

On behalf of the Crown it has been retorted that the application by the petitioner is clearly premature; that the pardon has not been withdrawn; and that the question whether the pardon has been forfeited is a matter for the decision of the Magistrate who will try the case.

In the Code of 1872 the language used suggested that the proper procedure in a case of this kind was that the trial of the approver in respect of the original charge should be preceded by a formal withdrawal of the pardon, and there are authorities to the effect that the order of withdrawal should issue from the Court which made the tender of pardon. The present law, however, is somewhat different and contains no reference to a withdrawal of the pardon and there are several authorities, of which it is necessary to mention only Emperor v. Saber Akunji (1) and Sashi Rajbanshi v. Emperor (2), for the view that as a preliminary to the trial of the approver it is unnecessary that there should be any formal withdrawal of the pardon, so that in the present case the argument on behalf of the petitioner that the pardon has been withdrawn by an unauthorised Magistrate falls to the ground.

MANGALCHAND v. MOHAN.

Next it is urged that the strictest faith should be kept with a person who has accepted a tender of pardon, who has appeared in the witness box on behalf of the prosecution and has secured the conviction or helped to secure the conviction of three of his accomplices. This argument assumes that the approver has fulfilled completely the conditions on which the tender of pardon was made. It is not sufficient for an approver to help to secure the conviction of three of his accomplices, if he has screened the fourth and it is precisely on the ground that the approver petitioner has screened one of his accomplices that the District Magistrate has ordered his prosecution. If this is a correct view, the approver has not fulfilled completely the conditions of his pardon, and he, therefore, has no reason to complain if that pardon is declared to be forfeited. The question, whether as a fact he has forfeited his pardon, is one which will have to be determined by the trial Magistrate who will have to place that issue in the forefront of the case.

Another objection raised is that one of the grounds on which the District Magistrate is proceeding against the petitioner is that subsequent to the discovery of frauds amounting to Rs. 53,000 it was ascertained that at a still earlier date the approver had committed another fraud which was unknown to the Police at the time when the pardon was tendered to him. The objection appears to me to have some force, for the approver in order to satisfy the conditions of his pardon was called upon to make a full and true disclosure of the whole of the circumstances within his knowledge relative to the offence or offences which were then being enquired into, and not relative to offences which were at that time not being enquired into. On this point, however, I prefer not to pass any final decision, inasmuch as this too is a matter which the trial Magistrate should decide and also because the other grounds for prosecuting the petitioner are quite sufficient even if his failure to disclose the earlier offence be left out of the question.

From the foregoing it appears that the District Magistrate's action was taken by him in his capacity as chief prosecuting agency of the district and as there is nothing illegal in the same, this Court has no power nor desire to interfere.

The petition is consequently dismissed.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act No. of 1898), s. 422—Appeal by accused—Notice to complainant, whether necessary—Omission to give notice—Revision.

Where an appeal by an accused is not dismissed summarily, section 422 of the Criminal Procedure Code does not require that notice of the appeal should be given to the complainant. It is, however, the practice to give notice to the complainant as well as to the District Magistrate in a case instituted upon a complaint, but failure to give notice to the complainant does not furnish a ground for interference in revision. [p. 444, col. 1.]

Criminal revision against the order of the Sessions Judge, Nagpur Division, dated the 19th June 1916, confirming the conviction and remitting the fine imposed by the Cantonment Magistrate, 1st Class, Kamptee, on the 10th April 1916.

JUDGMENT.—The applicant obtained sanction for the prosecution of the non-applicant for an offence under section 193, Indian Penal Code. The non-applicant was convicted by the Cantonment Magistrate of Kamptee and sentenced to imprisonment till the rising of the Court and also to a fine of Rs. 200. The Magistrate ordered that Rs. 100 out of the fine, if realized, was to be paid to the complainant as compensation. Against this conviction the non-applicant appealed to the Sessions Judge who remitted the fine, as, in his opinion, the offence which consisted in denying as a witness the fact that the non-applicant was previously fined for an assault was a trivial one and as the true answer would not have affected his credit as a witness to any appreciable extent. This petition has been filed on the ground that no notice to the applicant was given by the Sessions Judge and that he has been prejudicially affected by the order, so far as his claim for compensation is concerned.

In the first place I doubt the propriety of the order passed by the Cantonment Magistrate. Under section 545 of the Criminal Procedure Code the Magistrate could order the expenses, properly incurred in the prosecution, to be defrayed out of the fine. The second part of the section which allows compensation such as could be recovered by civil suit is inapplicable, as substantial compensation was not recoverable by civil suit for the perjury. It seems that the Court was thinking of compensation when it had only power to award actual costs. However that may be, this was an order subject to the result of an appeal. The Appellate Court, I take it, differed from the first Court. Was the applicant entitled in law to be noticed? I think not, for section 422 requires notice to be given to such officer as the Local Government may appoint in this behalf. There is a Madras case, Ambakkagari Nagi Raddi v. Basappa (1), which deals with appeals from an award of compensation under section 250 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The learned Judges laid down that it would be better if in such cases notices were given to the accused. But the absence of notice was held not to be an illegality and the High Court declined to interfere with the appellate order disallowing compensation. The practice of this Court is to give notice to complainants as well as to the District Magistrate in cases instituted upon a complaint. The lower Courts will be well-advised if they follow this practice. On the whole, I see no ground for interference in revision.

Revision rejected.

Motor Vehicles Act (VIII of 1914), s. 14—Punjab Motor Vehicle Rules, rr. 10, 17, applicability of—Servant driving motor car without lights—Master, liability of.

Rules 10 and 17 of the Punjab Motor Vehicle Rules only apply to the driver or to a person using the car at the time it is being driven, and not to an absent owner. The owner of a car, therefore, is not liable to be fined because in his absence his servant drove his motor-car without lights after lighting-up time. [p. 445, col. 1.]

Case reported by the Sessions Judge, Rawalpindi, with his No. 169 of the 25th February 1917.

Bakhshi Gokal Chand, for the Accused.

FACTS.—The accused, on conviction by Mr. H. B. Anderson, Cantonment Magistrate, exercising the powers of a Magistrate of the First Class, in the Rawalpindi District, was sentenced by order, dated 27th August 1917, under rules 10 and 17 of the rules made in 1915 under the Motor Vehicles Act, VIII of 1914, to pay a fine of Rs. 5.

PROCEEDINGS.—The proceedings were forwarded for revision on the following grounds :—

"Petitioner was not in the car himself at the time the offence is said to have been committed and I fail to understand how he can be held to be criminally responsible for the act of his servant in driving the car in contravention of the rules. It is not, as the Magistrate says, a well-recognised principle of law that the master is responsible for the wrongful acts of his servants. It is true that so far as civil liability goes, it is a recognised principle that the master is liable for all tortuous acts of his servant done in the course of his employment and for the master's benefit, but as regards criminal liability the principle is that he only is criminally punishable who immediately does the act or permits it to be done. There are certain exceptions to this principle, but the offence of which the petitioner has been convicted is certainly not one. The owner of the car, as has been said, was not in the car at the time the offence was committed and there is no evidence to show that he permitted the wrongful act complained of to be done.

"It is to be noted also that the date on which the offence was committed is entered in the extract from the Cantonment Magistrate's Summary Register as the 8th June 1917, whereas the complaint (vide letter No. 1604-2-5, dated the 19th May, from the Brigade Major, Rawalpindi, to the Cantonment Magistrate, Rawalpindi) shows that the offence was committed on the 17th May 1917.

SAVARAJULU NAYUDU, In re.

"I am of opinion that the petitioner has been wrongly convicted and sentenced and I would recommend that the sentence and conviction be set aside as illegal, and the fine, if paid, be refunded."

ORDER.—Petitioner has been fined because in his absence his servant drove his motor-car without lights after lighting-up time.

As stated by the learned Sessions Judge, the owner of the car has in these circumstances committed no criminal offence.

Rules 10 and 17 obviously only apply to the driver or to a person using the car at the time it is being driven, and not to an absent owner. The conviction of petitioner is hereby set aside and the fine, if paid, will be refunded.

—ACCUSED NOS. 1, 2 AND 3—PETITIONERS.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 34, 323, 325, 326, 392—Robbery—Grievous hurt caused during robbery—Identification of offender, absence of—Separate charge against each accused without specification of common intent to cause grievous hurt—Conviction under s. 325, legality of—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 106, scope of—'Breach of peace,' meaning of.

Accused Nos. 1, 2 and 3 were charged with having entered the complainant's house, and removed his ear-rings. The right ear was cut off with the ear-ring and the left ear was torn. The accused were charged separately and there was no specification of a common intention to inflict grievous hurt.

The 1st accused was convicted under sections 326 and 392, the 2nd under sections 326, 325 and 109 and the 3rd under sections 325 and 392, Indian Penal Code. In appeal, the Sessions Judge substituted convictions under sections 325 and 392 with 109 as regards 1st accused. The accused were also ordered to furnish security under section 106, Criminal Procedure Code.

Held, (1) that as the identification of the person who inflicted the grievous injury was not made out, and as there was an absence of common intent, the conviction under section 325 was bad, for which must be substituted convictions under section 323; [p. 446, col. 1.]

(2) that the order under section 106 was not illegal even though there was technically no breach of the public peace by the accused. [p. 446, col. 2.]

A person who enters on another's premises and uses violence to him and deprives him of his property commits a breach of the peace in the wider sense of the expression. [p. 446, col. 2.]

Petition, under sections 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, praying the High Court to revise the judgment of the Court of Session of the North Arcot Division, in Criminal Appeal No. 85 of 1917, preferred against the judgment of the Court of the Sub-Divisional 1st Class Magistrate, Tiruvannamalai, in Calendar Case No. 122 of 1917.

This case coming on for hearing on the 28th of March 1918, upon perusing the petition and judgment of the lower Court and the record in the case and upon hearing the arguments of the Hon'ble Mr. T. Rangachariar, for the Petitioners, and of the Public Prosecutor, on behalf of the Crown, and the case having stood over for consideration till this day, the Court made the following ORDER.—The undisputed facts are that the three accused, resenting complainant's conduct, entered the house, where he was working and attacked him. His ear-rings were removed, one being cut off with his right ear and the other torn from his left. The accused were originally convicted, 1st accused of offences punishable under sections 326 and 392, Indian Penal Code, 2nd accused under sections 326, 325 and 109 and 3rd accused under sections 325 and 392 of the Indian Penal Code. The learned Sessions Judge, for reasons which are not clear, substituted convictions under sections 325 and 392 with 109 as regards 1st accused.

The first objection to this, that the conviction should be under section 223, not 325, must be sustained. The only grievous hurt disclosed by the evidence is the injury to the right ear. For the left ear has healed and is intact. But the learned Sessions Judge conceded in effect that identification of the accused, who caused that injury, was impossible on the evidence. He convicted, because, all three accused having joined with one common intent, it was immaterial which inflicted the wound. Each accused, however, was charged separately without any allegation of any common intent that an incised wound should be caused, the charge on 3rd accused in particular excluding the existence of such intent, since it was limited to section 323 and was, therefore, inconsistent with his responsibility for the use of a knife. The charges as framed did not admit of the application of section 34 and accused can accordingly be held answerable only for the general violence used. Convictions under section 323 must, therefore, be substituted for those under section 325.

The convictions under section 392 are attacked, because there is no evidence that the accused kept the jewels, since they may have fallen on the ground, and complainant admits that he did not look for them there, and since the learned Session Judge found that "accused were not common robbers and intended rather to punish complainant than to steal his ear rings." There was, however, evidence that they took the jewels from complainant's ears and it was for them to show that they did not do so in order to keep them. The punishment, which, as the learned Session Judge held, they meant to inflict on complainant, may as well have been by deprivation of his property as by causing pain. This objection, therefore, fails.

In view of the substitution of section 325 for 326 the sentences of rigorous imprisonment are reduced to one month in the case of each accused. The fines and sentences in default are confirmed.

The orders to give security are, it is argued, not authorised by section 106, Criminal Procedure Code, because accused have not been convicted of "assault or other offence involving a breach of the peace," assault including only the offence specified in sections 351 or 352, Indian Penal Code, and the breach of the peace contemplated being a breach of the public peace, not one committed as this was on private premises. The order against accused must be justified, if at all, as one of the latter class; and it seems to me to fall within it. The English Law is not a guide to the construction of section 106, since under the Criminal Law Consolidation Act, 1861, security may be required on conviction of any offence except murder; and I have not been shown and cannot find that the expression "breach of the peace" has any recognized or definite meaning in England as including only breaches of the public peace or otherwise. In India also it has nowhere been defined. But the reference in section 504, Indian Penal Code, to "the public peace" and in section 107, Criminal Procedure Code, to persons "likely to commit a breach of the peace or disturb the public tranquillity", show how the restricted interpretation of section 106 claimed by accused could and presumably would, if it had been intended, have been expressed. Neither rioting nor assault, the two offences specified in the latter section, necessarily involves a breach of the public peace; and there is, therefore, no ground for the application of the doctrine of ejusdem generis. The first case relied on by the accused, Muthiah Chetti v. Emperor (1), and the two Calcutta cases referred to therein are not relevant, since they decide that only an actual breach of the peace must be an element in the offence established, before section 106 can be applied. In Queen v. Kunhiya (2) it was, no doubt, held by a single Judge that section 280 (meaning presumably 459) of the Code then in force (corresponding with section 106) referred only to offences against the public tranquillity. But the former, like the latter provision, refers to the breach of the peace only generally and the judgment gives no reasons for restricting the application of the terms used. In Muthurakka Thevan, In re (3) Spencer, J., without distinguishing between breaches of the public and other peace, held that robbery was not an offence involving a breach of the peace; but he also gave no reasons for his conclusion and apart from the distinction referred to, which he did not mention, I am respectfully unable to follow him. When, as is the case, that distinction is supported by no clearer authority and is not required by the wording of the section, it should not, in my opinion, be recognized. That the conduct of persons who enter on premises where their enemy is, use violence to him, cut and tear his ears and deprive him of his jewellery involves a breach of the peace in the wider sense of the expression needs no demonstration. The order was, in my Offence falling under two sections—Procedure—Jurisdiction of British Courts—Abetment out of British India of offence committed in British India—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 372, 420—Cheating—Selling married girl as virgin.*

Where one act constitutes offences under two different sections of the Penal Code, the proper procedure is to frame charges under both sections in one and the same trial and to award a sentence under either of the sections. [p. 448, col. 1.]

Courts in British India have no jurisdiction to try a person who is not a British subject for abetting out of British India an offence committed by another in British India. [p. 447, col. 2.]

Accused sold a minor married girl to the complainant representing her to be a virgin:

Held, that the accused were guilty of cheating. [p. 448, col. 2.]

Appeal from the order of the Magistrate, 1st Class, with enhanced powers under section 30 of the Criminal Procedure Code, Hissar, dated the 24th October 1917, convicting the appellants.

Lala Hargopal for Mr. N. C. Pandit, for the Appellants.

Mr. C. Bevan Petman (Government Advocate), for the Crown and Mr. C. L. Gulati, for the Complainant.

JUDGMENT.—This is a case which is peculiar in several respects. Eight persons have been convicted of cheating Biru Mal of Surtia, District Hissar, by selling to him a young married Rajput girl as a Mahajan virgin and thus getting Rs. 4,000 from him. In a separate trial the same eight have been convicted under section 372 of selling the same girl to Biru Mal. I have before me an appeal of Suraj Singh, one of the eight convicts, in which he appeals jointly from both the convictions. This Appeal No. 153 of 1918 was sent by Jail to the Sessions Judge, but has been transferred to this Court. I have also before me the present appeal, lodged by Pleader on behalf of all the eight convicts in the section 372 case. Lala Hargopal tells me that this appeal does not relate to the conviction under section 420. I understand from him that an appeal of seven of the convicts against the conviction under section 420 has been dismissed by the Sessions Judge as time-barred.

The facts are stated in the judgment of the learned Magistrate and need not be repeated. That some of the convicts came with the girl from Indore and misrepresenting her to be a Mahajan virgin sold her as a bride to Biru Mal for Rs. 4,000 is clear enough. Others of the convicts assisted from Indore by affirming to persons sent by Biru Mal to make enquiries that the girl was really a Mahajan virgin. But these latter persons, viz., Basi Lal, Unkar Mahajan and Musammatt Ganga Bai, never left Indore, and granting that they abetted the act of cheating which was actually committed in Hissar, the question still is whether any Court in British India has jurisdiction over them. They are not British subjects, and whatever offence they committed was committed out of British India, and I do not think that the fact that the offence which they abetted out of British India was committed by others in British India gives the Courts in British India jurisdiction. In this connection I would refer to Reg. v. Pirtai (1).

The above, however, relates to three only of the convicts. But as regards all the eight I have this further difficulty. The offence of cheating and the offence of selling the girl seem to me to lie in exactly the same acts, and I am doubtful whether after having been convicted of one offence they can be convicted of the other. I have carefully considered section 71, Indian Penal Code, and it seems to me that it is a case of an offence falling "within two or more separate definitions of any law in force for the time being by which offences are defined or punished." The section goes on to lay down that in such a case the offender shall not be punished with a more severe punishment than the Court which tries him could award for any one of such offences. Offences under section 372 are punishable with a severer sentence than offences under section 420. It would, I think, have been perfectly right to frame charges under both sections in one and the same trial, and to award a sentence not exceeding that allowed by section 372. But I cannot find any authority for trying and convicting a man in two separate trials for the same offence, even though that offence may be one falling within two different sections of the Penal Code. In some cases a man commits two different offences by different acts, e.g., a man may commit an offence under section 457 by breaking into a house at night in order to commit theft. Having so broken in he may commit a separate subsequent offence by committing theft. But in the present case I am unable to see that the selling of the girl and the cheating of the purchaser are different acts. In some cases no doubt a sale is legally complete even before the sale money has been paid or the property handed over, but in such a case as the present, it seems clear that the offenders did not part with the girl and never intended to part with her until the price had been paid, and had the price not been paid the bargain would have been off. So I am quite unable to separate the factum of the sale from the factum of the cheating, and I am of opinion that the appellants should not have been tried twice for the same act, even though that act constitutes an offence under two different sections of the Penal Code. This is sufficient to dispose of the appeal. I may add that the learned Pleader for the appellants has cited Mulu v. Empress (2) as authority for the proposition that the selling of a girl to a man who intends to marry her is not an offence falling within the purview of section 372, Indian Penal Code, even though the seller be aware of the fact that the girl is already married. This is the view which was held by Plowden, J., though Powell, J., doubted. But it is unnecessary to consider whether this view is correct or not, as I have already held that the appellants should not have been tried twice over for the same act.

(1) 10 B. H. C. R. 356.

RAJ BAHADUR V. EMPEROR.

(2) 13 P. R. 1888 Cr.

It remains to dispose of Suraj Singh's appeal from the conviction under section 420. The story for the prosecution is that the girl was brought to Giddarwah by Suraj Singh and others in order to sell her in marriage to Chamba Mal. That plan for some reason or another fell through, but Biru Mal got news of the girl and went over to Giddarwah and negotiations commenced, which, after certain enquiries had been made by Biru Mal in Indore, led to the girl's being taken off to Surtia where she was sold as a bride to Biru Mal for Rs. 4,000. Suraj Singh, though a sowar in the Indore State, is according to the record aged only 17, and evidently played a minor part in the whole affair. He is son of Musammatt Nathi, and so brother-in-law of Musammatt Gajjo Bai who is married to his brother. So it is hard to believe that he was not in the plot to sell his sister-in-law. But I have searched the record in vain for any evidence to the effect that he joined in making any misrepresentations to Biru Mal when the latter went to Giddarwah. Biru Mal himself says: "I put no particular enquiries to Suraj Singh." As to what took place later on at Surtia it is clear that Suraj Singh did not even go there. Biru Mal also says: "Raj Bahadur and Suraj Singh said they were brothers and that they had come to receive money which was due to Basi Lal from Ganeshi." But I do not see how any such statement would assist in persuading Biru Mal to pay money for Musammatt Gajjo Bai under the mistaken idea that she was a Mahajan virgin. I hold the case, therefore, not proved against Suraj Singh.

The result is that I accept both these appeals and reverse the conviction and sentences against all the appellants under section 372 and acquit them. The fines inflicted under that section, if paid, will be refunded. I also reverse the conviction and sentence under section 420 in the case of Suraj Singh and acquit him and order him to be released, and the fine, if paid, to be refunded.

I do not order release in the case of the other convicts as they have to undergo their sentence under section 420, Indian Penal Code.

Appeal accepted.

A SOLICITOR AND HIS CLIENTS.

Certain circumstances connected with a suit in the Bombay High Court, which came to an abrupt termination last week, seem to us to call for further investigation and elucidation at the hands in whose care the preservation of propriety of conduct in the legal profession rests. In this case a Muhammadan gentleman named Haji Ahmed Haji Hassan Dada was sued by one Bhugwandas Goculdas Gandhi on a promissory note for Rs. 3,000. The plaintiff alleged that he was joint with his brother Sambhu-prasad, and that the promissory note in question was passed in favour of the latter, who advanced the money to the defendant out of the joint family property. After Sambhuprasad's death, the plaintiff applied for Letters of Administration to the estate of his deceased brother. He had repeatedly called upon the defendant to pay the amount advanced but the latter had failed to do so. The defendant on the other hand denied that he had borrowed any sum whatever from the plaintiff. He was a rich man with an income of about Rs. 8,000 per month, and a large property owner, whereas the defendant was a poor man, a clerk on a small monthly income.
He admitted the passing of the promissory note, however, and alleged the following remarkable circumstances in connection therewith.In 1912, the defendant entered into an agreement to purchase a bungalow on Nepean Sea Road from Tatia Saheb Holkar. Tatia Saheb was unable to carry out the agreement because he had previously agreed to sell the bungalow in question to a Mr.
Khambatta, who successfully sued him for a specific performance of the contract. In that suit Messrs.
Surajmal & Co. were the Solicitors for Tatia Saheb.
Messrs. Surajmal and Company were also the defendant's Solicitors. The defendant alleged that after the suit Mr. Surajmal thereupon instigated him, the defendant, to file a suit against Tatia Saheb, his own client, for damages for failure to fulfil his contract for sale of the bungalow. Mr. Surajmal, it was again alleged, further persuaded the defendant that he would use his influence with Tatia Saheb to pay to the defendant Rs. 20,000 to Rs. 25,000 as damages.
It was further agreed between them that if Mr.
Surajmal were successful in obtaining not less than Rs. 20,000 for the defendant, the latter was to pay to him the sum of Rs. 3,000. As a sort of security for this he induced the defendant to pass a promissory note for Rs. 3,000 in the name of his clerk Sambhuprasad, explaining that under the circumstances it was not proper for the note to be in his
(Mr. Surajmal's) name. As a matter of fact Mr.
Surajmal only succeeded in obtaining Rs. 9,000 as damages for the defendant from Tatia Saheb and the defendant, therefore, refused to pay him the Rs. 3,000.
Mr. Surajmal afterwards put up the plaintiff, Sambhuprasad having in the meantime died, to bring a suit against the defendant. This bare recital of

SURAJMAL V. HORNIMAN.

In 1912, Tatia Sahab Holkar entered into an agreement with one Ashidbai to sell to her his bungalow at Nepean Sea Road for Rs. 66,000. Ashidbai was the nominee of her son, Haji Ahmed Haji Hassan Dada (hereinafter called Dada). The plaintiff acted as common Solicitor and when the usual advertisement for the main allegations of the defendant in the case is sufficient to reveal very grave misconduct on the part of a Solicitor, if the allegations were well-founded. As to that, after the first day's hearing and while Mr. Surajmal was still under a severe cross-examination, in which he suffered from some lapses of memory, the case was suddenly withdrawn, the Judge, Sir Dinshaw Davar, appropriately remarking that the plaintiff had adopted a very wise course. That the plaintiff was merely the creature of Mr. Surajmal admits of little doubt, in view of the circumstances revealed. And that Mr. Surajmal should have thus been content to have the case withdrawn and the very ugly allegations made against him left unrefuted is a matter which demands further inquiry. If the charge that he deliberately instigated one of his clients to bring an action for damages against another of his clients, sending him to another Solicitor for the purpose, and then arranging a settlement over that Solicitor's head, were true, then it is perfectly clear that Mr. Surajmal would not be a suitable person for the practice of the honourable profession of a Solicitor.

As regards the last named point it may be as well to elucidate the matter a little further, on the basis of the defendant's allegations, though the matter was not fully revealed in Court. It is alleged that in spite of the fact that the defendant was represented in his suit against Tatia Sahab by another firm of Solicitors, Mr. Surajmal settled the whole matter direct with him and then wrote to the other Solicitors stating: "We are informed by our client's agent that the above suit has been settled by the parties out of Court..... We are informed that your client has written to you accordingly." As a matter of fact there was no intervention on the part of any "agent" at all. The matter was settled between Mr. Dada and Mr. Surajmal direct and the latter wrote this letter, it is alleged, to prevent it being known that he had communicated with or seen Dada in the absence of his Solicitor. That, again, is conduct which requires explanation, and we trust that Mr. Surajmal will be called upon to give such explanation, as well as that of other allegations made against him by the Chief Justice or the Law Society.

A MATTER FOR INVESTIGATION.

We referred last week to the case of Gandhi v. Dada which was part heard in the Bombay High Court and then incontinently withdrawn by the plaintiff, and we suggested that the facts disclosed during the hearing called for very strict inquiry, in respect of the conduct of Mr. Surajmal B. Mehta, a Solicitor, who was one of the witnesses. But there is a good deal more yet to be said, and which ought to be said, about the whole affair. It was roundly alleged that the plaintiff in the case was merely a puppet who had been instigated by Mr. Mehta to bring the suit, that the promissory note on which he sued had been given without any consideration, and at the instance of Mr. Mehta, to secure his promise of a commission of Rs. 3,000 from defendant, which was to be paid in consideration of his obtaining from his client, Tatia Sahab Holkar, Rs. 20,000 or Rs. 25,000 as damages in a suit which Mr. Surajmal Mehta had instigated Mr. Dada to bring against Tatia Sahab, and that Mr. Surajmal Mehta settled this suit for Rs. 9,000 over the head of the Solicitor who was acting for Mr. Dada, dealing with the latter direct and paying to him his own cheque, while he afterwards wrote to Mr. Dada's Solicitor a letter stating that his (Surajmal's) firm had been informed by the Tatia Sahab's agent that the suit had been settled by the parties out of Court, whereas, as a matter of fact, there was no intervention by the agent and the cheque was given by Mr. Surajmal Mehta himself. The allegations of the defendant were largely developed in the cross-examination of Mr. Surajmal Mehta by Mr. Davar and he was still under cross-examination when the case was adjourned on the first day. When it was resumed on the 2nd day the plaintiff withdrew and the allegations remained unanswered. In regard to these grave allegations Mr. Surajmal was unable to remember whether the version of the defence put to him was true or not. He did not remember whether the defendant went to the other Solicitor, Mr. D'Cunha, at his suggestion or not, nor did he remember whether a draft of the notice sent by the defendant to Tatia Sahab was written by him and given to the defendant to be taken to Mr. D'Cunha. Other matters of importance he had also forgotten. Since it is to be presumed that these questions were not put without the existence of evidence in the possession of the defendant to back them up, it seems to us undesirable in the public interest that the matter should be left at a stage it had reached when the plaintiff thought fit to withdraw the case. There are other features of the case, moreover, which require further investigation. One witness for the plaintiff said that the promissory note was executed in his office at his table and in his presence by the defendant, who was paid Rs. 3,000 in currency notes, and further that the defendant used the same ink and pen when he put his signature to the note. Another witness said the note was written in his room, and not in the room of the previous witness and that different pen and ink was used for the signatures. When an action is brought on such a document to recover a sum, which, it is stated in evidence, was actually paid over to the defendant, which the latter denies, and having been supported by evidence of the character indicated above, is suddenly withdrawn without explanation, it is clear that the matter cannot be allowed to rest there. Not only the conduct of the Solicitor concerned requires to be investigated, for his own sake as well as that of the public interest, but also the remarkable circumstances revealed by the evidence of the two witnesses we have mentioned. We trust that the attention of the Chief Justice and the Advocate-General as well as that of the Law Society and other authorities will be drawn to the matter.

SURAJMAL v. HORNIMAN.

claims had been published, one Khambatta gave notice that Tatia Saheb had already agreed to sell the bungalow to him. Eventually Khambatta had to file a suit for specific performance which was decided in his favour on the 6th September 1912. Thereafter Dada filed a Suit (No. 907 of 1912) against Tatia Saheb for damages for breach of his contract; D'Cunha acted as his Solicitor in that suit while the plaintiff acted for Tatia Saheb. The suit was settled by Tatia Saheb paying Rs. 9,000 to Dada. In 1915, one Bhagwandas Gordhandas filed a suit against Dada to recover Rs. 3,000 on a promissory note.

That suit came on for hearing before Davar, J., on the 26th March 1916, and was part-heard at the close of the day. For some reason which is not apparent, the plaintiff chose to call his witnesses, though the onus lay on the defendant to prove his defence as soon as the promissory note was admitted in evidence. The following Monday, the 28th, the plaintiff did not appear and the suit was dismissed with costs.

A report of the case was brought to the notice of the first defendant, who considered that owing to the nature of the allegations made by Dada in his defence and the cross-examination of the plaintiff's witnesses, it might be desirable to get further information. He sent for Nanabhai Cowasji Engineer and from the papers given to him by Nanabhai he evolved the articles which are now complained of. The first article began by setting out the contents of the pleadings. Briefly stated, it may be said that Dada admitted signing the note in favour of Shambhuprasad, the brother of Bhagwandas. Shambhuprasad was dead and Bhagwandas brought the suit either as survivor of two co-owners or as representative of his brother. Dada, however, contended that Shambhuprasad, who was a clerk in Surajmal's employ, was Surajmal's nominee under the following circumstances. Surajmal had instigated him to file the suit in his mother's name for damages against Tatia Saheb promising that he would secure to Dada from Rs. 20,000 to Rs. 25,000 as damages and in consideration for that Dada was to pay him Rs. 3,000. Dada was made to execute the promissory note as evidence of the bargain and it was made out in the name of Shambhuprasad, as it was thought it would not look well if Surajmal's name appeared on it. After the suit was settled Surajmal asked him for Rs. 3,000, but as he had only received Rs. 9,000 instead of the larger amount promised, Dada refused to pay. Thereupon Surajmal put up Bhagwandas, Shambhuprasad having died, to file the suit.

Then follows the passage complained of in the plaint. The writer remarks that 'the bare recital of the main allegations of Dada was sufficient to reveal very grave misconduct on the part of the Solicitor if the charges were well-founded,' and proceeds to comment on these allegations. In the second article the writer, after again setting out what he considered to be the allegations of Dada in his defence, states that these allegations were largely developed in the cross-examination of Surajmal and that when the plaintiff withdrew on the second day, these allegations remained unanswered. After commenting on Surajmal's cross-examination he concluded:—"It seems to us undesirable in the public interest that the matter should be left at the stage it had reached when the plaintiff thought fit to withdraw from the case."

Paragraph 7 of the plaint sets out the innuendo that the words in the passages complained of meant, and were understood to mean, that the plaintiff had been guilty of dishonourable and unprofessional conduct in his practice as a Solicitor, that the plaintiff had cheated and defrauded his client, Tatia Saheb, that he was a dishonest witness and an unscrupulous Solicitor.

The first defendant in his written statement denies the innuendo set out in paragraph 7 of the plaint.

He says that the words, in so far as they consist of statements of facts, are a fair and accurate report of the facts put in evidence at the trial of Suit No. 837 of 1915 published bona fide and without malice and, in so far as they consist of expressions of opinion, they are fair and honest comments made in good faith and without malice upon the said facts which are matters of public interest.

That is a defence of fair comment and not a justification: Digby v. Financial News,

SURAJMAL V. HORNIMAN.

Limited (1). But paragraph 6 states "as to such portion of the said words, if any, as are not facts put in evidence at the trial of the said suit the same is true in substance and in fact."

It is unfortunate that the plaintiff did not ask for particulars of the statements referred to in this paragraph.

For the articles profess to comment only on what was made public at the trial, and, if in the articles there were no statements of facts which were not made public, there was no necessity for that paragraph.

Mr. Bahadurji, however, had to admit that the articles did contain statements of such facts but as far as I could gather, his case was that there was nothing which it was necessary for him to justify.

The law as to what is fair comment and what it is sufficient to prove to justify fair comment has been very clearly stated in Digby v. Financial News, Limited (1). The plaintiff had issued an advertisement for a partner to complete the formation of a syndicate. One Carruthers wrote asking particulars, which were given to him together with certain reports and other documents. Carruthers handed these to the defendant, who wrote an article commenting satirically on the advertisement and upon the particulars and documents sent by the plaintiff to Carruthers. The defendant pleaded that the facts on which the comment was based were true, and the case came before the Court on a summons taken out by the plaintiff for further particulars of the statements said to be true. In allowing an appeal from an order for further particulars Cozens-Hardy, L. J., said:—

"It is essential that the defendants... must show that the documents sent by the plaintiff to Carruthers really contained the statements which the newspaper article stated they contained. That, I think, is all that is meant by paragraph 8 of the defence, when it says that 'in so far as the said words consist of statements of fact, the same are in their natural and ordinary signification true in substance and in fact.' I cannot read that paragraph as in any way raising the issue whether the statements made in the documents were true."

And Collins, M. R., said:—

"Comment, in order to be fair, must be based upon facts, and if a defendant cannot show that his comments contain no misstatements of fact, he cannot prove a defence of fair comment. The usual way to begin such a plea is by asserting that the facts on which the comment is based are true, that is, that the defendant has made no misstatements in formulating the materials upon which he has commented. If the defendant makes a misstatement of any of the facts upon which he comments, it at once negatives the possibility of his comment being fair."

In Hunt v. Star Newspaper Co. (2), Fletcher Moulton, L. J., said:—

"In the first place, comment in order to be justifiable as fair comment must appear as comment and must not be so mixed up with the facts that the reader cannot distinguish between what is report and what is comment... The justice of this rule is obvious. If the facts are stated separately and the comment appears as an inference drawn from those facts, any injustice that it might do will be to some extent negatived by the reader seeing the grounds upon which the unfavourable inference is based. But if fact and comment be intermingled so that it is not reasonably clear what portion purports to be inference, he will naturally suppose that the injurious statements are based on adequate grounds known to the writer, though not necessarily set out by him."

And Cozens-Hardy, M. R., said:—

"But there still remains the question whether, if, and only if, the facts are substantially true, the comment made by the defendants, based upon those true facts, was fair and such as might, in the opinion of the Jury, be reasonably made. I cannot do better than adopt the language of Kennedy, J., in Joynt v. Cycle Trade Publishing Co. (3). 'The comment must... not misstate facts, because a comment cannot be fair which is built upon facts which are not truly stated, and, further, it must not convey imputations of an evil sort, except so far as the facts, truly stated, warrant the imputation.' And in Dakhyl v. Labouchere (4) Lord Atkinson said: 'A personal attack may form part of a fair comment upon given facts truly stated if it be warranted by those facts—in other words, in my view, if it be a reasonable inference from those facts. Whether the personal attack in any given case can reasonably be inferred from the truly stated facts upon which it purports to be a comment is a matter of law for the determination of the Judge,...but if he should rule that this inference is capable of being reasonably drawn, it is for the Jury to determine whether in that particular case it ought to be drawn.' "

Lastly, comment may sometimes consist in the statement of a fact and may be held to be comment if the fact so stated appears to be a deduction or conclusion come to by the writer from other facts stated or referred to by him or in the common knowledge of the person writing and those to whom the words are addressed and from which his conclusion may reasonably be inferred: see O'Brien v. Marquis of Salisbury (5).

Now I come to the evidence of the circumstances under which these articles came to be written.

When the first defendant after reading the report of the trial came to the conclusion that there should be a further inquiry, he asked his Sub-Editor to procure the attendance of Nanabhoy.

Surajmal was reported to have said in his evidence: "His managing clerk then (1909) was Nanabhoy Cowasji Engineer. He had remained with him for five years. Now he had dispensed with his services and he was on hostile terms with him." With that evidence before him to send for Nanabhoy was a very indiscreet step on the part of the 1st defendant, if he wanted to write a fair comment on the report of the trial, for it is difficult to escape from thinking that the first defendant must have expected to hear from Nanabhoy something to Surajmal's detriment. All the necessary materials for an article he could have obtained from Messrs. Ardeshir, Hormusji, Dinshaw & Co., defendants' Solicitors. Though the first defendant was probably not aware of it, there was ample justification for Surajmal's statement regarding his late managing clerk. Nanabhoy left his service at the end of November 1914 and went to Mr. Vachha, Solicitor. He took Dada with him as a client for Mr. Vachha, and, immediately after correspondence was opened by Mr. Vachha with Surajmal which resulted in Suit No. 1499 of 1914 being filed by Dada against Surajmal for an account. Nanabhoy attended to that suit. A reference to the Commissioner was directed and to the account filed by Surajmal, Nanabhoy drew up objections and surcharges, totalling about Rs. 73,000. He also instigated Dada, during the pendency of the suit, to call upon the Police to institute an enquiry regarding one of the items in the account and he was looking after Dada's defence in the suit filed against him by Bhagwandas.

By February 1916, Dada seems to have got tired of Vachha as his Solicitor, for he discharged him and signed warrants in both suits in favour of Messrs. Ardeshir, Hormusji, Dinshaw & Co. The immediate result was a consent decree in Suit No. 1499 of 1914, whereby this suit was dismissed and a decree was passed in favour of Surajmal on his counter claim for over Rs. 1,300. Nanabhoy's advice cost Dada over Rs. 5,000 in costs. Nanabhoy also was disappointed at not having received a larger bonus than Rs. 5,000 from Surajmal for the business procured by him. He wrote a letter to one Laxmidas in which he said he was asking for Rs. 30,000.

On the first occasion when Nanabhoy saw the first defendant he was asked if he could procure the record of the case. On the second occasion he brought a copy of the plaint and proceedings and observations for defendant's Counsel. First defendant knew that Nanabhoy was with Mr. Vachha and he understood when he got these observations that they had been drawn in Mr. Vachha's office. It has now been proved that they were drawn by Mr.

Vachha and read without correction by Nanabhoy. Nanabhoy did say they were drawn by another clerk Thakurdas and approved by him, but I must believe Mr. Vachha. When Dada changed his Attorneys Mr. Vachha kept all the papers and Messrs. Ardesbir, Hormusji, Dinsbaw & Co. had to get copies of the proceedings from the plaintiff's Solicitors. They did not draw any fresh observations from Dada's instructions for some reason not apparent, and Counsel at the hearing had nothing in their briefs except copies of the pleadings with the documents annexed thereto. Unfortunately for himself the 1st defendant read Mr. Vachha's observations, and, though it is denied, I think he probably had some conversation with Nanabhoy about them. Since the first defendant was thirsting for information it seems very improbable that Nanabhoy should have handed over the papers and then departed. It may be noted here that these observations contained a virulent attack against Surajmal's conduct as a Solicitor, though the writer conceded that had nothing to do with the merits of the case he was dealing with. First defendant must also have obtained before he wrote the second article some notes of the evidence given by the first two witnesses at the trial, which was not set out at length in the Chronicle's report.

I now come to the articles of the 7th and 15th March.

There can be no doubt, I think, that reading the articles as a whole, the passages complained of contain the innuendoes set out in paragraph 7 of the plaint. The first defendant candidly admitted that in his opinion the legitimate inference to be drawn from the report of the case was that Bhagwandas was the nominee of Surajmal in the suit filed by him and the comment in the passages complained of certainly amounts to this, that in the opinion of the writer Dada's defence was a true one and Surajmal was deliberately evading answering questions which he was able to answer, by pretending that his memory had failed him. Was then the first defendant's comment on the report of the trial fair comment tested by the rules to which I have referred above? In the first place, was it based upon facts truly stated or were there misstatements of facts, and in this letter there must be included the omission of important facts, for unless a report which is being commented on is fairly set out the comment cannot possibly be fair.

It cannot be said that the report of the case was properly set out before the comment began. True, the effect of the pleadings is set out but pleadings are very different from evidence, and nothing is said about the evidence given on oath by Surajmal in examination-in-chief, denying the allegations made against him by Dada. His cross-examination is referred to in language which leads the reader to infer that he completely broke down, and the first defendant writes, 'the case was suddenly withdrawn, the Judge appropriately remarking that the plaintiff had adopted a very wise course.' The Judge used those words for reasons only known to himself; they certainly are not apparent from the report, but the addition of the word 'appropriately' by the first defendant cannot be commended under the circumstances, and gives a clue to the state of his mind when commencing his comments. It is obvious that saturated with Mr. Vachha's observations he was ready to pass judgment on a case the trial of which had only just commenced. His first remark is, "that the plaintiff was merely the creature of Mr. Surajmal admits of little doubt in view of the circumstances revealed." The word "little" is evidently equivalent to "no." He continues, "and that Mr. Surajmal should have thus been content to have the case withdrawn and the very ugly allegations made against him left unrefuted is a matter which demands further inquiry."

Of course, if Bhagwandas was Surajmal's nominee, then Surajmal was the person who gave the word for the plaintiff to withdraw, but the recorded circumstances nowhere point inevitably to the conclusion; and if 'unrefuted' means 'disproved by the decisions of the Court,' then Surajmal was content that the allegation against him should go unrefuted. No doubt 'not disproved' may be the dictionary meaning of unrefuted, but in the second article the first defendant writes that 'the allegations remained unanswered', and it can hardly be contested that 'unanswered' ordinarily means 'uncontradicted'; 'answer' means a reply to a charge, a defence, so the denial of an allegation is an answer to the making of it and not only does it seem clear that the first defendant used the word 'unrefuted' as equivalent to 'unanswered,' but I fancy that most men would read it in the same sense. The point, however, is not very material, as I have already observed that the fact that Surajmal denied on oath these allegations should have been stated before the comment commenced.

The passage proceeds, "if the charge that he deliberately instigated one of his clients to bring an action for damages against another of his clients, sending him to another Solicitor for the purpose and then arranging a settlement over that Solicitor's head, were true, then it is perfectly clear that Mr. Surajmal would not be a suitable person for the practice of the honourable profession of a Solicitor."

Then follow the words containing a very remarkable admission: "As regards the last named point it may be as well to elucidate the matter a little further on the basis of the defendant's allegations though the matter was not fully revealed in Court."

"it is alleged that, in spite of the fact that the defendant was represented in this suit against Tatia Sahab by another firm of Solicitors, Mr. Surajmal settled the whole matter direct with him and then wrote to the other Solicitors stating: 'We are informed by our client's agent that the above suit has been settled by the parties out of Court . . . We are informed that your client has written to you accordingly.' As a matter of fact there was no intervention on the part of any 'agent' at all. The matter was settled between Mr. Dada and Mr. Surajmal direct and the latter wrote this letter, it is alleged, to prevent it being known that he had communicated with or seen Dada in the absence of his Solicitor."

The allegations are that Surajmal, after instigating Dada to file a suit against his own client, Tatia Sahab, sends him to another Solicitor to file the suit, but after that had been done, arranged the settlement of the suit with Dada without letting Dada's Solicitor know what was happening.

Truly the matter was not revealed in Court nor in any of the proceedings; it was revealed solely in the observations in possession of the first defendant, which no one had seen except Mr. Vachha and Nanabhoy. A very lame attempt was made to show that the matter was revealed in this passage in paragraph 4 of the written statement of Dada:

"The said suit against the said Tatia Sahab Holkar was settled by Mr. Surajmal with the defendant for Rs. 9,000 damages. When Mr. Surajmal gave the defendant a cheque in payment of Rs. 9,000 he demanded payment for himself of Rs. 3,000 under the said promissory note, but the defendant declined to pay the same as Mr. Surajmal's promise was to get this defendant at least Rs. 20,000 by way of damages."

Strictly speaking, it is a breach of professional etiquette for a Solicitor appearing for one party to have any conversation or any dealing with the opposite party except through his Solicitor, if he has one. According to Mr. Surajmal this rule is not always observed in Bombay, as he seemed to think there was nothing wrong in settling direct with the opposing party provided his Solicitor's costs were secured. But how can any reasonable person spell out of the passage in the written statement which I have just quoted a charge by Dada against Surajmal of having broken this rule of professional etiquette, and I may note here that there is nothing in the written statement about Surajmal sending Dada to Mr. D'Cunha. Now, it is transparently clear that whatever the first defendant may say now as to the meaning he read out of that passage, he would never have said a word in his article on this matter if it had not been that he had these observations before him, and it is purely an afterthought to say that the passage in the written statement contained the charge made in the observations. It is obvious that Counsel, when drawing the written statement from these observations, deliberately and rightly refrained from reproducing this charge, considering Mr. Vachha's remark, 'it is submitted that this act of Mr. Surajmal to hold communication with Dada in the absence of Dada's Solicitor, Mr. D'Cunha, was highly improper, but we think we are not concerned with that here.'

But the first defendant made a worse blunder. Even if it can be said that it was alleged in the proceedings that Mr. Surajmal settled the whole matter direct with Dada it certainly was never alleged anywhere that Surajmal then wrote to the other Solicitor stating: "We are informed by our client's agent that the above suit has been settled by the parties out of Court... We are informed that your client has written to you accordingly."

This was taken direct from the observations and what is more startling, the comment is also taken direct from the observations. What justification was there for the first defendant stating that the contents of Surajmal's letters which he got from the observations were not only untrue, but were so written deliberately in order to screen the breach of etiquette committed by him?

This brings me to the second article, where these allegations from the observations are again repeated with the further fact added that Surajmal paid Dada with his own cheque. That statement has now been proved to be false by the production of Tatia Saheb's cheque. It is difficult to see what object the first defendant would have had in laying such extraordinary stress on these facts which he had gathered from the observations, unless he wished whilst making a personal attack on Surajmal on a matter outside the case to drive home the inference he drew from the circumstances actually revealed that Bhagwan-das was the nominee of Surajmal and that all Dada's allegations against him were true.

For, after referring to the allegations of the defendant including those which were never made, he goes on to tell his readers that they were largely developed in the cross-examination of Surajmal by Mr. Davar, which was unfinished at the close of the day.

As a matter of fact the cross-examination on the allegation actually made had hardly begun as Mr. Davar had practically no instructions, and the first defendant's remarks as regards Surajmal's memory were singularly unfortunate.

Surajmal could not remember what he said to Dada when Dada heard of Khambatta's agreement and asked Surajmal what he should do or whether he told Dada to go to other Attorneys. He could hardly be expected to remember the first, but if he told Dada to go to other Attorneys, as he was acting for Tatia Saheb, that was the right thing to say.

The only suspicious failure of memory as appearing from the report was as regards the draft of the notice to be sent to Tatia Saheb claiming damages. First defendant might well presume that the questions put to Surajmal were founded on evidence in possession of Dada's legal advisers. As a matter of fact they had no such evidence, it was never suggested in the observations and these questions were scandalous questions which, under the rules which govern Counsel's duties in cross-examining a witness, should never have been put. Mr. Vachha had been subpoenaed to produce two drafts prepared by Surajmal when the suit was settled. He came to Court with these and showed them to Dada's Counsel. According to the statement made to me by Mr. Davar, Mr. Vachha, who had nothing to do with the case, said to him, "ask the witness whether he drafted the notice to Tatia Saheb, he won't deny it." So Mr. Davar put the question, and although Surajmal first denied it, the question was persisted in and he was bullied into going so far as to say he could not remember whether he had drafted the notice. His explanation now given here is that he was flustered by Counsel's persistent questions and seeing papers in Counsel's hands which were the drafts referred to above, he got frightened and said he could not remember. This is an excellent example of the abuse of the powers of cross-examination (see note at end), though of course first defendant was entitled to draw his inference from what he read, and was entitled to assume that there was some foundation for the questions. This, however, only shows the danger of commenting on evidence which has remained incomplete owing to a case having come to a premature end. If this case had gone on it would have been proved, as it has now been proved, that Mr. D'Cunha drafted the notice on Dada's instructions.

As to the words "other matters of importance he had also forgotten," they were grossly unfair and the first defendant's attempt to explain them was ludicrous.

It is obvious, therefore, that following the rulings I have cited I must hold that the first defendant has misstated the facts on which his comment was based. He has laid the greatest stress on allegations which were never revealed to the public to support the conclusions he arrived at and has, moreover, accepted those allegations as true. The defence of fair comment must, therefore, inevitably fail. I must also find that from the report of the case before the public, as far as it went, it could not reasonably be inferred that Bhugwandas was the nominee of Surajmal, that is to say, using the word 'infer' in its strongest sense.

'Infer' is a general term for drawing a logical conclusion from given data or premises, it is rarely used in the sense of 'conclude', it generally denotes a step in the process of reasoning, though it frequently implies little more than surmise. It is necessary, therefore, to consider the form of the inferences arrived at by the first defendant in order to see whether they are reasonable, and it is obvious that they are definite conclusions. It would have been reasonable to infer from the fact that Bhagwandas withdrew his case that he was apprehensive that Dada would be able to succeed in his defence and prove that Bhagwandas was the nominee of Surajmal, or that it was possible that Bhugwandas was the nominee of Surajmal, it was not reasonable to infer that Bhugwandas was the nominee of Surajmal. The former are true inferences. The latter is a conclusion. The first defendant has confused inference with assumption, he has accepted as true anything that was suggested by the one side and discarded as untrue anything that was said by the other side, without any discrimination and without any attempt to weigh the merits of the respective cases.

On the given data it was impossible for any one to draw an inference in the nature of a conclusion.

If the inference had been of a less conclusive character, I might have held it reasonable, and performing the functions of a Jury I might have held that it ought to have been made. Though when more than one reasonable inference can be drawn from given data, it would hardly be fair comment to draw the most unfavourable one without pointing out that others more favourable could be drawn.

The suggestions made more than once that the facts revealed necessitated a further inquiry were superfluous. What need of further inquiry? Mr. Horniman had conducted the inquiry. The accused had been convicted in absentia.

On the question of damages I must take into account the fact that a most virulent attack has been made upon the plaintiff in his professional capacity and that no attempt has been made by the defendants to express regret for having published a libel when it had become obvious that conclusions had been come to on data insufficient by themselves, apart from the fact that some of them were not legally available.

This is a flagrant instance of trial by newspaper under the guise of fair comment. The limits which are set to the rights of newspapers to comment on matters of public interest are extremely wide and there is, therefore, all the more necessity for caution to see that they are not overstepped, and that the fundamental principle that none should be condemned unheard is adhered to.

There will be a decree for the plaintiff for Rs. 3,000 and costs.

NOTE.—Since this judgment was delivered, it has been brought to my notice that my remarks regarding the cross-examination of Surajmal by Mr. Davar may give rise to some misapprehension as I did not mention the particular rules which govern Counsel's duties in cross-examining a witness which I had then in my mind, and I, therefore, think it desirable that this should be done.

Counsel takes his instructions for conducting a case from the Solicitor instructing him, and from none else. He is not entitled to rely on facts within his own knowledge. Nor is he entitled to put questions unless there be some foundation for asking them. If he is instructed by his Solicitor to put a certain question he may assume that the Solicitor has some foundation for so instructing him, but if it is such a question as is referred to in section 148 of the Indian Evidence Act, he must observe the provisions of section 149.

The question put by Mr. Davar, whether Surajmal had drafted the notice, was not put on instructions from Mr. Nariman, the Solicitor in the case instructing him, but was put at the suggestion of Mr. Vachha, an outsider, and was without foundation. My criticism of Mr. Davar's cross-examination was confined solely to this point. I should have had no fault to find with the form of it if he had relied on well founded instructions from Mr. Nariman.

SURAJMAL V. HORNIMAN.

The defendants appealed and the Court (Scott, C. J., and Heaton, J.) delivered the following

JUDGMENT.

SCOTT, C. J.—The question is whether the 1st defendant, in writing two articles in the Bombay Chronicle upon certain proceedings in the High Court which had just terminated, exceeded the limits of fair comment. The articles were headed, one of the 7th March, "A Solicitor and his clients," and the other of the 15th March, "A matter for investigation."

The plaintiff is a Solicitor of the High Court.

In a suit filed by him as Solicitor for one Bhugwandas upon a promissory note for Rs. 3,000, made in favour of Shambhuprasad deceased, the brother of Bhugwandas, against Dada, the maker of the note, the defendant pleaded that the suit was instigated by Surajmal (the present plaintiff) and that the note was really passed to secure to Surajmal, who was the employer of Shambhuprasad, the sum of Rs. 3,000 as his reward in the event of his settling for Rs. 20,000 or upwards a suit filed in the name of Dada's mother against Surajmal's client, Tatia Saheb Holkar. Dada pleaded that though a settlement was effected by Surajmal it was for Rs. 9,000 only and therefore the promissory note was without consideration. Dada's case was set out in detail in paragraph 4 of his written statement, which is as follows:—

"4. The defendant says that he received no consideration for the said promissory note and that the same was passed by him in the name of the said Shambhuprasad Goculdas as the nominee of Mr. Surajmal with whom the said deceased was serving as a clerk, under the following circumstances.

"On the 27th February 1912, the defendant had entered into an agreement with one Tatia Saheb Holkar for the purchase from the latter of his bungalow situate at Napean Sea Road at the price of Rs. 66,000. The agreement was entered into by the defendant in the name of his mother Hajiani Ashidbai. The said Tatia Saheb Holkar was unable to carry out the said agreement as he had, prior thereto, entered into another agreement for the sale of the same property to one M. C. Khambatta, who obtained a decree for specific performance of his contract in suit No. 443 of 1912 filed in this Honourable Court against the said Tatia Saheb Holkar. In the said suit the said Tatya Saheb Holkar was represented by Messrs. Surajmal & Co. After the decision in the said suit Mr. Surajmal instigated this defendant to file a suit against the said Tatia Saheb Holkar for breach of his contract with this defendant for the sale to him of the said property. This defendant was unwilling to file any such suit as the said Tatia Saheb Holkar was willing to repay this defendant the amount of earnest money with interest, but Mr. Surajmal advised this defendant that he was entitled to damages for breach of the said contract and said that he (Mr. Surajmal) would use his influence with his client, the said Tatia Saheb Holkar, and get him to pay this defendant the sum of Rs. 20,000 to Rs. 25,000 by way of damages. Accordingly this defendant filed a suit against the said Tatia Saheb Holkar in this Honourable Court claiming Rs. 30,000 as damages. During the pendency of this suit it was arranged that if the defendant obtained Rs. 20,000 to Rs. 25,000 by way of damages, Surajmal was to be paid Rs. 3,000 by the defendant, and in consequence of the said arrangement the promissory note sued on was passed in favour of the said Shambhuprasad G. Gandhi as the latter said that it would not look good for the note to be in the name of Mr. Surajmal.

"The said suit against the said Tatia Saheb Holkar was settled by Mr. Surajmal with this defendant for Rs. 9,000 for damages. When Mr. Surajmal gave this defendant a cheque in payment for Rs. 9,000 he demanded payment for himself of Rs. 3,000 under the said promissory note, but the defendant declined to pay the same as Mr. Surajmal's promise was to get this defendant at least Rs. 20,000 by way of damages.

"For over seven years past the defendant used to entrust large sums of money to Mr. Surajmal for the purpose of being invested on mortgages and purchase of immoveable properties. As Mr. Surajmal from time to time evaded rendering an account of his moneys to the defendant, the latter filed a suit against him, being Suit No. 1499 of 1914, for accounts. The said suit is still pending."

By paragraph 5 Dada submitted that Surajmal was a necessary party to the suit. The parties went to trial and the case came on before Davar, J., on the 26th February 1916. The issues raised at the hearing were:—

"(1) Whether the plaintiff has any interest in the promissory note?

(2) Whether Rs. 3,000 were advanced to the defendant by Shambhuprasad as alleged in the plaint?

(3) Whether the promissory note was not executed under circumstances mentioned in paragraph 4 of the written statement.

(4) Whether the said Shambhuprasad was not the nominee of Mr. Surajmal?

(5) If so, whether Mr. Surajmal is not a necessary party to the suit?

(6) Whether the defendant is entitled to a decree for his counter-claim?"

The plaintiff called two witnesses as to the making of the note and the payment of consideration in cash and called Surajmal to deny the allegations of the defendant as to the circumstances under which the note was passed in order perhaps to show that Surajmal was not a necessary party, for the onus of proving the allegations in paragraph 4 of the written statement was on the defendant. Surajmal's cross-examination commenced on the first day of the hearing, but was not concluded when the Court rose in the evening and the case stood over for further hearing on Monday the 28th. It had been elicited in the cross-examination that Tatia Saheb Holkar and Dada were both at the date of the note profitable clients of Surajmal. That Holkar after agreeing to sell to Dada or his mother a property at Nepean Sea Road was sued by one Khambatta for specific performance of an earlier contract for sale of the same property. That Surajmal had conducted the defence of Holkar in that suit after having advertised for Dada or his mother, the purchaser of the property. That after

Khambatta had filed his suit for specific performance Dada had sent a notice of claim for damages for breach of contract to Holkar. The last answers of Surajmal in his cross-examination were as follows:—

"I don't remember if Dada consulted me before sending the notice. I did not write the notice on behalf of the defendant. I think D'Cunha did. Defendant asked me what to do when he heard of Tatia Saheb's agreement with Khambatta. I don't remember what I told him. I don't remember if I drafted a notice on behalf of the defendant. I will not swear that I did not. I did not send defendant to D'Cunha. I don't remember if I gave a draft of a notice to be taken to D'Cunha to be written by him and addressed to me. I can't say whether I did it or did not. I do not remember if I told the defendant to go to some other Solicitor, saying that I would act for Holkar."

When the Court rose the cross-examining Counsel had not reached the question of the alleged settlement by Surajmal of Dada's mother's suit against Tatia Saheb Holkar. The cross-examination, however, was not continued for when the Court sat again on the 28th February, the plaintiff Bhugwandas consented to a decree dismissing the suit with costs.

Reports of the proceedings, which are substantially accurate, appeared in the Bombay Chronicle, of which the 1st defendant Horniman is Editor, on the 28th and 29th February, and these reports were brought to the notice of the latter by the Sub-Editor. Upon those reports, with an exception to be mentioned hereafter, were based the articles complained of as libellous by the plaintiff and defended by the defendants as fair comment made in good faith on facts put in evidence being matters of public interest. The defendants plead that such portions of the articles, if any, as are neither facts put in evidence at the trial nor fair comment the same were true in substance and in fact.

The plea "of facts put in evidence" has been taken throughout the trial of this libel action to include the allegations of the defendant in his written statement.

The learned trial Judge decided the case in favour of the plaintiff and awarded him Rs. 3,000 as damages.

SURAJMAL V. HORNIMAN.

The matters principally complained of are the following passages in the first article:—

(a) "That the plaintiff was merely the creature of Mr. Surajmal admits of very little doubt in view of the circumstances revealed."

(b) "That Mr. Surajmal should have been thus content to have the case withdrawn and the very ugly allegations made against him left unrefuted is a matter which demands further inquiry."

(c) "If the charge that he deliberately instigated one of his clients to bring an action for damages against another of his clients, sending him to another Solicitor for the purpose and then arranging a settlement over that Solicitor's head, were true, then it is perfectly clear that Mr. Surajmal would not be a suitable person for the practice of the honourable profession of a Solicitor."

"As regards the last named point it may be well to elucidate the matter a little further, on the basis of the defendant's allegations, though the matter was not fully revealed in Court. It is alleged that in spite of the fact that the defendant was represented in his suit against Tatia Seheb by another firm of Solicitors, Mr. Surajmal settled the whole matter direct with him and then wrote to the other Solicitors stating: 'We are informed by our client's agent that the above suit has been settled by the parties out of Court....We are informed that your client has written to you accordingly.' As a matter of fact there was no intervention on the part of any 'agent' at all. The matter was settled between Mr. Dada and Mr. Surajmal direct and the latter wrote this letter, it is alleged, to prevent it being known that he had communicated with or seen Dada in the absence of his Solicitor. That, again, is conduct which requires explanation, and we trust that Mr. Surajmal will be called upon to give such explanation, as well as that of the other allegations made against him, by the Chief Justice or the Law Society."

In the second article:

"(a) That Mr. Surajmal settled this suit for Rs. 9,000 over the head of the Solicitor who was acting for Mr. Dada, dealing with the latter direct and paying to him his own cheque while he afterwards wrote to Mr. Dada's Solicitor a letter stating that his (Surajmal's) firm had been informed by the Tatia Saheb's agent that the suit had been settled by the parties out of Court, whereas, as a matter of fact, there was no intervention by the agent and the cheque was given by Mr. Surajmal Mehta himself."

"(b) The allegations of the defendant were largely developed in the cross-examination of Mr. Surajmal Mehta by Mr. Davar and he was still under cross examination when the case was adjourned on the first day. When it was resumed on the second day the plaintiff withdrew and the allegations remained unanswered. In regard to these grave allegations Mr. Surajmal was unable to remember whether, etc."

It is urged for the plaintiff that no comment can be fair which is not built on facts truly stated and that here we have facts not truly stated: Per Cozens-Hardy, M. R., in Hunt v. Star Newspaper Company (2). In qualification of this general observation other dicta must be borne in mind:—

"It is only, as was said by Bowen, L. J., in Merivale v. Carson (6), when the writer goes beyond the limits of fair criticism that his criticism passes into the region of libel at all. It is for the Jury to consider what impression would be produced in the mind of an unprejudiced reader who reads the report straight through knowing nothing about the case beforehand. They must not dwell too much on isolated passages, they must consider the report as a whole. If there are such deviations from absolute accuracy as to make the comment unfair, they must find for the plaintiff; but, if there are no such deviations, or the deviation is minute and within the latitude of fair discussion, and within the region of that diversity of opinion which may be fairly and reasonably entertained by different persons upon the same subject matter, they should find for the defendant." SURAJMAL V. HORNIMAN.

"It must be assumed that a man is entitled to entertain any opinion he pleases, however wrong, exaggerated, or violent it may be, and it must be left to the Jury to say whether the mode of expression exceeds the reasonable limits of fair criticism." [Merivale v. Carson (6).]

The matter commented on must be actual fact. "The very statement, however,... assumes the matters of fact commented upon to be somehow or other ascertained. It does not mean that a man may invent facts, and comment on the facts so invented, in what would be a fair and bona fide manner on the supposition that the facts were true... If the facts as a comment upon which the publication is sought to be excused do not exist, the foundation of the plea fails." [Lefroy v. Burnside (8).]

The defendant will not, however, be liable for trivial mistakes made accidentally, for it is not to be expected that a public journalist will always be infallible. [Woodgate v. Ridout (9).]

The facts in the present case are of two classes : (1) the pleadings in the promissory note suit ; the evidence recorded therein and the result of the trial ; (2) copies of certain documents which came to the hands of the defendant contained in observations for Counsel for Dada, which defendant did not know had not in fact reached the hands of Counsel.

No exception is taken on the plaintiff's behalf to the materials falling under group (1) but as I understood there was a suggestion, but nothing more, that the materials in group (2) could not properly form the subject of fair comment. It is, however, certain that the document referred to under group (2), namely, the letter of Surajmal & Co. to D'Cunha was in fact written and sent by the plaintiff to D'Cunha. It is, therefore, not only a fact in the sense of materials but an unimpeachable fact. It is not invented. It did exist, and was true; therefore, it was an ascertained fact within Lefroy v. Burnside (8).

The learned Judge, as to the first passage complained of, was of opinion that though there was some foundation for the inference that the plaintiff Bhugwandas was the creature of Surajmal, the inference was stated in too positive a manner to entitle the defendant Horniman to the protection of fair comment.

In this connection the following observations by Lord Chief Justice Cockburn to the Jury in Risk Allah Bey v. Whitehurst (10) (a case of comment on the proceedings at a trial of the plaintiff for murder) are in point:—

"If a public writer in the press should write that which turns out not to be founded upon the inference he draws, and is unable to justify the conclusion he has arrived at, yet if he has acted in good faith in the discharge of his duty, bringing to it the amount of care, reason, and judgment which a man who takes upon himself to discuss public questions is bound to bring, so that the Jury is of opinion that he has acted reasonably and properly, he will be protected by that privilege, although he may turn out to have been in error."

So also in Hunter v. Sharpe (11) (a case of medical advertisement), it was laid down that a writer, in commenting upon matters of public interest, is protected and excused if in writing honestly and with reasonable moderation and self-control he makes, through mistaken inferences on the matters of fact involved, defamatory statements the truth of which he cannot substantiate.

In Lefroy v. Burnside (8), already referred to, Pales, C. B., said: "It was contended during the argument that the statement of one fact cannot be excused as fair comment upon another fact. That proposition is, in my opinion, far too wide, and I cannot concur in it; but I think that when a matter of fact is to be excused as comment upon another fact, the fact alleged and sought to be excused must be a reasonable inference from the facts alleged, and upon which it is a comment. Whether the fact averred be capable of being reasonably inferred from such other facts is a matter of law... If... it be capable of being inferred, whether in the particular case it ought to be inferred is for the Jury".

I can find nothing in the articles to indicate that the writer was not discussing the position of Surajmal, as disclosed in the materials available, in perfect good faith and with such care, reason and judgment as a man is bound to bring to the discussion of matters of public interest. He had before him the allegations of Dada which denied consideration for the note and alleged Shambhuprasad to be the nominee of Surajmal. He had the hopelessly contradictory evidence of the two witnesses called to prove the making of the note and the payment to Dada. He had the statements in the evidence of Surajmal that he did not remember his acts with regard to certain matters connected with the recent litigation between his two clients Dada and Tatia Saheb Holkar. The writer also knew that plaintiff's agreement to the dismissal of the suit with costs was equivalent to an admission that his case could not be substantiated and was very suggestive of the conclusion that the defendant's case was true.

Under these circumstances it was, in my opinion, a fair inference that the plaintiff was the creature of Surajmal.

As to the second passage complained of, it is contended that to say that Surajmal left allegations against him "unrefuted" is false and an unfair misstatement. I do not agree with this contention. I think "unrefuted" means "not disproved" or "left standing as matters in controversy", not merely "undenied." That this was the meaning of the writer is evident from the second passage complained of in the second article: "The allegations of defendant were largely developed, etc."

As regards the third passage complained of, the question turns on the interpretation put by the writer upon an admitted letter of Surajmal in which it is said: "We are informed by our client's agent that the above suit has been settled... We are informed that our client has written to you accordingly". Counsel for the plaintiff contends that the writer's comment that as a matter of fact there was no intervention on the part of any agent at all is false as Tatia Saheb's agent Vinayakrao had taken part in the settlement of the suit. The defendant's Counsel contends that the statement that there was no intervention on the part of any agent refers to "we are informed by our client's agent," and does not amount to an allegation that the agent had no hand in the settlement, but only that the knowledge of the settlement was not derived from the agent as Surajmal had himself a direct hand in it. I think the passage is fairly open to the interpretation suggested for the defence, though the comprehensive form of the denial of the agent's intervention might lead to the inference contended for by the plaintiff's Counsel. The further passage that Surajmal wrote the letter "to prevent it being known that he had communicated with or seen Dada in the absence of his Solicitor" is a statement of one of the defendant's allegations gathered from the brief which had been shown to the writer. The writer's own comment is that Surajmal's conduct in the matter requires explanation, a comment which, it seems to me, is not unreasonable.

As regards the first passage complained of in the second article, it is complained that the writer has invented the statement that Surajmal gave Dada his own cheque for the cheque given was in fact Tatia Saheb Holkar's. The first defendant says he so interpreted paragraph 4 of the written statement of Dada. Though the reading was mistaken I see no reason for holding it was not Mr. Horniman's honest understanding of the passage. It was an accidental mistake: infallibility cannot be expected of a journalist.

The objections to the second passage complained of in the second article have already been to some extent dealt with in the discussion of the expression 'unrefuted'. Objection is also taken to the statement that "other matters of importance he had also forgotten." Mr. Horniman mentions three matters which Surajmal had forgotten which he (Horniman) thought of importance then. I should say the forgetfulness as to the advice given to Dada, when the latter asked what he should do on hearing of Tatia's agreement with Khambatta, was important and that the other matters were unimportant, but Horniman may have honestly thought them important.

I think the defence of fair comment has in the present case been obscured by the evidence that the plaintiff was allowed without objection to give on the matters left undecided in the promissory note suit. Strictly speaking, such evidence was irrelevant for the Court was only concerned with the materials upon which the comment was based and whether such comment was fair.

In the case of Woodgate v. Riadout (9), where a Solicitor—the plaintiff—being charged in a newspaper article with professional misconduct appearing in proceedings then pending and unfinished gave evidence in disproof of the comments and facts alleged, his evidence was not objected to, though the note of the reporters suggests it could have been excluded. There, however, the legal proceedings, on which the comment complained of was made, were in progress and unfinished. The matter is different here, the comment was largely suggested by the manner in which the proceedings terminated, and I venture to think that if Surajmal's evidence had not been taken, the trial Court might have arrived at the same conclusion as I have come to, namely, that the articles complained of are fair and honest comment on a matter of much public importance.

HEATON, J.—This is an appeal by Mr. Horniman, the Editor of the Bombay Chronicle, against a decree awarding to the plaintiff, Mr. Surajmal, a Solicitor of this Court, Rs. 2,000 as damages for libel. The libel is contained in two articles which appeared in the Bombay Chronicle. These articles were comments on a suit which had recently been heard before the late Mr. Justice Davar. It was a suit on a promissory note passed by a certain Mr. Dada, a former client of Mr. Surajmal, in favour of one Shambhuprasad, a clerk of that same gentleman. Shambhuprasad died and his brother Bhugwandas brought the suit, alleging that the promissory note evidenced an actual loan of Rs. 3,000 to Mr. Dada. Mr. Surajmal filed the plaint on behalf of Bhugwandas and though before the suit came to trial he had ceased to be Bhugwandas' attorney, what has been written might suggest the possibility that Mr. Surajmal had something to do with the affair. When Mr. Dada came to put in his written statement, it became apparent that Mr. Surajmal was alleged to have a very intimate connection with the matter, for Mr. Dada alleged that the real holder of the promissory note was Mr. Surajmal himself, that there had not been any loan at all but that Mr. Dada had signed the promissory note as a guarantee that he would pay Mr. Surajmal Rs. 3,000 if he recovered Rs. 20,000 or more as damages in the suit then pending. The precise terms of Mr. Dada's defence on this point are as follows:—

"The defendant says that he received no consideration for the said promissory note and that the same was passed by him in the name of the said Shambhuprasad Gokaldas as the nominee of Mr. Surajmal, with whom the said deceased was serving as a clerk under the following circumstances.

"On the 27th February 1912, the defendant had entered into an agreement with one Tatia Saheb Holkar for the purchase from the latter of his bungalow situated at Nepean Sea Road at the price of Rs. 6,000. The agreement was entered into by the defendant in the name of his mother Hajiani Ashidbai. The said Tatia Saheb Holkar was unable to carry out the said agreement, as he had prior thereto entered into another agreement for the sale of the same property to one M. C. Khambatta, who obtained a decree for specific performance of his contract in Suit No. 443 of 1912 filed in this Honourable Court against the said Tatia Saheb Holkar. In the said suit the said Tatia Saheb Holkar was represented by Messrs. Surajmal and Co. After the decision of the said suit Mr. Surajmal instigated this defendant to file a suit against the said Tatia Saheb Holkar for breach of his contract with this defendant for the sale to him of the said property. This defendant was unwilling to file any such suit as the said Tatia Saheb Holkar was willing to repay this defendant the amount of earnest money with interest, but Mr. Surajmal advised this defendant that he was entitled to damages for breach of the said contract and said that he (Mr.

SURAJMAL V. HORNIMAN.

Surajmal) would use his influence with his client the said Tatia Saheb Holkar and get him to pay this defendant the sum of Rs. 20,000 to Rs. 25,000 by way of damages. Accordingly this defendant filed a suit against the said Tatia Saheb Holkar in this Honourable Court claiming Rs. 30,000 as damages. During the pendency of this suit it was arranged that if the defendant obtained Rs. 20,000 to Rs. 25,000 by way of damages Mr. Surajmal was to be paid Rs. 3,000 by the defendant, and in consequence of the said arrangement the promissory note sued on was passed in favour of the said Shambhuprasad G. Gandhi as the latter said that it would not look good for the note to be in the name of Mr. Surajmal.

"The said suit against the said Tatia Saheb Holkar was settled by Mr. Surajmal with this defendant for Rs. 9,000 for damages. When Mr. Surajmal gave this defendant a cheque in payment of Rs. 9,000 he demanded payment for himself of Rs. 3,000 under the said promissory note, but the defendant declined to pay the same as Mr. Surajmal's promise was to get this defendant at least Rs. 20,000 by way of damages "

It is material here to note that in effect Mr. Dada charged two matters (1) that the person really bringing the suit was Mr. Surajmal and not Bhugwandas and that the claim as made was a false claim; and (2) that Mr. Surajmal as a Solicitor had behaved in a very questionable manner in the matter of the suit between Mr. Dada and Tatia Saheb Holkar.

The suit on the promissory note duly came on for hearing but by that time Mr. Surajmal had ceased to be Bhugwandas' Attorney. Two witnesses were called to prove the loan of Rs. 3,000 and under cross examination apparently presented a sorry appearance. Then Mr. Surajmal appeared as a witness, but not to prove the loan. He appeared as a witness to refute Mr. Dada's attack on himself, and he did this early in the case though he might have waited until the defendant had given evidence and secured the advantage of exposing the defendant to cross-examination before he himself appeared as a witness. He did not appear to say that there was a loan or to speak to the promissory note sued on. He deposed that he had nothing to do with that promissory note and on that part of the case was, as events happened, never cross-examined. He was cross-examined, however, as to his part in the suit between Mr. Dada and Tatia Saheb Holkar and undoubtedly he did not acquit himself very well; for he professed himself unable to remember certain matters which he might fairly be expected to recollect. There the case ended for the day and on the following Monday when the case was called on, the plaintiff Bhugwandas consented to the claim being dismissed with costs and the Judge observed that he had adopted a wise course. Mr. Dada consequently did not appear as a witness and was not examined or cross-examined.

The articles complained of by the plaintiff Mr. Surajmal have been quoted from fully by my Lord the Chief Justice and I need not repeat the quotations. On the facts appearing, I think the writer would have been within the limits of fair comment had he said that the claim made by Bhugwandas was extremely suspicious, indeed probably false, and that the allegations against Mr. Surajmal, both as to professional misconduct and as to his part in Bhugwandas' suit, had not, owing to the collapse of the case, been satisfactorily met and that they demanded further and fuller enquiry. That would have been legitimate comment. But Mr. Horniman went further than this. He wrote: "That the plaintiff (Bhugwandas) was merely the creature of Mr. Surajmal admits of little doubt in view of the circumstances revealed". This, when taken with the rest of the article in which it appears, amounts to saying that Mr. Surajmal, there was little doubt, had committed the serious criminal offence of engineering a false claim. It is a grievous thing to say of any man, an atrocious thing to say of a Solicitor, unless it is true or unless there are the strongest grounds for saying it. It is not true: Mr. Horniman does not contend that it is true. Then were there strong grounds for saying it? I think the grounds were not strong enough. What were they?

SURAJMAL v. HORNIMAN.

(1) Mr. Dada alleged in his written statement that the claim on the promissory note was false and that it was engineered by Mr. Surajmal, and described in detail how this was so because of Mr. Surajmal's intimate connection with the suit between Mr. Dada and Tatia Saheb Holkar.

(2) The claim on the promissory note was probably a false claim, for it had completely broken down.

(3) Mr. Surajmal had undoubtedly been intimately connected with Tatia Saheb Holkar's suit.

(4) The promissory note was in favour of a person who at the time it was made was Mr. Surajmal's clerk.

(5) Mr. Surajmal had presented the plaint in the suit on the promissory note.

(6) He had given evidence in that suit on the side of the plaintiff and had apparently not acquitted himself satisfactorily.

What were the circumstances on the other side?

(1) There was no ostensible connection between Tatia Saheb's suit and the promissory note or the suit on it.

(7) Everything that Mr. Dada asserted, except this connection, might be perfectly true and yet would not indicate that Mr. Surajmal was the real owner of the promissory note; apart from Mr. Dada's allegations, there was no ostensible or inherently probable connection between the two suits.

(3) Mr. Surajmal had not directly supported the claim on the promissory note.

(4) He had appeared as a witness in circumstances which placed him at a greater disadvantage than there was any need for; in other words, he had adopted the earliest and most courageous method of clearing his character.

(5) He was not cross-examined as to his direct connection with the promissory note, so any inferences as to what would have transpired had he been so cross-examined were absolutely conjectural.

(6) He had failed, in so far as he failed under cross-examination, merely on matters concerning the suit between Mr. Dada and Tatia Saheb Holkar.

(7) Mr. Dada had not been examined or cross-examined, so his story remained untested.

Treating myself as a Jury I should hold on these circumstances that it was not fair comment to write as Mr. Horniman wrote. It was, of course, apparently quite possible that what Mr. Dada alleged was true; it was a view which undoubtedly a reasonable man might have adopted. But it was a very conjectural view; especially as Mr. Surajmal had not been cross-examined about the promissory note and as Mr. Dada had not given evidence. To adopt that view meant reliance to far too great an extent on the untested assertions of Mr. Dada, not supported by anything in the cross-examination of Mr. Surajmal which bore directly on the making of the promissory note or the question who was its real owner. It is not to my thinking fair comment on so conjectural a foundation to write in a newspaper of a person by name that probably he has committed what is in effect a serious criminal offence.

In writing as he did, it is quite plain to my mind that Mr. Horniman eschewed impartiality; he took sides and became a partisan. This is natural enough when we become aware of the kind of enquiry Mr. Horniman made before writing the articles. He not only had before him the pleadings in the suit and the evidence as reported in the Bombay Chronicle, but he saw a Mr. Engineer about the case. Mr. Engineer knew a great deal about it. He was a former clerk of Mr. Surajmal and at the time the articles were written was on bad terms with him. Mr. Engineer also had had to do with preparing Mr. Dada's defence and supplied Mr. Horniman with a copy of observations prepared for Mr. Dada's Counsel. These observations had not in fact been given to or read by the Counsel for Mr. Dada at or before the hearing of the suit; but they had been prepared and they described the whole matter in the most unfavourable light for Mr. Surajmal. It is unlikely that Mr. Horniman would be led to an impartial view of the case by seeing Mr. Engineer or by reading the observations. Now a journalist or an Editor is not bound to be impartial, but when he becomes a partisan he takes greater risks, though no doubt he writes more interesting matter than when he remains impartial. This is more especially so when the writing gives currency to charges reflecting very seriously on the honesty and professional conduct of an individual. I do not use the word 'partisan' in any derogatory sense but according to its true meaning. We are almost all of us partisans when we take to criticism, and the law allows a great latitude to partisan criticism of the public utterances and doings of public men; of persons who advertise themselves; of books, plays, works of art and so forth; but not so much latitude to criticism of the honesty and reputation of individuals. Public policy encourages freedom of speech in the one case, not in the other, and the standard of fair comment is different in the two classes of cases.

The question before us is almost, if not quite entirely, one of fact and not of law; what is fair comment never has been, and presumably never will be, defined. It is a matter for a Judge of facts to determine in each particular case in the light of the circumstances of the case. But I have said that the standard of fair comment when a person's personal character is assailed is different from the standard where there is merely criticism of public matters. That may appear to be a statement of law, though personally I think it is not, but merely an indication of the frame of mind in which as a Judge of facts I approach the case. But if it is a statement of law there is, it seems to me, excellent authority for it. I rely on the concluding part of the judgment in Wason v. Walter (12), especially this passage:—

"As to the latter, the Jury were told that they must be satisfied that the article was an honest and fair comment on the facts,—in other words, that, in the first place, they must be satisfied that the comments had been made with an honest belief in their justice, but that this was not enough, inasmuch as such belief might originate in the blindness of party zeal, or in personal or political aversion; that a person taking upon himself publicly to criticise and to condemn the conduct or motives of another must bring to the task, not only an honest sense of justice, but also a reasonable degree of judgment and moderation, so that the result may be what a Jury shall deem, under the circumstances of the case, a fair and legitimate criticism on the conduct and motives of the party who is the object of censure."

in the case of Hunt v. Star Newspaper Company (2) and especially on this passage at page 321:

"Any other interpretation would amount to saying that, where facts were only sufficient to raise a suspicion of a criminal or disgraceful motive, a writer might allege such motive as a fact and protect himself under the plea of fair comment. No such latitude is allowed by English Law."

As compared with the accusation of a serious criminal offence, the further accusation of unprofessional conduct is less important; though it has occupied a large share of the attention of the Judges both here and in the trial Court. Taken by themselves the portions of the articles relating to the professional misconduct are certainly less unfair than the portions relating to the criminal offence; but they are so mingled together and so interrelated that it is impossible to say what would be the character of the articles had they been confined to the case of professional misconduct.

It is enough to sustain the decree of the trial Court that the comments on the accusation of a criminal offence are found not to be fair comment and I think that decree should be sustained. But I do not think that Macleod, J.'s judgment on the libel regarding professional misconduct is shown to be wrong. The writer set out one absolute misstatement of fact about the cheque; and one assertion that "it is alleged," whereas it was not so alleged anywhere in the proceedings before the Court. Whether these were excusable misstatements, and if so whether the general effect of the allegations justified the articles, are questions of fact and I am far from sure that Macleod, J.'s conclusions were wrong on those questions of fact.

SCOTT, C. J.—In this case the appeal from the Original Side was heard by this Bench of two Judges, and upon their differing, the question is whether the appeal should be decided in accordance with the majority of the Judges who heard the case, including the trial Judge, or in accordance with the opinion of the senior Judge of the Court. The first result would follow if section 95 of the Civil Procedure Code applied; the second result would follow if clause 36 of the Letters Patent applied. It can hardly be said that there is any long-standing practice in regard to such appeals from the Original Side where there is a difference of opinion in this Court. Until this year, I am only aware of one case in which the Judges have differed in a case of appeal from the Original Side. That was the case of Jehangir v. Secretary of State (13). There the provisions of section 575 of the Code were applied: the differing Judges referred the point to a third Judge, and the decision was given in accordance with the view of the majority. There was no argument upon the point, and the question was not raised whether clause 36 of the Letters Patent should not be preferred. A few weeks ago the members of this Bench differed in another case from the Original Side, and the point of law upon which they differed was, following the precedent in Jehangir's case (13), referred to two other Judges for decision. So far as I know, these are the only cases in this Court in which the point might have been argued, but it was not argued in either case.

We have now heard full argument upon the question, and we are of opinion that clause 36 of the Letters Patent applies. Section 4, clause (1), of the Civil Procedure Code lays down that: "In the absence of any specific provision to the contrary, nothing in this Code shall be deemed to limit or otherwise affect any...special form of procedure prescribed, by or under any other law for the time being in force"; and clause (2) of that section shows that clause (1) was intended to be of general application. There can be no doubt that the provisions of the Letters Patent have prescribed special forms of procedure in certain cases, inter alia, where Judges of the same Bench have differed. That the Letters Patent in all cases is paramount with regard to Original Side matters appears to us to be clear from the provisions of section 129 of the Code, which says that:—

"Notwithstanding anything in this Code, any High Court established under the Indian High Courts Act, 1861, may make such rules not inconsistent with the Letters Patent establishing it to regulate its own procedure in the exercise of its original civil jurisdiction as it shall think fit, and nothing herein contained shall affect the validity of any such rules in force at the commencement of this Code."

The Original Side Rules are concerned not only with the trial of cases by the trial Judge, but also with the trial of appeals arising in the original jurisdiction, and here we have an indication that in such cases nothing should be done which is inconsistent with the Letters Patent.

It has been urged that if the sections of the Civil Procedure Code in relation to appeals and the rules enacted thereunder do not apply, there is nothing which will apply to the trial of appeals from the Original Side in the High Court. Section 4, however, does not prevent the application of the Code except where special forms of procedure are prescribed by the Letters Patent and the rules made under the High Courts Act and Letters Patent. It is only in the cases thus specially provided for that the provisions of the Code are excluded.

It is to be noted that in a somewhat analogous case the Privy Council, in their judgment in Hurrish Chunder Chowdhry v. Kalisunderi Debi (14), held that section 588 of the Code of 1882 did not apply, and as a consequence, clause 15 of the Letters Patent relating to judgments was applied. Again, in two other High Courts, in Madras, as reported in Roop Laul v. Lakshmi Doss (15) and in Allahabad, as reported in Lachman Singh v. Ram Lagan Singh (16), the Judges of those Courts have come to the same conclusion as we now arrive at.

The result will be that the decision of the Senior Judge will prevail, the decree will be reversed and the suit dismissed, but without costs as two Judges have decided in favour of the plaintiff and only one in favour of the defendant.

HEATON, J.—I concur.

The plaintiff appealed under clause 15 of the Letters Patent, and the Court after hearing Mr. Strangman, Advocate-General, (with him Mr. Mulla), for the Appellant, and Mr. Setalvad (with him Messrs. Bahadurji and B. J. Desai), for Respondents Nos. 1 and 2, delivered the following a decree of a Bench of this Court consisting of the Chief Justice and Heaton, J. These learned Judges having differed in opinion, it was held that the judgment of the Chief Justice must prevail, i.e., that the suit must be dismissed. The plaintiff consequently brings the present appeal.

The plaintiff is a Solicitor of this Court and the suit was filed to obtain damages for libel alleged to be contained in two articles which appeared in The Bombay Chronicle and were admittedly written by the Editor of that journal, the first defendant. To him I shall refer in future as the defendant, as the substantial defence is made on his behalf.

The circumstances in which the articles complained of came to be written are as follows: Among the plaintiff's clients were two well-to-do men, one Dada and one Tatia Saheb Holkar. In 1912, Dada, in the name of his mother, Ashidbai, entered into an agreement with Holkar for the purchase of a valuable house, the property of Holkar. But Holkar was unable to carry out this agreement as he had already agreed to sell the house to one Khambatta, who obtained against him a decree for specific performance. Dada then instituted a suit against Holkar claiming damages for breach of the contract of sale, and this suit was ultimately settled in January 1914 by the payment of Rs. 3,000 by Holkar to Dada. At this time there was in the service of the plaintiff a clerk named Shambhuprasad, who died in June 1914, leaving a brother named Bhugwandas. In July 1915, Bhugwandas, through his Solicitor, the plaintiff, filed a suit on a promissory note for Rs. 3,000, executed by Dada in favour of Shambhuprasad. The suit was instituted as a short cause, but, a written statement being filed by Dada in August, the plaintiff was discharged as Solicitor on the record on 9th September 1915. Stated shortly, Dada's defence to this suit was that the promissory note had been passed without consideration, that Shambhuprasad was the mere nominee or prete nom of the plaintiff, and that the note was passed on an understanding with the plaintiff that he was to be paid Rs. 3,000 if, as he promised, he succeeded in obtaining for Dada a sum exceeding Rs. 20,000 as damages in Dada's suit against Holkar. Dada went on to plead that, as he had received only Rs. 9,000 in his suit against Holkar, he had refused to honour the promissory note, and hence the suit brought against him by the plaintiff in the name of Bhugwandas. Bhugwandas's suit came on for hearing before the late Davar, J., on Saturday the 26th February 1916. Issues were raised, among them being the issue whether, as Dada contended, the plaintiff was a necessary party. On the Saturday two witnesses were called by Bhugwandas as to the promissory note, but admittedly these witnesses' evidence was not such as any Court could accept. Then the plaintiff went into the witness-box, being an indispensable witness for Bhugwandas, and denied generally the truth of the allegations made against him in Dada's written statement. At this hearing a beginning was made of the cross-examination of the plaintiff, but this cross-examination was far from being finished when the Court rose for the day, and the case stood over till the following Monday, the 28th February. On the case being called on on the Monday, Bhugwandas, through his Counsel, immediately submitted to a decree dismissing the suit with costs, the learned Judge observing that in taking this course Bhugwandas had acted very wisely. The present plaintiff made no intervention either by way of protest or by way of application to the learned judge for an enquiry into the charges made in the written statement; he acquiesced in the dismissal of the suit with costs, and there matters rested for the time. A week later, that is, on 7th March, appeared the first of the two articles now complained of, but again the plaintiff made no sign. On the 15th March, the newspaper published the second of the two articles, and on the 18th March the plaintiff filed the present suit.

The question is, whether these articles libelled the plaintiff, in other words, whether the defendant in these articles has transgressed the limits of fair comment allowed to a journalist. I agree with the Chief Justice in thinking that this question must be answered in the defendant's favour. I find that all material facts are truly stated in the articles, though it may be that there are one or two small deviations from absolute accuracy on minor points which are of no influence on the conclusions, and

SURAJMAL V. HORNIMAN.

I find that the conclusions are such as ought to be drawn from the premises by a critic bringing to his work the amount of care, reason and judgment which is required of a journalist.

In the first place, it is not alleged that there was any pre-existing malice or ill-will between the parties, and it is not denied that the subject-matter of the articles, the conduct of a Solicitor of this Court, as disclosed in proceedings in this Court, is a topic of public interest and importance. Then I must give it as my own opinion, after a careful reading of the articles, that the real object of them is, not to condemn the plaintiff out of hand, but to pray for further investigation into serious allegations which had been made on solemn affirmation against his integrity, and which were still left in the region of controversy.

I now read the material passages from the articles complained of, as those passages are set out in paragraphs 5 and 6 of the plaint:—

"This bare recital of the main allegations of the defendant in the case is sufficient to reveal very grave misconduct on the part of a Solicitor, if the allegations were well-founded. As to that, after the first day's hearing and while Mr. Surajmal was still under a severe cross-examination, in which he suffered from some lapses of memory, the case was suddenly withdrawn, the Judge, Sir Dinshaw Davar, appropriately remarking that the plaintiff had adopted a very wise course. That the plaintiff was merely the creature of Mr. Surajmal admits of little doubt, in view of the circumstances revealed. And that Mr. Surajmal should have thus been content to have the case withdrawn and the very ugly allegations made against him left unrefuted is a matter which demands further inquiry. If the charge that he deliberately instigated one of his clients to bring an action for damages against another of his clients, sending him to another Solicitor for the purpose, and then arranging a settlement over that Solicitor's head, were true then it is perfectly clear that Mr. Surajmal would not be a suitable person for the practice of the honourable profession of a Solicitor."

"As regards the last named point it may be as well to elucidate the matter a little further, on the basis of the defendant's allegations, though the matter was not fully revealed in Court. It is alleged that in spite of the fact that the defendant was represented in his suit against Tatia Saheb by another firm of Solicitors, Mr. Surajmal settled the whole matter direct with him and then wrote to the other Solicitors stating: 'We are informed by our client's agent that the above suit has been settled by the parties out of Court..... We are informed that your client has written to you accordingly.' As a matter of fact there was no intervention on the part of any "agent" at all. The matter was settled between Mr. Dada and Mr. Surajmal direct and the latter wrote this letter, it is alleged, to prevent it being known that he had communicated with or seen Dada in the absence of his Solicitor. That, again, is conduct which requires explanation, and we trust that Mr. Surajmal will be called upon to give such explanation, as well as that of other allegations made against him, by the Chief Justice or the Law Society."

"That Mr. Surajmal Mehta settled this suit for Rs. 9,000 over the head of the Solicitor who was acting for Mr. Dada, dealing with the latter direct and paying to him his own cheque while he afterwards wrote to Mr. Dada's Solicitor a letter stating that his (Surajmal's) firm had been informed by the Tatia Saheb's agent that the suit had been settled by the parties out of Court, whereas, as a matter of fact, there was no intervention by the agent and the cheque was given by Mr. Surajmal Mehta himself. The allegations of the defendant were largely developed in the cross-examination of Mr. Surajmal Mehta by Mr. Davar and he was still under cross-examination when the case was adjourned on the first day. When it was resumed on the 2nd day the plaintiff withdrew and the allegations remained unanswered. In regard to these grave allegations Mr. Surajmal was unable to remember whether the version of the defence put to him was true or not. He did not remember whether the defendant went to the other Solicitor, Mr. D'Cunha, at his suggestion or not, nor did he remember whether a draft of the notice sent by the defendant to Tatia Saheb was written by him and given to the defendant to be taken to Mr. D'Cunha. Other matters of importance he had also forgotten. Since it is to be presumed that these questions were not put without the existence of evidence in the possession of the defendant to back them up, it seems to us undesirable in the public interest that the matter should be left at a stage it had reached when the plaintiff thought fit to withdraw the case."

As the case has been argued before us by the learned Advocate-General for the plaintiff, the imputations complained of as libellous fall into two classes and may conveniently be summarised as follows:—

(a) the imputation that in bringing an unsustainable suit against Dada, Bhugwandas was acting merely as the creature of the plaintiff, who acquiesced in the dismissal of the suit, though Dada's charges against him were thus left unrefuted and unanswered;

(b) the imputation that the plaintiff was guilty of grossly unprofessional conduct in the manner in which he settled Dada's suit against Holkar and in writing an untrue letter with the object of disguising that misconduct.

In regard to point (a) the defendant pleaded fair comment: in regard to (b) the defence was justification quoad the facts stated, and, for the rest, fair comment.

So far as concerns the law, the principal authorities bearing upon the question of libel by a journalist are cited and considered in the judgments of the Chief Justice and Heaton, J.

In the view I take of the case no useful purpose would be served by any further discussion of these authorities. So far as the question of law concerns this appeal, I do not think we need travel far beyond the decision of the Court of Appeal in Hunt v. Star Newspaper Company (2), where Czens-Hardy, M. R., said:—"The defence of fair comment only arises in the event of the plea of justification failing, but the plea of justification may fail by reason of the facts stated not being substantially true." Here, of course, on the first charge the plea of fair comment is the only point for consideration, for there is no plea of justification; but I quote the passage to show that the Master of the Rolls required only that the statement of facts should be, not absolutely, but substantially, true. It is true that the adverb is not repeated in the judgments of the Lords Justices, but the learned Advocate-General admits that he cannot demand more than that the facts stated should be substantially true. In the same case Fletcher Moulton, L. J., as he then was, lays down the law in the words used by Lord Atkinson in Dakhyl v. Labouchere (4), pointing out that where a Judge has ruled that a personal attack can reasonably be inferred from the truly stated facts, "it is for the Jury to determine whether in that particular case the inference ought to be drawn." "In other words", the learned Lord Justice continues, "a libellous imputation is not warranted by the facts unless the Jury hold that it is a conclusion which ought to be drawn from those facts."

The only other cases to which I think it may be of advantage to refer are South Hetton Coal Company v. North-Eastern News Association (7) and Risk Allah Bey v. Whitehurst (10). I need not discuss these cases. I refer to them only as establishing propositions which, in my judgment, are not now open to controversy. These propositions are that while the defendant is bound to comment on public questions with care, reason and judgment, he is not necessarily deprived of his privilege merely because there are slight, unimportant deviations from absolute accuracy of statement, where those deviations do not affect the general fairness of the comment. The articles must be considered rather in their entirety than by separate insistence on isolated passages, and the Jury—where there is a Jury—in our case the Judges—must decide what impression would be produced on the mind of an unprejudiced reader, who, knowing nothing of the matter beforehand, read the articles straight through.

These, in my judgment, are the material propositions of law, and on the understanding that those propositions are correct, I am of opinion that the defence should prevail.

On the first imputation, which I have marked (a) above, the defendant's case appears to me particularly strong, and it is to be noticed that this is the real gravamen of the articles, the imputation marked (b) being far less serious. For professional misconduct in settling a case over the head of the SUTRAJMAL v. HORNIMAN.

Solicitor on the record is venial indeed, compared with instigating one's clerk's brother to institute a false suit. It is now admitted that, as to this first imputation, the defendant is entitled to be judged by the facts properly available to him at the time when the articles were written, without regard to facts which the plaintiff subsequently has established or sought to establish. The critical question, therefore, is: what were the facts then known to the defendant?

First, he knew that the antecedent probabilities were in favour of Dada's version, for it was obviously unlikely that Dada, a rich man, would have borrowed Rs. 3,000 from a Solicitor's clerk of very limited means. Secondly, he knew that Shambhu-prasad, to whom the note purported to be passed, was at the time the plaintiff's clerk. Thirdly, he knew that, practically from the first, Dada had put forward one and the same answer to the claim, an answer which, in the circumstances, bore, on the face of it, to any one familiar with Indian methods, a fair appearance of being true. Fourthly, and above all, he knew the fate of Bhugwandas's suit, a circumstance which spoke eloquently in favour of Dada and was difficult of reconciliation with the plaintiff's denials. Indeed, if I had been on a Jury appointed to try this issue, I should have said without any doubt that the conclusion here drawn by the defendant ought to have been drawn, and was, in fact, the only reasonable conclusion open to a disinterested mind. For, how stood the suit when the Court rose on the Saturday evening? The two witnesses called to prove the making of the note had contradicted each other beyond hope of reconciliation. And the plaintiff himself, so far forth as his cross-examination had gone, had, in my judgment, cut a pitiable figure. On this point I will content myself with quoting the passage where his cross-examination had to be broken off for the day. These are his words:—

"Dada sent a notice of claim to Holkar. I don't remember if Dada consulted me before sending the notice. I did not write the notice on behalf of defendant. I think D'Cunha did. Defendant asked me what to do when he heard of Tatia Saheb's agreement with Khambatta. I don't remember what I told him. I don't remember if I drafted a notice on behalf of the defendant. I will not swear that I did not. I did not send defendant to D'Cunha. I don't remember if I gave a draft of a notice to be taken to D'Cunha to be written by him and addressed to me. I can't say whether I did it or did not. I do not remember if I told the defendant to go to some other Solicitor saying that I would act for Holkar."

In plain English, when directly questioned whether he did not do certain thoroughly unprofessional and dishonourable things, plaintiff's only answer is that he cannot remember. Had his conscience been easy, there could have been no tax on his memory. As to the excuse that he was "frightened by Counsel," I do not believe it. That would be a good argument in the case of an illiterate villager, but is very unlikely to be true of a Bombay Solicitor.

With this cloud resting upon him on the Saturday evening, one would expect to find the plaintiff anxious to dispel it on the Monday morning. What we do find, however, is that plaintiff is spared from any further cross-examination as Bhugwandas consents to the suit being dismissed with costs, the learned Judge observing that in so doing Bhugwandas was acting very wisely. What that meant must have been manifest to all in Court. But the plaintiff stands by, acquiesces in the dismissal, and makes no sign or protest or application that the charges against him should be withdrawn or investigated. As a jurymen, I should not hesitate to draw the inference that his main anxiety was to escape further cross-examination, hoping that it would be nobody's business to investigate the charges now that Dada was satisfied. There were the two cases before the Court, that of Bhugwandas and that of Dada; Bhugwandas submitted to defeat, lest worse should happen, and it was a fair inference that Dada's account was probably true. In all this the plaintiff quietly acquiesced, and his present reasons for that acquiescence may be stated. It is enough to state them, for they carry their own comment: "On the 28th, the following Monday I was prepared," he says, "to continue my evidence, when Mr. Bihardurji, plaintiff's Counsel, informed the Court that the suit was going to be dismissed. I was not surprised. I was quite indifferent, as I was not concerned." And he remained unconcerned, and continued unconcerned even after the appearance of the first alleged libel on the 7th March. When the second article appeared on the 15th March, and it was clear that the attitude of unconcern was not likely to evade the charges, then the suit was brought on the 18th March.

It is true that, as the learned Advocate-General has urged, the plaintiff had on solemn affirmation formally denied that Bhugwandas was his nominee, and I agree that this fact ought not to have been withheld, but ought to have been stated for whatever it is worth. But the omission cannot, I think, serve as a set-off against all the evidence on the other side. I do not think it can be said that defendant designedly suppressed all reference to plaintiff's denial. I think rather he took it for granted that his readers would assume that the Solicitor charged with fraud would deny the fraud, for, except upon that implication, no further inquiry would be needed, and the gist of the articles is to demand inquiry.

On two small points of verbal criticism I think it will be enough to state my opinion summarily. As to the phrase "little doubt," the defendant is entitled to say that it means what it says, and does not mean "no doubt." As to "unrefuted," I think that "refuted" means disproved, satisfactorily met, put out of controversy; and the word 'unanswered' in its context seems to me to bear the same meaning as 'unrefuted.' On both points, therefore, I accept the interpretation offered for the defendant.

Upon this first imputation there is one misstatement of fact. According to the article it was plaintiff who explained that it would not look well if the note were taken in the Solicitor's name, whereas in fact Dada's case was that it was Shambhuprasad who offered this explanation. This inaccuracy appears to me of no consequence for three reasons: first, the plaintiff, who should know where he is libelled, has never complained of it, nor was the point ever taken till in this second appeal it was suggested by my brother Marten; secondly, it is obvious on Dada's case, that even though the actual speaker may have been Shambhuprasad, he was the mere mouthpiece of his master, the plaintiff, and, thirdly, in the fourth paragraph of Dada's written statement it was expressly asserted that the demand for Rs. 3,000 was made by the plaintiff in person.

With regard to the argument that the defendant was not justified in using the "observations" brought to him, at his request, by Engineer, the discharged clerk and avowed enemy of the plaintiff, I entirely agree that in seeking help from Engineer the defendant acted very indiscreetly, and ran very grave risks. But this circumstance will not affect the result if I am right in holding that all substantial matters of fact are truly stated, and all comments on the facts are fair within the meaning of the law as already explained. In justice to the defendant it must also be remarked that all that he acted upon was, not any verbal assurances or statements of Engineer, but three official papers which, though produced by Engineer, would naturally be assumed by the defendant to be above reproach. Indeed the present objection is confined to one of the papers, viz., the observations for Counsel, and it is the fact that these observations had never been submitted to Counsel. But the defendant did not know that, and I do not think that he is obnoxious to very grave censure if he supposed that these formal observations for Counsel had a foundation in truth. All this, however, is not, in my view, very material, because my exoneration of the defendant is based on the opinion that his facts are true and his comments fair.

I have now discussed all the arguments which were addressed to us on imputation (a), and for the reasons given I find that the defence of fair comment must succeed.

The second imputation, that which I have marked (b) above, is, as I have said, of a far less serious character, and, may, I think, be dealt with more summarily. The gist of it is that the plaintiff settled Dada's suit against Holkar in a manner contrary to professional rules or etiquette, and then,—this is "the sting of it", says the learned Advocate General—wrote an untrue letter in order to conceal the professional misconduct. The letter in question, admittedly written by plaintiff to the other Solicitor, is in these terms:

"We are informed by our client's agent that the above suit has been settled by the parties out of Court... We are informed that your client has written to you accordingly."

The question really turns on the meaning to be put upon this letter. But before that is considered, it will be convenient to notice the argument of the Advocate-General that the defendant must fail here because he is guilty of two misstatements of fact. These misstatements are, it is said, first, that, according to the article, plaintiff gave his own cheque to Dada, whereas the fact is that plaintiff gave Holkar's cheque; and, secondly, that, according to the article, there was no intervention of any agent at all, whereas the fact is that, on behalf of Holkar, his agent, Vinayakrao, took part in the settlement.

As to the first of these statements, it is admitted that it is a misstatement, and that in fact the cheque was Holkar's, and not plaintiff's. But the inaccuracy appears to me to be immaterial and to fall within the slight margin of error allowed by law because it signifies nothing, and never did signify anything, whether the cheque was the plaintiff's or Holkar's: nobody had ever suggested that the money was plaintiff's and it was common ground that it came from the pocket of Holkar. Moreover, I feel sure that the inaccuracy was a bona fide slip due to a not unnatural reading of a passage in Dada's written statement. The passage runs:—

"The said suit against Tatia Sabab Holkar was settled by Mr. Surajmal with this defendant for Rs. 9,000 for damages. When Mr. Surajmal gave this defendant a cheque in payment of Rs. 9,000, etc."

In my opinion this passage would suggest to many readers that Surajmal gave his own cheque.

As to the second alleged misstatement of fact, that brings me to a consideration of the meaning of the letter, for the question whether there is, or is not, a misstatement turns upon the meaning of the passage which I have cited from the letter. The defendant's assertion is:—

"As a matter of fact, there was no intervention on the part of any 'agent' at all. The matter was settled between Mr. Dada and Mr. Surajmal direct, and the latter wrote this letter, it is alleged, to prevent it being known that he had communicated with or seen Dada in the absence of his Solicitor."

The passage which I last quoted from Dada's written statement is, I think, sufficient answer to the contention that for these allegations the defendant had no better authority than the 'Observations'. And as I read the present excerpt from the alleged libel, what it imputes is that plaintiff settled with Holkar (or his agent) and Dada over the head of Dada's Solicitor, D'Cunha, and that there was no intermediary between plaintiff and Dada. I do not think the imputation is that Holkar was not represented at the settlement, nor would there have been any point in making such an assertion. The point is, as I understand it, that here again (according to Dada's version) the whole business was really plaintiff's though Dada was put up to file the suit, and consequently when the suit came to be settled, we find plaintiff settling on behalf of Dada without reference to Dada's then Solicitor, D'Cunha. I must say candidly that that is what the passage means to me after all the argument we have heard, so that I feel safe in saying that, at least, that is what the words may have conveyed to a fair, unprejudiced reader. But upon that meaning I find that the defence is established. For there was no reference to D'Cunha, and the letter commented on was in fact written by plaintiff.

In the present suit, no doubt, the plaintiff asserts that the settlement was made by Engineer and Vinayak without consulting him. Engineer, on the contrary, says that plaintiff took part in the settlement and that is intrinsically so much the more probable story that I believe it, though Engineer is a poor witness, and on their merits, I see little to choose between him and the plaintiff. In the suit of Bhugwandas all that the plaintiff said upon this point was: "The arrangement was brought about by Nanabhoy Cowasjee Engineer who was lately managing clerk." Further corroboration of this view is, I think, supplied by the admitted fact that plaintiff himself drafted the letter, Exhibit 2, a letter from Dada (in the name of his mother Ashidbai) to D'Cunha apprising the latter that the suit had been settled. I cannot doubt that plaintiff was himself instrumental in making this settlement with Holkar, and admittedly this was done "over the head of" i.e., without reference to Dada's Solicitor. When, therefore, we find the plaintiff writing to the other Solicitor that the plaintiff is merely "informed" of the settlement by Vinayak, I think it is perfectly fair comment to say that this is suggestio falsi, intended to conceal the fact that the settlement was made by the plaintiff himself.

On these grounds I am of opinion that on the second imputation also the defence must be allowed, in other words, the appeal fails, and this Court's order should be that the plaintiff's suit be dismissed and plaintiff should pay all costs throughout.

BEAMAN, J.—In my opinion there is no libel. Before going into the details of this case I think it desirable to get, and keep, clearly in view, some distinctions between the principal defences to a libel action, which are often confused, both in argument and in judicial pronouncement.

(1) A defendant may contend that the facts complained of are not libellous; or

(2) a defendant may claim privilege; or

(3) defend upon the ground of fair comment; or

(4) he may justify, that is, plead the truth of the facts complained of.

The first of these defences may be neglected. It always was, and still is, to some extent, a matter of law for a Judge and not of fact for a Jury. Privilege and fair comment are frequently confounded even in the dicta of most eminent English Judges. Yet they have nothing in common. Privilege implies that the matter complained of is a libel, but, in the circumstances of its publication, and more especially in the relation of the parties, is protected. Fair comment never is libel. Speaking generally, the defence of privilege is particular to the defendant seeking to avail himself of it, while fair comment is common to everybody. The defence of truth implies that the matter complained of is libellous, but if true, there is a complete answer. Fair comment may be true or it may not. The language of the law always seems to me very loose and inexact in treating of these topics. Any statement in positive form is pounced upon as a statement of fact, going beyond comment proper, and, therefore, outside the protection which the law gives to fair comment. But it is clear that if by comment is meant inference from facts truly stated, the process of inference legitimately leads to a conclusion which may be stated in positive form without losing its essential character.

Thus, that which in form is a statement of fact, may, on examination, turn out to be no more than what English Judges have called a deduction from the facts, and so, itself "fair comment" in no need of justification. Analysing logically, I should prefer the term induction to deduction, but the reasoning of the law, in comparison with the far more rigorous reasoning of logic and metaphysics, is blunt edged, and tends to conform to the notion that the law ought to be, if it is not always, the expression of the average common sense of society. It is, therefore, usually couched in the loose and general terminology of average men of average reasoning power, and while here and there it seems to aim at, seldom reaches verbal precision. These observations are not merely academic prompted by pedantry. This trial affords striking illustration both in the judgments before us, and in the arguments we have heard, of the urgent need of a preliminary and very exact analysis of the law in general, and the materials in the case to which that law is to be applied. I have carefully studied the leading English cases cited in the judgments of the trial and appeal Court, and I do not propose to refer to any of them because that study has convinced me that the attempts at definition which they contain are of very little definitive value. The most famous and now perhaps the most popular for example is that, where the defence of fair comment is set up, the Judge is first to determine, as pure matter of law, whether the inferences complained of can reasonably be drawn from the true facts and that being done in favour of the defendant, the Jury is next to determine whether the inferences ought to be drawn. Thus the final judgment is suddenly transferred, if not altogether, very largely, from the intellectual to the moral domain. It is, I think, obvious that any inference which can reasonably be drawn is to that extent a fair inference. It may not be the right inference, but that is not the point. From any given group of facts it is almost always possible to draw more than one perfectly reasonable inference. Only one of them can be the true inference, but the others may be just as fair. And for all purposes of this limited defence it is the fairness, or reasonableness of the inference or comment which is decisive, not its ultimate proved truth. The latter will often depend upon further disclosure and the disproof of the truth of the facts from which the inference was drawn. All such considerations ought to be rigorously excluded in handling a defence of fair comment.

What then is meant by "ought to be drawn?" Nothing more, I suppose, than that the average common sense of the people either accepts or rejects the inference as, although reasonable, not reasonable enough, or as appears from two of the judgments before us, that the conclusion reached by the inferential process is too positively expressed, and had much better have been stated in terms of probability. But here again it is clear that we are really deciding upon the reasonableness of the inference and nothing else. All judgments of that kind are probably influenced to a greater or less degree by the then known fact that the inference was untrue. I must pause here for a moment upon the term "inference." Inference is strictly a process from fact A to conclusion B. But the subtlest reasoning is baffled when it tries to separate the process from the conclusion, and the law, which is not subtle at all, carelessly identifies the inference with the conclusion.

For all practical purposes the use of inference for that which is reached by inference must be accepted, and will be found to raise no real difficulty. I find, then, in this dictum, no real light or guidance. For it all comes to this, that any comment or inference which the Judge thinks the facts admit, must go to the Jury and they are to say whether it is fair, that is, reasonable or not. In doing so, however, they would be affected in all probability by a sense of fair play, and allow the entrance of many factors into the verdict which a more rigorous logic would exclude. Remembering that fair comment never is libel, it is hopeless to attempt definitions of what is and what is not libel in that large class of cases. For the plain truth is that the only criterion is the verdict of the Jury in each case. If twelve honest butchers, bakers, grocers and cheesemongers say that the matter is a libel, it is, and if they say it is not, it is not, and there is the beginning and end of it. Unfortunately Judges in this country are deprived of that flexible, but, on the whole, very satisfactory, criterion, deliberately adopted by the common sense of the English people to correct the nice refinements and excessive technicality of the trained judicial mind. How necessary some such rude corrective and standard is, the divergence of judicial opinion, and the reasons which have led to it in the course of this trial amply prove. Another highly prized rule laid down in the English cases is that comment, to be fair, must be comment on facts truly stated. The wide play given to this principle in spite of its apparent rigidity will be seen later when I deal with the actual materials upon which I base my own conclusions. Sufficient to say here that, as a rule, it is almost meaningless. Fair comment is comment upon facts. In this connection only true facts are facts at all. If a "fact" be untrue, it ceases to be a "fact", and cannot, therefore, be a ground of inference. As commonly applied in argument, and sometimes in judgments, this rule then is pure tautology, and repeats as something new and added what is necessarily implied in the proposition of fair comment. But what was really meant, I think, was that the "facts" upon which the comment is founded, must be truly stated, though later they may turn out not to be true at all. For all purposes of this defence a fact may be truly stated and may yet be utterly untrue. In the case we are considering some facts may be of that kind, while others may not, and these must be proved to be true, if they have formed any material part of the ground of inference, or if they are libellous in themselves. Slurring over these distinctions, or possibly, allowing the final judgment to be swayed by the knowledge that the facts truly stated were after all untrue, accounts, I think, very largely for the conflict of judicial opinion before us. Much the most difficult part of the case turns upon a right understanding and a correct application of this factor in the law of fair comment. First, it is necessary to keep clearly apart the classes of facts I have just mentioned. Here the comment, alleged to be fair, is comment upon a trial. All the materials put in evidence at that trial, the plaint, the written statement, the evidence, and the trying Judge's comment in dismissing the suit with costs at the instance of the plaintiff are facts the truth or otherwise of which the defendant was under no legal obligation to prove. He could take them as he found them and comment upon them. It is quite irrelevant to enquire now whether they were true or false. The defendant had to state them truly, that is all. The comment went a little further, and touched upon an intimately related matter, which, as the writer said, was not fully revealed at the trial. Here the plaintiff charges him with having stated a fact which is untrue, and was not put in evidence at the trial, that is to say, a fact which the defendant himself adduced and first brought to the notice of the public. Any fact of that kind must be shown (a) to be true; or (b) to be no more than an induction from the truly stated facts; or (c) not libellous in itself; or (d) immaterial in the sense that the comment complained of is in no way strengthened by such fact, and will not be weakened by its dismissal from the ground of inference. It is only in the latter connection that I have introduced the qualification that the untrue fact stated must not be libellous in itself.

Although both Macleod and Heaton, JJ., have held that the statement, "that Bhugwandas was the creature of Surajmal admits of little doubt," went beyond the limit of fair comment, the greatest difficulty in the case, and by far the greater part of the argument before us, centres upon the plaintiff's contention that the defendant has invented two untrue facts at least, and made them ground of inference against the plaintiff. It appears to me that whatever hope of success the plaintiff and his legal advisers could have had from the beginning to the end of the trial was rooted in their confidence that they could easily prove the untruth of these facts, and so, as was said repeatedly by the Advocate-General in his argument, the plaintiff must succeed. But at no time during the ten or eleven hours he was addressing us did the Advocate-General appear to me to realise certain qualifications, both upon what was actually stated in the impugned writing, and the rule he relied on with so much assurance. I tried over and over again to bring these possible dangers before his mind, but, as far as I was able to judge, wholly without success. If the facts which were thus declared by the plaintiff to have been untruly stated, to have needed justification and not to have been justified, were eliminated from the case, there would have been very little argument before us upon the isolated question whether the comment was fair or not. I shall presently show that in my opinion no fact was untruly stated that was in any sense material to the comment, and that upon the facts truly stated the comment was fair, and, therefore, no libel. Before sorting the materials I am going to deal with, on the foregoing principles, I must advert to one point which arose for the first time at this late stage. Although the plaintiff has so strenuously relied throughout upon the untrue statement of facts, those upon which the first and most serious comment was made went virtually unchallenged. It is true that in Macleod, J.'s judgment we find him of opinion that there was a material omission, and here and there a misstatement. But such misstatements will, I believe, turn out on examination not to be so much misstatements of facts, as themselves comment. If we begin with the plaint and enquire what was the libel of which the plaintiff complained, we shall find that it does not include the point I am now dealing with. No one should know better than the plaintiff in a libel action what the libel is by which he feels himself aggrieved. He knows exactly where the shoe pinches. Apart from all other considerations I should be disposed to neglect anything in the writing as a whole which the plaintiff himself did not allege to be a libel. Now in the group of facts which had to be truly stated as ground of inference; before the defendant could contend that his conclusion that the plaintiff in Bhagwandas v. Dada was really Surajmal himself was fair comment, there is one misstatement. The written statement says that it was Shambhuprasad who suggested that the promissory note should be in his, and not in Surajmal's name, as it would not look well were it made out in favour of Surajmal. In the articles the writer says that this was Surajmal's suggestion. I believe myself that this was a purely accidental slip. It makes little or no difference whether in fact the suggestion came from Shambhuprasad, Surajmal's clerk, or from Surajmal himself, if it were made at a meeting at which Surajmal was present, or even were it made later, in his absence, with his knowledge and approval. No grievance was made of this slip at the trial or in the Appeal Court. It is not mentioned in the plaint. It had never occurred to the plaintiff or his legal advisers at any time. But towards the close of the Advocate-General's opening, this point was given him from the Bench and he eagerly availed himself of it. If we turn to the judgment of the learned Chief Justice, it is apparent that it had not at that time been taken by anybody. There the facts to be dealt with are placed in two groups, and the first in which this misstated fact would be included was said to be virtually unchallenged. I do not think we ought, now that the case has reached its final stage here, to pay any attention to this trifling error. I shall treat all the material facts upon which the inference that Bhugwandas was Surajmal's nominee was based as having been correctly stated, subject to any criticism or qualification which a close examination of Macleod, J.'s judgment may evoke.

There remain, then, (1) an alleged material omission in the group of facts upon which the inference that Bhugwandas was Surajmal's nominee was based; (2) two alleged misstatements of fact in the second group of facts, the general gist of the comment upon which was that Surajmal had been guilty of writing a letter which was, to say the least, a calculated suppressio veri, and generally of professional misconduct. These two facts are: (1) that Surajmal paid Dada his own cheque for Rs. 9,000 in settlement of the suit (Dada v. Tatia Saheb Holkar); and (2) that "as a matter of fact there was no intervention on the part of any agent," etc. It is admitted that the defendant made a mistake when he wrote that Surajmal paid Dada his own cheque. The cheque given by Surajmal to Dada was Tatia Saheb Holkar's cheque. But even were the mistake material, and later on I will show why in my opinion it was not, it was a very natural mistake. In the written statement, a fact upon which the defendant had every right to make any fair comment he chose, it is stated that "Surajmal gave me a cheque." Now, in everyday ordinary parlance, if A were to say "I had an account with B, which he settled with me personally on the basis of a reduction of ten per cent. and gave me a cheque for the amount," I suppose that ninety-nine men out of a hundred would take it for granted that B gave A his own cheque for the amount. It might turn out that he had a cheque of C for the amount, which he handed to A, but that would be an exceptional case, and anyone writing with only the information before him which was then before Horniman, might very well have written in perfect good faith that Surajmal paid Dada his own cheque. The second of the two facts alleged to be untruly stated will need a little more detailed examination and analysis in its proper place.

I think the plaintiff's case is put at its highest, and is supported by the strongest reasoning by which it could be supported, in the judgment of Macleod, J. I do not recollect that anything was added to that judgment, which could have been of any service to the plaintiff, in the Advocate-General's argument before us. Indeed, by far the weightiest consideration I have been able to discover in support of the conclusion that Horniman's first and most serious inference went beyond the limits of fair comment lies in the fact that two learned Judges, Macleod and Heaton, have been of that opinion. I think, then, that the best way of explaining why I have come to a contrary conclusion and giving my own reasons against those on the other side, will be to take these judgments and analyse them critically. I may premise that the libels complained of are really two, and distinct. The first is that Surajmal was the real plaintiff in the suit of Bhagwandas v. Dada and that that suit was, as brought, an utterly false claim to Surajmal's knowledge. The second is that Surajmal instigated Dada to file a suit against Surajmal's own client Tatia Sahab Holkar, on the understanding that Surajmal would use his influence with Holkar to settle the suit for a sum not less than Rs. 20,000 and that in consideration of Surajmal's procuring such a settlement, Dada would pay him a sum of Rs. 3,000. Further, that not only was Surajmal guilty of gross misconduct in thus setting one of his clients against another, and agreeing to take a secret commission, but that when the settlement was made, although Dada was in the hands of another Attorney—D'Cunha—Surajmal settled with him direct, and then wrote a letter to D'Cunha, conveying the idea that the settlement had been made by the parties as much behind his (Surajmal's) back as behind D'Chuna's. That Surajmal had thus been guilty of a breach of professional etiquette in settling with the client of another Attorney behind that other Attorney's back, and had been guilty of something much worse morally, in writing to that Attorney in a strain calculated to cover up this breach of professional etiquette.

In the plaint I find the plaintiff setting forth the innuendoes of which he complains, and among them that he is accused of having cheated his client, Holkar. There is nothing in the articles or the comments which goes, or, as far as I can see, could go, that length. It was grossly improper, if true, for Surajmal to have instigated Dada to file a suit against Holkar. At that time both were his clients. But on the facts as they appear in this suit, it was a perfectly good suit, and, seemingly Holkar had no defence at all. The only question would have been the quantum of damages. If Dada had gone of his own accord to another Attorney to file that suit, and had claimed Rs. 25,000 damages and Surajmal acting for Holkar had settled for Rs. 9,000 even without Holkar's knowledge in the first instance, provided that Holkar approved of the settlement on those terms, I cannot see that Surajmal would have done anything unprofessional, or anything which could possibly have been included logically in the attack which Horniman made upon him in these two articles. It would have been, I believe, an impropriety, though a very venial one, were it true that Surajmal, when the suit had been brought, settled on behalf of his client Holkar with D'Cunha's client Dada, "over the head" of D'Cunha. But there is nothing in all this which is, or comes anywhere near, cheating Holkar. This much the Advocate-General conceded when I put it to him in the course of his argument. It is very necessary, it is indeed essential, to keep all this in proper focus, and very clearly before the mind, when we have to deal with the alleged misstatement of fact contained in the passage: "As a matter of fact there was no intervention on the part of any agent, etc." For the whole argument there went upon the ground that Holkar had an agent representing him with Surajmal, and, therefore, it was untrue to say that there was no intervention on the part of any agent. Keeping these two alleged libels apart, for the present, it is to be noted that, so far as its reasoning goes, Heaton, J.'s judgment is confined to the first. There he came to the conclusion that it was not fair comment to say that there was little doubt but that Bhugwandas was Surajmal's creature, and after that, as the learned Judge very rightly said, it was unnecessary to go into the less serious charges. It is unfortunate, I venture to think, that we have thus not had the assistance of Heaton, J.'s clear practical mind upon the natural meaning in its proper context, and as a whole, of the passage in which the sentence "as a matter of fact, etc.," occurs. And I may add that while for purposes of clarity I have separated the libels, which the articles are said to contain, I do not mean to say that, except possibly in assessing damages, it matters whether both or only one are or is proved.

On a first view it might be thought that the facts out of which this suit has arisen are extremely complicated. They really are not. It would be better to lay out of the case at once and altogether the suit for account brought by Dada against Surajmal and the criminal prosecution in respect of one of its items which he set on foot against Surajmal. It may be conceded, as far as I am concerned in this judgment, that both these proceedings were instigated by Nanabhoy. It may be conceded that Nanabhoy was hostile to Surajmal. No one denies it. But a great deal of capital seems to have been made out of the fact, partly by way of prejudice, and partly to break down Nanabhoy's credit as a witness. Nanabhoy's evidence is only valuable to prove that Surajmal did in fact settle direct with Dada, and that this settlement was not effected behind the back of Surajmal, and without his knowledge. Later on, I hope to show that the defendant was not bound to "justify" here at all. I cannot help feeling, after reading the trial before Macleod, J., that the defendant's case was jeopardized by his Counsel's scrupulosity, in avoiding all semblance of justification. The defendant elected to defend upon the ground of fair comment. That is a much easier defence as a rule in such cases as this than justification. Once committed to it, defendant's Counsel fought shy of anything that might seem, however remotely, to approach justification. He did not even cross-examine Surajmal upon the fact which, owing to a step taken later by defendant's legal advisers, it is now contended, he knew very well that he must justify. It certainly was in my opinion a serious tactical blunder, first, to omit all cross-examination of Surajmal, and, then, at the closing stage of the case, to put in an application for a commission to examine Vinayak and Holkar on this very point. Either it needed justification or it did not. If it did, then most surely Surajmal ought to have been cross-examined upon it. If it did not, there was no reason at all for examining Vinayak and Holkar about it. Probably defendant's Counsel believed that he must succeed on the ground of fair comment and did not wish to take the risk of enhanced damages, should that expectation after all be falsified by anything that looked like indirect justification. It does not follow that because a defendant stakes his case upon fair comment, the conclusion so reached must be false. All that such a defence means is that the defendant does not care whether the conclusion be true or false, provided only he can show that it is a fairly reached conclusion from the premises available to him at the time he drew it. And he is in a somewhat delicate position when the plaintiff, as in all such cases he must, goes into the box and denies and denies not only the conclusions but many of the premises. Here the defendant's position was peculiarly embarrassing, since the worst conclusion he drew against the plaintiff was no more than a repetition of the defendant Dada's allegation in his written statement. When the plaintiff swore that it was quite untrue that he was the real plaintiff in Bhugwandas's suit, and that in effect, Dada's written statement was false from beginning to end, what was the defendant to do? If he had cross-examined on these points the Judge would, in all probability, have stopped him, pointing out that he had not chosen to justify. If he kept silent, as he did, the record would indicate that his conclusion was false, and that Surajmal had been grievously wronged by his inference. All that is really irrelevant, but there can be no doubt, I think, that it exercised a very great influence upon the minds of both Macleod, J., and Heaton, J. But as to this particular statement which finds no place among the facts put in evidence before Davar, J., if it were a new fact, and not an induction from such facts duly put in evidence, the defendant would clearly have been obliged to prove it. It is regrettable, then, that he made no attempt to cross-examine Surajmal on the point. The reason is probably discoverable in the uncertainty of his Counsel's mind as to his position at the time. There is a sentence in Macleod, J.'s judgment which seems to me to support this conjecture. He says that as far as he could gather, defendant's Counsel did not admit that there was any fact which he had to justify. If that were so, then a passage in the defendant's written statement had better have been wholly omitted or differently worded. In paragraph 6 the defendant says: "as to such portions of the said words, if any, as are not facts put in evidence at the trial, etc., the same is true in substance and in fact." That certainly suggests that the defendant thought some such portion there might be, and that it, at any rate, would need justification. If it was not to justify this passage in the article that Nanabhoy was called as a witness for the defence, it is not easy to understand why he was called. Then three other witnesses appear to have been examined before Macleod, J., to prove that Surajmal was really responsible for the withdrawal of Bhugwandas's suit, and after they had been examined, and Strangman for the plaintiff wanted to call evidence in rebuttal, Bahadurji for defendant said that all this evidence might be struck out, as he was not justifying. Strangman, however, on being given an option (presumably of having the evidence struck out at once, or of leaving it on record and calling evidence in rebuttal), elected to call evidence, and seems to have been allowed to do so. It is not easy in these circumstances to know whether this evidence was, in the understanding of the learned trial Judge, on the record or not at the end of the trial. I merely mention this to indicate the uncertainty and confusion which marked the conduct of the defendant's case before Macleod, J., and doubtless contributed in no small measure to the conclusion reached by that learned Judge. Heaton, J., puts it quite plainly that the inference which Horniman drew was not only of a most serious and damaging nature, but was not true. It was not contended, the learned Judge adds, that it was true. But that is surely laying too much stress on the form of the defence, and looking at the result of the trial where Surajmal, on this ground, was allowed to have it all his own way. I preface, what immediately follows, thus. It is admitted that the subject matter of these articles is of public interest. It is admitted that Horniman bore no malice to Surajmal. Nanabhoy did not go to Horniman of his own accord, Horniman sent for him because he wanted further information. He knew from the record of the case before Davar, J., that Nanabhoy had been Surajmal's managing clerk throughout the transactions which led up to the suit of Bhugwandas v. Dada. I doubt, whether, where the defence is fair comment, malice or no malice is of much importance. But where it becomes^s necessary to compute the fairness or unfairness^s of comment and the scales are fairly evenly balanced, it would be hard indeed to exclude the influence of such a factor as malice, were it proved in the writer. And there are passages in the judgment of Macleod, J., which indicate, to say no more, a feeling against the defendant on the supposition that he was actuated by something very like a malicious desire to discredit Surajmal. I think it is perfectly clear, too, that both Heaton and Macleod, JJ., were influenced to some extent by what came out at the trial before Macleod, J. This is suggested by the learned Chief Justice, and I think that the suggestion is well-founded. Yet it is quite clear that every consideration of that kind has to be banished from our minds in deciding whether, at the time the articles were written and on the facts then before the defendant, Horniman, they were or were not fair comment.

It is needless for me to say that I have a very high respect for any considered judgment of Macleod, J. Where I find that I am not able to agree with him, that sentiment compels me to state, if only as a matter of courtesy, my reasons at length. I have read Macleod, J.'s judgment several times since the hearing of this appeal came on. And I will begin my examination of his judgment in detail by saying that I believe he was much influenced by two dominant notions. First, his sense of fair play was affronted by Horniman's method of supplementing the information he had before him in the reports of the trial. Evidently, Macleod, J., thought that had Horniman been anxious solely to see this matter laid before the public in the justest light, he ought to have invited Surajmal's own explanations in the first instance. Instead of doing so he sends for Surajmal's enemy. Was that an honest way, was it a fair way of approaching the elucidation of a matter of public interest? Such I take to have been what was uppermost in Macleod, J.'s mind in more than one part of his judgment. Yet, if it means anything, it means that Horniman was acting maliciously, and this is nobody's case now. The second dominating influence easily distinguishable in Macleod, J.'s judgment was that Horniman took some of his facts and some of his comments from the observations prepared by Mr. Vatcha for Counsel in the suit of Bhagwandas v. Dada. Now I want to say here once and for all that I see no magic in the use of "Observations." No one denies that Horniman had recourse to the "Observations." No one asserts that in doing so he could claim any protection. If he stated a fact from the "Observations" which was not put in evidence at the trial, he did so at his own risk, and if it were challenged he would have to prove it. If he took comments from the "Observations" and published them verbatim, he made them his own, and they would have to be judged fair or unfair on that footing and that footing alone. It is no part of the law of fair comment that the comment must be the writer's own: he is as much entitled to publish derivative as original comment if it be fair, and he chooses to adopt the former and make it his own. But throughout his argument before us the Advocate-General appeared to think that he clinched his contention that comment was unfair, or that a fact was not true, by showing that it came literatim and, by Horniman's own admission, from the "Observations." This is very strange. Suppose that there had been no observations at all in this case, but that Nanabhoy had told Horniman orally what was stated in them. Suppose Nanabhoy had said: "Here is a letter of Surajmal. You see it suggests that he did not settle the suit with Dada direct, and did not even know that the parties had settled the suit till he was told so by an agent of his client Holkar. Now turn to Dada's written statement, and you find him swearing there that Surajmal did settle with him direct. Turn again to Surajmal's sworn testimony before Davar, J., and you don't find a word about the intervention of any agent of Holkar, but a statement that Surajmal's own managing clerk settled the case with Dada direct. My suggestion on that is that this letter is a calculated lie, intended to conceal from D'Cunha that Surajmal had settled the case behind D'Cunha's back with D'Cunha's client."

Horniman compares the letter with what appears on the record of the case, and agrees that this is the only reasonable construction which could be put upon it. Would he not then be entitled to adopt the suggestion made to him, and express it as his own comment? Would it make the slightest difference that it had been suggested to him, and might never have, else, occurred to him? None whatever that I can see. These observations presumably would have been acted on had the suit of Bhagwandas v. Dada gone on. There can be little doubt that this letter of Surajmal to D'Cunha would have been put to Surajmal, and if Dada's version were true, I do not see what other inference could possibly have been drawn from it than that which the defendant Horniman drew. Observations of this kind, I suppose, contain facts and comments, which Counsel are intended to use. It may be that the Attorney who drew these observations did not think that this part of them would be relevant or at any rate material in the suit. But there they were and read in the light of what had happened at the trial before Davar, J., I do not see why Horniman should not have used them if he believed that any fact they stated or any comment they made was true and fair. It is upon that basis that I discuss the question we have to answer and I cannot help thinking it a pity that the learned Judge, who tried the action, and the Advocate-General, who argued the appeal for Surajmal before us, should have been under what appears to me so grave a misapprehension of the significance and weight of a fact which no one denies, that Horniman did draw upon these observations in writing parts of the impugned articles. I will now go over Macleod, J.'s judgment, noting only those passages which, in my opinion, lead to wrong conclusions. I need not delay over the facts leading up to the suit of Bhagwandas and Surajmal. On the pleadings, Macleod, J., observes:—

"It is unfortunate that plaintiff did not ask for particulars of the statements referred to in this paragraph (paragraph 6 of the written statement). For the articles profess to comment only on what was made public at the trial."

Is that quite correct? The most debated part of the alleged libel is introduced by the writer's statement: "As regards the last named point, it may be as well to elucidate the matter a little further on the basis of the defendant's allegations, though the matter was not fully revealed in Court." When the learned Judge comes to deal with the evidence, he remarks:—

"With that evidence before him (defendant) to send for Nanabhoy was a very indiscreet step on the part of the defendant, if he wanted to write a fair comment on the report of the trial, for it is difficult to escape from thinking that the defendant must have expected to hear from Nanabhoy something to Surajmal's detriment."

Undoubtedly he did. The impression left on his, or for that matter anybody's mind, by the report of the trial before Davar, J., must have been most unfavourable to Surajmal. The Judge goes on to say that defendant might have obtained all the necessary information for an article from Messrs. Ardeshir, Hormusji, Dinshaw & Co. Then follows a long passage showing that Surajmal had every right to regard Nanabhoy as a bitter enemy. Later the Judge says:—

"Unfortunately for himself, defendant read Mr. Vatcha's observations and though it is denied, I think it is probable that he had some conversation with Nanabhoy about them."

Observe the word "unfortunately." Certainly it has proved unfortunate for the defendant that these observations ever came under his notice, but I doubt very much whether this should have been so, beyond, of course, this, that if defendant took any fact from these observations, he would lie under the obligation of proving it. Then the learned Judge asks:—

"Was then the defendant's comment on the report of the trial fair comment, tested by the rule to which I have referred above? In the first place, was it based upon facts truly stated, or were there misstatements of facts, and in this latter must be included the omission of important facts. For unless a report which is being commented on is fairly set out the comment cannot possibly be fair. It cannot be said that the report of the case was properly set out before the comment began."

It is to be remembered that the Chronicle had published a report of the case, and no exception has been taken to that report that I know of. It is, of course, true that that report is not reproduced in full in the articles, but it had been laid before the readers of the paper, and the articles appear to me to give a fairly accurate resume of it. The judgment continues: "True, the effect of the pleadings is set out, but pleadings are very different from evidence and nothing is said about the evidence given on oath by Surajmal in examination-in-chief, denying the allegations made against him by Dada. His cross-examination is referred to in language which leads the reader to infer that he completely broke down and the defendant writes, 'the case was suddenly withdrawn, the Judge appropriately remarking that the plaintiff had adopted a very wise course.' The Judge used those words for reasons only known to himself. They certainly are not apparent from the report but the addition of the word 'appropriately' by the 1st defendant cannot be commended." I shall later resume for myself what appear to me to be the salient features of the case tried by Davar, J. Here it is enough to say that what Macleod, J., imputes to the defendant as unjustifiable, is that he did not set forth Surajmal's examination-in-chief; and that he uses the word "appropriately" in recording Davar, J.'s remark upon the termination of the case. I think that the reasons which Macleod, J., says were known only to the learned Judge himself, and certainly do not appear on the record, are obvious enough. As to the omission to include in the articles what Surajmal said in examination-in-chief or a resume of it, all I need say here is that any one who had read the report of the case, or who had the information on record there before him, would have understood perfectly why Surajmal was called as a witness for the plaintiff and what he certainly must have said in his examination-in-chief. His cross-examination indicates that pretty clearly, and it is upon his breakdown under cross-examination and the sudden collapse of the suit while that cross-examination was in progress, that the writer wants to concentrate public attention. Then the Judge goes on: "It is obvious that saturated with Mr. Vatcha's observations he was ready to pass judgment on a case the trial of which had only just commenced." That is a curious phrase to use about a case which had ended, but of course the learned Judge meant that the trial of it had barely commenced before the plaintiff withdrew it and consented to a decree against him with costs. The judgment continues:

"His first remark is, 'that the plaintiff was merely the creature of Surajmal admits of little doubt in view of the circumstances revealed' and that Mr. Surajmal should have been thus content to have the case withdrawn and the very ugly allegations made against him left unrefuted, is a matter which demands further inquiry'."

It must be borne in mind in dealing with 'all this part of the alleged libel that Horniman inferred from the pleadings, the evidence, the nature, and the end of the suit that the defendant's version was true. The defendant had stated without reservation that Surajmal was the real plaintiff, and Bhugwandas merely his nominee. In the circumstances revealed by the trial, as the writer says, he believed that the defendant's declaration to that extent was true, and, therefore, he merely reiterates it in the sentence which Macleod, J., calls his first remark. No serious exception, I believe, could possibly be taken to the next sentence. Doubtless, the writer has already concluded that the suit was Surajmal's suit; therefore, if that is fair comment, it follows that the withdrawal of the suit was Surajmal's withdrawal, and the whole sentence goes no further than saying that Surajmal's conduct in allowing the suit to be thus withdrawn, while the ugly allegations against him were left unrefuted, certainly was a matter which demanded further inquiry. Even were Surajmal not the real plaintiff, as inferred by the writer, still he was as much interested in the suit as the plaintiff, Bhugwandas, regard being had to the written statement and the issues, and the part he had taken in it up to the time of its withdrawal, and it surely was fair comment to say that his conduct in allowing the suit to be thus withdrawn without making any protest called for further inquiry. Macleod, J., concedes that if Surajmal were the real plaintiff, then it was he who gave the word to withdraw; but he adds that "the recorded circumstances nowhere point inevitably to the conclusion, and, if 'unrefuted,' means 'disproved by the decision of the Court,' then Surajmal was content that the allegations against him should go unrefuted." Now here the learned Judge certainly adopts the view that comment, to be fair, must take the form of an inevitable inference. In my judgment that is not the law. I do not like the use of such a word as "inevitable" in such a connection. Fair comment, with which alone we are dealing, impliedly permits of a much greater latitude than the drawing of inevitable inferences. All that is required is that the inference from facts truly stated should be fair, that is, one possibly out of many equally or almost equally fair inferences. If out of three or four inferences one was inevitable in the strict sense, then all the others would cease to be reasonable inferences at all, and would not fall to be considered under the defence of fair comment. What was the inevitable inference from the facts before Horniman? If the inference he drew was not the inevitable inference, and, therefore, not fair comment, it could only be because there was an inevitable inference which excluded all others, and, speaking logically, deprived them of any semblance of reasonableness. Dare any one say that there was such an inevitable inference here, unless indeed it were the very inference Horniman drew? I will here, without quoting, dispose of Macleod, J.'s treatment of the two words "unrefuted" and "unanswered." I regret that I cannot agree with the learned Judge in saying that the use of these words by the defendant in their respective contexts necessarily means that Surajmal did not even deny Dada's allegations. So far from that being so, I think anyone would understand that the writer meant that notwithstanding any denial Surajmal may have given, the breakdown of the case in the middle of his cross-examination just at a point where he was plainly getting into deep water, and putting himself in a very compromising light, left Dada's allegations still virtually in possession of the field. Merely denying an accusation is certainly not "answering" it in the sense of the writer. Every prisoner who pleads not guilty denies the charge, but would any one understand that his mere plea had "answered" it? I think not. The learned Judge then sets forth the next two passages on which the plaintiff relies. He sums them up thus:—

"The allegations are that Surajmal, after instigating Dada to file a suit against his own client Tatia Saheb, sends him to another Solicitor to file the suit, but after that had been done, arranged the settlement of the suit with Dada without letting Dada's Solicitor know what was happening. Truly the matter was not revealed in Court, nor in any of the proceedings. It was revealed solely in the observations... which no one had seen except Mr. Vatcha and Nanabhoy."

Now much of this at any rate was revealed, as immediately appears in what the learned Judge next says, in the written statement of Dada. It is true that there is no mention there of Surajmal having sent him, Dada, to D'Cunha, but he does most distinctly say that Surajmal instigated him to file the suit against Holkar, and it is hardly necessary to add that Surajmal could not very well have acted for both plaintiff and defendant in such a suit. If he really instigated Dada to bring this suit against Holkar in the manner alleged by Dada it is certain that by implication he "sent" Dada to another Solicitor, formally to conduct that suit. The written statement of Dada again does most expressly aver that Surajmal settled the suit with him. Macleod, J., comments upon this as follows:

"But how can any reasonable person spell out of the passage in the written statement which I have just quoted a charge by Dada against Surajmal of having broken this rule of professional etiquette? And I may note here that there is nothing in the written statement about Surajmal having sent Dada to D'Cunha."

I have commented on this in anticipation. I own I find it rather difficult to follow the learned Judge in the first part of the sentences last quoted. No one ever supposed that Dada had accused Surajmal of having committed this breach of professional etiquette. It was no concern of Dada's. But he certainly did accuse Surajmal of having instigated him to bring the suit against Holkar, and he certainly did say that Surajmal settled that suit with him. Then when Surajmal's letter to D'Cunha was laid before Horniman, he comments on it in the manner above described. It is, as the writer makes pretty clear, I think, a new allegation not revealed in the proceedings before Davar, J., but connected with them, and one which might have been revealed or refuted had that trial run its course. That is all the passage in the article seems to me to mean, and if Dada's allegations were true, a conclusion already inferentially reached by the defendant, then it would follow almost of necessity that this letter was of the character imputed to it. Then the learned Judge concludes that defendant would never have written a word of this portion of the articles, if he had not had the "Observations" before him. I agree that he would not, unless the man who wrote the observations had given him the same matter to use if he chose. But as I have said, the mere fact that the observations were defendant's source of information is of no consequence or relevance whatever. The sole question is whether the fact upon which the writer is commenting now, is a fact, and, if so, whether the comments are fair. There are seemingly two facts, one, Surajmal's letter, the other, the assertion that as a matter of fact there was no intervention on the part of any agent at all. Both came out of the observations. The one as a fact, the other, I should say, as a comment upon it, fully justified by the contents of Dada's written statement, provided, of course, that statement was substantially true. Of course, as the learned Judge says, the charge made in the article is not taken direct from the written statement of Dada, but from the letter of Surajmal along with the contents of the written statement. But if it be substantially true or at any rate if it were eminently fair comment upon the materials before the writer, what can it matter that he did not take it bodily out of the written statement? The judgment proceeds:

"But the defendant made a worse blunder. Even if it can be said that it was alleged in the proceedings that Surajmal settled the whole matter direct with Dada, it certainly was never alleged anywhere that Surajmal then wrote to the other Solicitor stating, etc. This was taken direct from the observations, and what is more startling the comment is also taken direct from the observations. What justification was there then for the defendant stating that the contents of Surajmal's letter which he got from the observations were not only untrue but were so written deliberately, in order to screen the breach of etiquette committed by him?"

SURAJMAL v. BORNIMAN.

The whole passage illustrates perfectly the point of view of the learned Judge, and, in my judgment, the true cause of his having come to what I feel was a wrong conclusion upon the case. He admits, or, to be more accurate, hypothetically half admits, though with reluctance, that one part of the comment might have been upon facts put in evidence at the trial. But prefacing his next observations with the statement that the defendant committed a worse blunder, he dwells upon what nobody denies, that it was not alleged at the trial that Surajmal wrote the letter to D'Cunha and that it was false, and deliberately written to screen his professional breach of etiquette. What justification, he asks, could there be of that? And the answer is simple. Fair comment on a true fact. If it be assumed that this was a blunder on the part of the defendant, the question is prejudged. But was it? The letter, alleged or not alleged, is a fact. It is not denied. It was before the defendant, and it appears to me that he had a perfect right to comment on it in the way he did. Its truth was flatly denied by the defendant in the suit before Davar, J., in his written statement. From the course, what was elicited in, and the end of that trial defendant had inferred, and I believe we all agree that the inference was upon these materials fair inference, that the written statement was substantially true. If it was, this letter was false. Not only that but the defendant had the sworn evidence of Surajmal himself, and who should have known better that it was false? When Surajmal gave that evidence he had probably forgotten all about this letter. When it had become a prominent feature in the libel suit before Macleod, J., he materially modified the evidence he had first given, so as to explain the letter as best he could. But when defendant wrote he had only the record of the trial before Davar, J., to work upon. And had nothing ever been added to that, is there any one who could deny that the inference that the letter was false, to the extent of, at any rate, being a suppressio veri, was a fair inference? If so far the inference was not only fair, but, to use Macleod, J.'s own term, "inevitable," the reason assigned by the writer of the article for Surajmal having written this false letter, whether alleged or not, seems to me to be as clearly fair comment. It is the obvious reason, some reason there must have been, and this feature in the settlement of the suit of Dada v. Holkar is so intimately connected with the truth as a whole of the defendant's version of the facts in Bhagwandas v Dada, that although not elicited in that trial, it became fair matter for comment upon the whole case. The learned Judge appears to have held from first to last that nothing which was not put in evidence at the trial before Davar, J., could possibly be ground of inference, in commenting upon the character of that case. I do not agree. What was put in evidence there was closely related to the former suit, and any highly suspicious feature in that suit, if true, lent support to the main conclusion, which the defendant had formed, that Dada's defence was substantially true. This breach of etiquette, standing alone, was relatively unimportant, but the reason for it was sinister in the light of Dada's allegations.

Almost all the Advocate-General's force of argument was concentrated upon this much of the impugned article. It was pressed upon us, over and over again, as though in that form the point was difficult, instead of being of the simplest, that the fact stated, namely, that there was no intervention on the part of any agent was untrue, and that the innuendo that the letter was false was wholly unwarranted, because at the trial of the libel action Surajmal swore that the suit was settled by Holkar's agent, and the defendant failed to prove by Nanabhoj's evidence that it was not, and, therefore, the plaintiff must succeed. This is very crude reasoning. In the first place, it assumes that there was intervention on the part of an agent in the only sense in which that was denied as a fact in the article; in the next place, it assumes this to be an independent statement of fact by the writer of the article, which as a fact not put in evidence at the trial before Davar, J., he had to "justify", and last, it wholly overlooks the important need of keeping distinct what was before the critic when he wrote from anything that may or may not have been proved at the subsequent trial. If it can easily be shown that this apparent statement of a fact, viz., that no agent intervened in the settlement between Surajmal and Dada, was not only a fair inference, but by far the most probable and, therefore, the fairest inference to be drawn from the materials the writer had to comment upon, the whole of this argument falls to pieces, and becomes virtually irrelevant. Let me suppose that the sentence, instead of being worded compendiously as it is, had been thus cast: "But from the written statement of Dada, and the evidence of Surajmal himself on oath, it is clear that no agent intervened in the settlement between Surajmal and Dada," could any exception have been taken to it? I do not think so. And yet that is exactly what the sentence, taken in its context, really means as is made perfectly clear from what immediately follows.

The point of the passage is to show that Surajmal's letter was in essence false, and so written to conceal from D'Cunha his own direct communication with D'Cunha's client. If we had not had the evidence taken at the trial of the libel action before us, I make bold to say we should all unhesitatingly have come to the same conclusion. While I do not think that later evidence, material or even in strictness, relevant, I may add that, speaking for myself, it does not satisfy me that the letter was true. Macleod, J., is said to have believed Surajmal implicitly and to have disbelieved totally the evidence of Nana-bhoy. I am not concerned really with that evidence taken at that time. I admit that it is usually unwise to interfere with the estimate of so experienced and able a trial Judge as Macleod, J., of the value of evidence given before him. But I should say that even were our judgment upon this point to depend upon, or even to be influenced by, that evidence, its whole tenor leaves no doubt on my mind but that Surajmal knew perfectly well of the settlement with Dada before it was completed. He was in no need of being informed of it by Holkar's agent as his letter certainly suggests that he was. And, lastly, I think it almost absurd to insist that even if Holkar's agent did not intervene, that is to say, go to Dada behind Surajmal's back in effecting this settlement, yet there certainly was an agent of Holkar representing him in his dealings with Surajmal. That might have been taken for granted. There is nothing improper in it. The object of the writer was to show up an impropriety in Surajmal's method of doing business. His remarks must be read in connection with, and strictly confined to, that object. It is no answer to his statement that as a matter of fact there was no intervention on the part of any agent to reply that, between Holkar and Surajmal, the former was represented by an agent. The learned Judge then proceeds to deal with the second article in which he remarks that "these allegations taken from the observations are repeated, with a further fact added that Surajmal paid Dada with his own cheque." That was admittedly a mistake as I have already said, but I think it is quite an unimportant slip. The Judge then comments on this in these words: "It is difficult to see what object the defendant could have had in laying such extraordinary stress on these facts which he had gathered from the observations unless he wished, whilst making a personal attack on Surajmal on a matter outside the case, to drive home the inference he drew from the circumstances actually revealed, that Bhugwandas was the nominee of Surajmal and that all Dada's allegations against him were true." Precisely. That is undoubtedly what the defendant was seeking to do. But does it deprive him of his rights to comment fairly on these materials too? When the learned Judge used the word 'personal', it is plain that he suggested that the attack was in some degree malicious. But it has since been admitted that it was not. He then goes on to say that "the defendant after referring to the allegations of the defendant (in Bhugwandas's suit), including those which were never made, etc." That is putting the case as strongly as it could be put against the defendant. For, while some of the allegations were not made in the written statement of Dada, they certainly were made to Horniman, and he had to judge for himself upon the materials before him whether the allegations were probably true or false. What next follows deals with some of the comments in the article, and, for my part, even after giving the greatest weight to Macleod, J.'s opinion, I am still quite unable to see that they exceed the limits of fair comment. For example, when the learned Judge condemns the writer's comments upon Surajmal's lapses of memory, he says that these were singularly unfortunate and supports that by this process of explanation: "Surajmal could not remember what he had said to Dada when Dada heard of Khambatta's agreement and asked Surajmal what he should do, or whether he told Dada to go to other Attorneys. He could hardly be expected to remember the first, but if he told Dada to go to other Attorneys as he was acting for Tatia Saheb, that was the right thing to say." Does this fairly represent what was in the mind of the writer of the articles? Surely not. In judging Surajmal's evidence before Davar, J., it is to be remembered that he had been fully acquainted for months with the nature of the defence. He knew perfectly well what was being put to him in cross examination and why. He knew that when he was asked what he said to Dada when Dada came to him about Khambatta's prior agreement, it was being suggested that he told Dada to file a suit for damages against Tatia Saheb. With that knowledge in his mind, there was no excuse at all for giving the evasive answers he did. It is impossible, if he really had instigated Dada to do this, that he should have forgotten it or in view of the correspondence preceding the suit of Bhagwandas v. Dada, and the defendant's written statement therein, that he would not, before going into the witness-box, have searched his memory for what did pass on the occasion referred to. He could not have been taken by surprise on these points. Presumably he was there to clear his character of the aspersions cast upon it in the written statement, and this was one of the most serious of them. He could at least have said: "I do not exactly remember what I said to Dada, after this lapse of time, but I most certainly did not instigate him to file a suit for damages against Tatia Saheb." If Dada had come to Surajmal to file a suit for him against Tatia Saheb, then doubtless it would have been right for Surajmal to refuse to act for him and advise him to go to some other Attorney, if, indeed, that could be called advice at all. But that surely is glossing over the real implication of these questions and answers, an implication as well known to Surajmal as to Counsel examining him. The learned Judge admits that Surajmal's inability to remember whether he had drafted the notice to be sent to himself acting as Attorney for Holkar, was suspicious. That is putting it very mildly indeed. The suggestion was not only that Surajmal advised Dada to file a suit against Holkar, in which, of course, Surajmal could not act for him, but that he actually drafted a notice of suit for him and sent him with it to D'Cunha, in order that this notice which he himself had drafted should in due course be sent to him as Holkar's Attorney. I ask without fear of contradiction whether it is, humanly speaking, possible that after months in which to prepare himself for cross-examination upon the salient fact that he had instigated Dada to bring the suit, he should have been in any doubt at all whether he had himself drafted the notice. I say emphatically that it is not. He knew, he must have known, whether he had done such a thing, and if he had not, he could have given an unqualified denial to the suggestion. Why did he not? The explanation again is perfectly obvious. We are told that Counsel was flourishing papers when he put the questions to the witness. If Surajmal had not a clear conscience, if he had really instigated the suit, although he had not in fact drafted the notice, he might not have felt positive that he did not, he might have feared that if he denied having drafted such a notice, Counsel would next moment confront him with it. So he took refuge in the answer that he could not remember whether he had given Dada such a draft or not. Macleod, J., says that it was proved as a fact that Surajmal did not draft any such notice, but that D'Cunha drafted it under Dada's instructions. This was in the libel action. But how was the defendant to know that at the time he wrote the articles? He might very well have presumed, as Macleod, J., admits, that Counsel had instructions. But whether Counsel had or not appears to me quite immaterial. For Surajmal's inability to remember whether he had drafted the notice for Dada or not, whatever else it may or may not warrant, certainly would warrant an inference that his conscience was very far from being clear at that time, about the part he had taken in launching that suit. And that was quite enough for the defendant. I am not quite sure, whether Macleod, J., meant in the passage I am about to quote to treat the sentence in the article as a statement of fact or as comment on fact. He says: "as to the words 'other matters of importance, he had also forgotten,' they were grossly unfair, and the defendant's attempt to explain them was ludicrous." What precedes the words in the second article certainly resumes compendiously the most important points which Surajmal then swore he had forgotten, but there were minor points of detail at any rate, and one of them might fairly be called important, which Surajmal had also forgotten. As I read the words through, they merely sum up the concluding part of the cross-examination, the gist of which has just been given. It certainly would not have occurred to me on reading the article that the plaintiff could make a special grievance out of this sentence, in view of the substantial truth of what went before, and the general tenor of the passage as a whole. I should have thought that this was too near going over every line and word with a microscope, to find the minutest flaw, a method that no Jury would ever think of adopting. The learned Judge proceeds: "I must hold that the defendant has misstated the fact on which his comment is based. He has laid the greatest stress on allegations which were never revealed to the public, to support the conclusions he arrived at, and has moreover accepted those allegations as true." If by "the fact" here the learned Judge really means the sentence "other matters of importance he had also forgotten," all I can say is that that is on its face comment upon the record. It may go too far, and to that extent it may not be fair comment, but it certainly is not such a fact untruly stated as the learned Judge had in mind.

As to the allegations which were not on the record of the case before Davar, J., I fail altogether to discover more than one which can accurately be so described, and that is the letter which Surajmal wrote to D'Cunha. He did write it. Such other allegations as flow from it will be found on analysis to be no more than inferences from facts put in evidence at the trial. It is true that the writer of the article says that 'it is alleged, etc.', and that 'it is roundly alleged, etc.' and does not make it clear that these allegations were not to be found in the record of the trial before Davar, J. But what was the position? It was roundly alleged before Davar, J., that Surajmal had instigated Dada to file the suit against Holkar. It was there, too, alleged that Surajmal had settled the suit with Dada. Then this letter from Surajmal to D'Cunha is unearthed, and comments are made on it in the written statement. It is impossible to say how far this part of what was suggested by the defendant's Attorneys for use in the case might have been brought out and either proved or disproved by evidence, had the case gone on. The note by the compiler of the observations in relation to Surajmal's letter does not conclude the matter. It is almost certain, I think, that had that suit not come to so premature an end, Surajmal would have been cross-examined and pretty rigorously about the part he played in the settlement. And I see no reason to suppose that had he then admitted, as he had admitted in a measure, that the settlement was his own, though brought about by his managing clerk, he would not further have been called on to explain this letter. When the learned Judge says that defendant not only laid the greatest stress on allegations which were never revealed to the public, but accepted them as true, it means no more than, as I have tried to show already in more than one connection, that the defendant took risks of adopting a fact and making it the ground of comment. But in what immediately follows Macleod, J., went much further, for he said: "I must also find that from the report of the case before the public as far as it went it could not reasonably be inferred that Bhugwandas was the nominee of Surajmal, that is to say, using the word 'infer' in its strongest sense" If the learned Judge held that view, then he would not have allowed this question to go to a Jury at all. I can hardly believe that he really meant that. Surely, whether that conclusion was in the nature of fair comment or not must have been left to a Jury. For, with the materials before him at the time, I doubt whether any one could be found to say that the writer's inference was one which could not reasonably be drawn from the facts, although it is possible that a Jury might have thought it one which ought not to have been drawn, nor do I understand what the learned Judge means by "using the term inference in its strongest sense." An inference is always an inference, whether it be a good or a bad inference, and whether an inference could be "reasonably" drawn depends upon the degree of probability in its favour. I cannot wholly agree with Macleod, J.'s definitions, or test of reasonableness. An inference, if we must use exact terminology, is not a surmise. A surmise is rather a guess, if the word has a place at all in logical terminology. What Macleod, J., appears to be distinguishing is a loose from a close inference. He gives, to illustrate his meaning, inferences which might reasonably have been drawn, as, for example, "that it would have been reasonable to infer from the fact that Bhugwandas withdrew his case, that he was apprehensive that Dada would be able to succeed in his defence and prove that Bhugwandas was the nominee of Surajmal, or that it was possible that Bhugwandas was the nominee of Surajmal." It was not reasonable to infer that Bhugwandas was the nominee of Surajmal. Are we not drawing very fine distinctions here? If it were a reasonable inference that Bhugwandas apprehended that Dada would be able to prove that he was the creature of Surajmal, it is very much the same thing as inferring that Bhugwandas was the creature of Surajmal, for if he were not, upon what possible ground could he have apprehended that Dada would be able to prove that he was? Then follows this: "The former are true inferences. The latter is a conclusion." Every inference, as I have said before, ought to reach a conclusion, though that conclusion may be positive and unqualified or merely probable and qualified. But the distinction here drawn is one without a meaning and if I understand the learned Judge aright, what he really means is that the defendant was much too positive in stating the result of his inference, particularly as it turned out not to be true. I do not agree that the defendant has confused inference with assumption. It is in the main correct to say that he has accepted as true most, if not all, that was said on Dada's side in the case before Davar, J., and necessarily, therefore, where what Dada said was in conflict with what Surajmal said, had declined to accept the latter as true. But that position was reached by a process of perfectly legitimate inference from what was revealed at the trial as long as it was restricted to matters there put in evidence. As soon as the comment went outside that group of facts, it depended upon one ascertained and not controverted fact and a comparison of that with the conclusion inferred from the trial and its contents, viz., that Dada's version was substantially true. There, again, I see no confusion between inference and assumption. I do not agree with Macleod, J., that "on the given data it was impossible for any one to draw an inference in the nature of a conclusion." It may have been impossible for any one to come to a true conclusion by way of inference upon the data then available, because some of them turned out later to be false data, but that is quite another matter and one with which, in deciding upon the fairness or otherwise of defendant's comment, I am not concerned. I find the result of this close critical examination of what Macleod, J., really said very instructive in the light of the manner in which the judgment was used before us in argument. The impression left on the mind after a more or less casual reading of Macleod, J.'s judgment is that that learned Judge found that the defendant had based his comments on one or more material facts untruly stated, and that in one or two particulars, though here the judgment hesitates a little, the writer's comments were not fair. During the argument before us we were told, over and over again, that the sentence in the first article that 'there was no intervention, etc.,' and the corresponding sentence in the second article were utterly false and that this was found by the learned trial Judge, who had disbelieved Nanabhoy and had believed Surajmal on the point. But I have not been able to find anything in Macleod, J.'s judgment which goes that length. Indeed, upon the most careful scrutiny, I cannot find that the learned Judge has definitely found a single fact stated as a fact in the alleged libels to be untrue, except that the cheque was not, as stated, Surajmal's own cheque, but Tatia Sahēb's. I have now been over Macleod, J.'s judgement at least six times in order that I may not unwittingly do that learned Judge the least injustice in dealing with his conclusions and the means he has used in coming to them. I gather that the facts which towards the end he says that the defendant untruly stated were: (1) not a positive misstatement, but an omission to state a material fact which he ought to have stated, viz., that Surajmal had in his examination-in-chief denied on oath the defendant Dada's case as a whole; (2) that Surajmal paid Dada Rs. 9,000 by his own cheque; and (3) that the writer said that certain matters were alleged, giving the public to understand that they were alleged in the suit of Bhagwandas v. Dada, whereas in fact they were only alleged in the observations prepared for the use of Dada's Counsel in that suit. I cannot find that the learned Judge definitely points out a single one of these allegations as untrue. As to the draft notice which Surajmal is now alleged to have written and sent by Dada's hand to D'Cunha, that is not mentioned in the libel at all. We must confine ourselves strictly to the libel complained of, and so confining ourselves, and to Macleod, J.'s judgment upon it, I believe I am right in saying that I have set down every untrue fact which that learned Judge held had been made the ground of comment. It comes to this, then, that there is one untrue fact and one only, and that has been admitted from the first. It was "roundly alleged" in the suit upon which the comment was made that Surajmal had instigated Dada to file a suit against Holkar. It was roundly alleged in that suit that Surajmal settled the suit with Dada and not with Dada's Attorney, and also that at the time of that settlement Surajmal demanded the Rs. 3,000 under the promissory note upon which that suit was brought. It was not alleged specifically, as a breach of professional etiquette on Surajmal's part, that he had settled the suit over the head of D'Cunha. Nor was it alleged that he had written the letter to D'Cunha, conveying a totally false impression of what had really occurred. But these matters were alleged in the observations prepared not by Nanabhoy at all but by Vatcha. And these allegations coming under the notice of the defendant, he believed them to be true and utilized them as the ground of one comment, viz., that there was no intervention on the part of any agent, and one demand, that those in authority should take the matter up and insist upon Surajmal giving satisfactory explanations. The comment, as I have already pointed out, was fair, and, in my opinion, necessary, from the materials before the writer in the suit of Bhagwandas v. Dada. Under rigorous analysis, then, this elaborate and impressive judgment is shown to be almost void of any relevant and important content.

I will now deal, much more briefly, with Heaton, J.'s judgment in appeal. It is virtually confined to one sentence in the first article, "that the plaintiff was the creature of Surajmal admits of little doubt." Before going further I should like to point out that isolating the sentence thus from its context has given rise to some want of proportion in handling it for the purpose of the plaintiff's libel suit. It is perfectly clear, when the sentences preceding and following it are also read, that what the writer meant was this. The suit had broken down ignominiously after a feeble attempt to prove cash consideration by false evidence, just at the critical point where the cross-examination of Surajmal might have been expected to force upon him disclosures which would have substantiated Dada's defence as a whole. The Judge, in dismissing the suit, had, according to the writer, "appropriately remarked that the plaintiff had taken a wise course" and then defendant adds, connecting this with the next, which is the really important sentence, "that the plaintiff was the creature of Surajmal, etc.," and goes on "that Surajmal (now substituted for the nominal plaintiff Bhugwandas who has just been ruled out) should have been content, etc." The mere statement standing alone that the plaintiff was the creature of Surajmal, had the suit in all other respects been bona fide, would not have been libellous at all. But as soon as it became clear that the suit was Surajmal's, that he was the real plaintiff, then it became a matter of vital importance for him to refute the serious charges brought against him in the written statement, and not to let the matter drop just when that matter was being opened.

He had to prove that, although the promissory note was for his benefit, and for reasons of his own had been made out in the name of his clerk Shambhuprasad, the transaction was in all other respects honest, or, in other words, that there had been cash consideration, and not the consideration alleged by the defendant. A great deal of this judgment deals in generalities upon which I have nothing to say beyond this, that I doubt, with respect to the learned Judge, whether the standard to be applied in determining whether comment is fair or not, varies according to the station of the plaintiff, and the degree of personality in the libel. I doubt, whether there is any standard. And I am sure that if there were, it could not vary according to the factors indicated by the learned Judge. All that is essential in this connection is, whether the subject-matter of the libel is of public importance. If it is, it can make no difference, whether the person complaining of it is an author, a statesman, or an Attorney; once that point is settled against the plaintiff, the resultant comment has to be justified upon exactly the same loose general principles, and sentimental considerations ought to have no play.

The learned Judge says: "On the facts appearing I think the writer would have been within the limits of fair comment had he said that the claim made by Bhugwandas was extremely suspicious, indeed probably false, and that the allegations against Surajmal both as to professional misconduct and as to his part in Bhugwandas's suit had not, owing to the collapse of the case, been satisfactorily met, and that they demanded further and fuller inquiry... But Horniman went further than this. He wrote that the plaintiff Bhugwandas was merely the creature of Surajmal admits of little doubt in view of the circumstances revealed... This amounts to saying, that Surajmal, there was little doubt, had committed the serious criminal offence of engineering a false claim. It is a grievous thing to say of any man, an atrocious thing to say of a Solicitor, unless it is true, or unless there are the strongest grounds for saying it. It is not true. Horniman does not contend that it is true."

I pause here to emphasize, what I am afraid I must have already said more than once, that it was Dada who said all this, and Horniman merely adopted that as the truth, by inference from what had occurred at the trial taken along with the pleadings and issues. The learned Judge was evidently greatly influenced by his present conviction that this was all false. But would he have thought so at the time the articles were written and on the materials then available? It does not follow that the conclusion Horniman reached is not true because he prefers to adopt the comparatively easy defence of fair comment than the defence of justification. It is quite clear from what the learned Judge has declared would have been fair comment, that the dividing line, when the article is read in its natural sense, and kept entirely distinct from further information elicited at the trial of the libel suit, is extremely fine. And Heaton, J., at any rate, certainly would not have gone the length, Macleod, J., apparently would, of withholding this altogether from the Jury on the ground that the inference was wholly unreasonable. Indeed in another place he admits that it was quite a reasonable inference, though he thinks that it was too "conjectural," in other words, I suppose, an inference which, while perfectly reasonable, ought not to have been drawn. And he is careful to point out that he is treating himself as a Jury, in coming to his conclusion that the sentence I have so often quoted was not fair comment. He was powerfully influenced again by the gravity of the charge as it presented itself to him. He says that it amounts to accusing Surajmal of a serious criminal offence. Here he refers to a section of the Indian Penal Code which, as far as I know, has hardly ever been enforced in any such connection as this. But the actual conclusion that Surajmal was the real plaintiff in the suit, standing alone, is quite harmless and, left there, could not be regarded as a libel at all. It only becomes so, as Heaton, J., has perceived, if the rest of Dada's statement were true.

It was, however, an inference that had to be drawn before any part of the articles need have been written. And it was an inference, as I hope to show, which was not only fair on the materials then available, and at the time it was drawn, but by far the most probable inference. It is on this point that I differ entirely from Heaton, J., and still more from Macleod, J., when he finds that it was not even a reasonable inference.

Still treating himself as a Jury, Heaton, J., quite correctly sets forth the grounds upon which this inference, as he believes, rests. He comes to the conclusion that they are not strong enough to support it, because he sets over against these other grounds upon which a different inference and one less unfavourable to Surajmal could have been based and, as he evidently thinks, ought to have been based. It seems to me, speaking with respect, that in this balance-sheet, as it has been called in the argument before us, Heaton, J., has greatly undervalued or omitted factors on what we will call the defendant's credit side, and overvalued factors on the debit side.

The result is a view much too favourable in my opinion to the plaintiff. Heaton, J., has omitted from consideration altogether three items which I consider so important as to be almost decisive. He has paid no attention to the undeniable facts giving rise to antecedent probabilities amounting almost to certainty that the claim was a false claim. He has paid no attention to the dramatic and most significant ending of the suit, and he makes no mention of Davar, J.'s comment. Remembering how intimately versed that learned Judge was in all the law's chicaneries, what wide experience he had of the worse sort of Attorneys and their ways, and of false claims of this kind, the few words he is recorded to have spoken when the suit, doubtless to his own surprise, came to an abrupt end, surely deserve much consideration.

On the other side of the account, 1 and 2 are true, as stated. But they seem to me to be quite outside the proper ground of inference, at the time the inference had to be drawn. 3. Of course, Surajmal had not directly supported the claim on the promissory note. How could he possibly have done so after acting as plaintiff's Attorney and drawing his plaint? I assume that what Heaton, J., means is that he had not directly asserted any interest of his own in the consideration. Else the passage is meaningless. 4. Here I come to what clearly influenced the learned Judge much more in my judgment than it should have done in Surajmal's favour, and against Horniman. He believed, although here again I cannot help feeling that this belief had been strengthened by the evidence in the libel suit, that Surajmal was a much injured man who took the earliest opportunity, although it was quite needless for him to have done so, of coming forward courageously to clear his character. If we turn once more to the pleadings, and then to the issues (which have not been noticed at all by Heaton, J.) in Bhugwandas's suit, it is pretty clear that every one concerned in that suit realised that from the first Surajmal was at least as deeply interested in it as the nominal plaintiff, Bhugwandas. Bhugwandas pretended to want Rs. 3,000. Surajmal was virtually on his trial. The most serious charges had been brought against him. It was not seriously contended before us, when I put that point to the Advocate-General, that any inference of the kind Heaton, J., was disposed to draw from Surajmal's appearance in the witness box at that stage of the case, was now contended for. I do not see that any such could fairly be drawn. 5. Here, again, with great respect, I think the learned Judge has diverged so widely from what I conceive to be the true line of approach to a just estimate of reasons for and against defendant's articles having been fair comment, as to have wholly missed the sinister significance of the very fact he is setting down to Surajmal's credit.

SURAJMAL V. HORNIMAN.

Why was he not so cross examined? As Horniman inferred, and as I think most people would have inferred at that time, for the very good reason that he did not care to submit to that ordeal. This, of course, depends upon the truth of Dada's allegations that it was Surajmal's suit. If it was, then, to use Macleod, J.'s words, he gave the word for its withdrawal. Precisely, and if he did, what was the reason? At the time the articles were written only one reason would have occurred to any one. That he had got into deep water already and did not care to risk any further exposure. 6. Much the same criticism applies to this item. And even were it the fact that Surajmal was not the real plaintiff and had no control over Bhugwandas, is it not strange, keeping the pleadings and the issues still clearly in mind, that he should have entered no protest whatever at this summary termination of a suit, in which he was giving evidence as Heaton, J., believed with no other intention than a courageous desire to refute at once and for ever Dada's calumnies against him, just at a point when his evidence was of such a kind as to suggest that the preliminary portion at any rate of these calumnies was true. 7. The point appears to me to be not so much that Dada had not been examined and cross-examined and, therefore, that the account he gave in his written statement had not been tested, as that Surajmal did not insist that it should be tested. Of course if Surajmal had nothing to do with the conduct of the suit, it might be answered that that was not his fault but Bhugwandas's. This again seems to me to beg the really important question as it presented itself when the articles were written. The learned Judge, putting himself in the place of a jurymen, then goes on to say that the view taken by the defendant that Dada's version might be true was a view which any reasonable man might have taken, but that in his opinion it was too conjectural. All that immediately follows would have been quite appropriate had the suit run an ordinary course and ended in a verdict for the defendant. But in that case, the reasons given for this view being too conjectural would not have been available, and I find it extremely difficult to follow what was exactly in Heaton, J.'s mind when he wrote this part of his judgment. I do not think that it would be useful to advert further to any particular part of that judgment. It will be simpler and serve my purpose better if I now resume all that has gone before in a statement of my own conclusions and the reasons which have led me to them.

These reasons seem to be so convincing and the conclusions so obvious that I have naturally felt much pressed by the simple fact that two of my learned brethren have come to a contrary conclusion, and I have felt obliged to show that I have given most earnest consideration to their judgments.

Now what were the facts with which the defendant had to deal when he wrote his first article, the whole foundation of which was the belief he had at that time that Bhugwandas was a mere nominee of Surajmal, and that the claim as presented was utterly false, while the defendant Dada's version of it set forth in his written statement was substantially true?

First look at the nature of the claim. Here is a clerk on Rs. 100 a month suing a man worth lacs for a sum of Rs. 3,000 which, he alleges, he, out of his poor means, advanced on a promissory note to this wealthy gentleman. This poor clerk was in the employ of Surajmal. To go no further, I do not see how any Judge of experience could have helped having his attention arrested and his suspicions aroused? I have no doubt but that Davar, J., did not miss these points, and that even before he had had to consider seriously whether the whole of Dada's story set forth in his written statement was true, he must have regarded the suit with grave suspicion. On the very face of it, once the relative positions and wealth of the parties to it became known, it must have almost been prejudged. Then there was the remarkable story contained in the written statement. This story had been suggested from the very first in the correspondence. It was finally given there pretty fully.

And this was not the common kind of defence; the defendant did not deny execution, he did not; while admitting execution, merely deny that he had received cash consideration. He frankly admitted the promissory note sued on; and proceeded to explain how it came to be made and why he refused to pay. It was an elaborate story. It revealed Surajmal from first to last, as the protagonist in a subtle piece of roguery. It is idle to say that when the case was suddenly dropped, Surajmal had not been examined as to the part he had played in obtaining this promissory note. That had to be introduced by showing the part he had taken in the suit in connection with which, and as a secret commission for his services in which, the amount of Rs. 3,000 was to be paid him by Dada and the promissory note was given for that sum in advance as security. No one, I am sure, doubts but that, had the case gone on, Surajmal would have been examined searchingly on all these points. But on the very threshold he had broken down so badly that no wonder he felt the game was up, and that to press the matter further was only courting inevitable and already foregone defeat. The defendant contended that the nominal plaintiff Bhugwandas (representing his deceased brother Shambhuprasad) had really no interest whatever in this promissory note. The issues raised brought this point of contest out in sharp relief. Every one concerned in the suit must have known that this was the real issue. It is true that the plaintiff made an abortive, almost ridiculous, attempt to prove the payment of cash consideration. This presupposes that Dada was in need of Rs. 3,000 and that he did in fact borrow it from Shambhuprasad. If that were not true, and no one now contends that it was, what alternative explanation of the facts can human ingenuity suggest other than that alleged by Dada? It is very unfortunate that Shambhuprasad died before this suit. Had he been alive he might have been bold enough to bring it, but it is pretty certain that had he tried to support the allegation of cash consideration at the trial, he would have been exposed at once and the utter falsity of the claim in the form it had taken would have been even more clearly proved than it has been. For Bhugwandas may at least say that he knew nothing about the note.

It had come to him as part of his brother's property and he took it for granted that it was genuine and in order. That would have been well enough had not Surajmal, who, on the alternative case, knew perfectly well what the real transaction was, been Bhugwandas's Attorney. How Bhugwandas got the witnesses to prove cash payment is not easy to understand unless Surajmal had procured them. Shambhuprasad would have been in a very different position. Even if the suit broke down utterly, Surajmal might have persuaded Bhugwandas that he ran no risk as he could always shelter behind his own personal ignorance of the transaction. It would have been extremely awkward for Shambhuprasad, had he been plaintiff, and gone into the box to swear to the payment of cash, and then the whole story had turned out to be a deliberately false concoction. Even then the question, every one acquainted with the facts would have been asking, would have been: Who is responsible for all this perjury? This much at least is certain, that if Bhugwandas did not know the truth of the note and was persuaded to call in aid false witnesses to prove that his deceased brother paid cash for it, Surajmal must have known. A very rich man does not make out a promissory note in favour of his own Attorney's clerk for Rs. 3,000 without receiving a penny in cash, without there being some very strong reason for such an extraordinary act, and a reason which it was necessary in the opinion of one at least of the interested parties to conceal. If there was no cash consideration—and this we may take to have been proved beyond doubt—what consideration was there? None that Shambhuprasad could have given. But a consideration which Surajmal might have given and yet dare not avow. Just such a consideration, in short, as that alleged in Dada's written statement. The only possible escape from his dilemma involving, as it does, the substantial truth of every fact and the complete vindication of every comment in the alleged libels, is that Shambhuprasad, in the absence of his master at Mahableshwar, told Dada the story which is given in Dada's written statement, without Surajmal's knowledge, and so got the note in his own name intending to dupe both Dada and his own master Surajmal. That is a veritable tabula in naufragio. I do not know, whether it ever has been actually suggested, but ingenuity, driven desperate, might invent it. I hardly think it worth serious consideration. It is so extremely improbable that even had Shambhuprasad thought of it, could he have believed himself able to carry it through without Surajmal on the one hand and Dada on the other getting scent of his treachery? I come back, then, to this question. If there was no cash consideration for the note, what was the consideration? Dada tells us in his written statement with the utmost candour and abundant circumstantiality of detail. There was no cash consideration; no one has pretended at any stage of this litigation, as far as I have been able to discover, that when this promissory note was made, Dada was in need of money, or that Shambhuprasad had Rs. 3,000 to lend. But if the consideration really was that which is set out in the defendant's case, and that appears to be almost the only possible alternative, it follows that Surajmal knew perfectly well what was the nature of the suit in which he filed the plaint for Bhugwandas, and acted as his Attorney as long as there was any chance of it going through as an uncontested short cause. It is instructive to note Surajmal's conduct in his relation to this suit. I am not sure whether this was or could have been in defendant's knowledge when he wrote the articles, and if it was not, strictly speaking, it ought not to find a place in the reckoning of factors making for or against the defence of fair comment. It was, however, laid before us in argument, and as far as I recollect, no objection was taken. The suit for account brought by Dada against Surajmal was settled by consent ten days before this suit was brought on. The account suit ended thus: Dada withdrew all his objections and surcharges amounting to about Rs. 70,000 and submitted to a decree awarding Surajmal's counter-claim for Rs. 1,300 with costs. All allegations made against Surajmal were withdrawn. It is only upon that last term that I dwell a moment, as possibly explaining the plaintiff's hardihood in persisting in this suit.

Bhagwandas v. Dada was filed as a short cause. Correspondence had already indicated to Surajmal, who was acting as Bhugwandas's Attorney, that Dada meant to repudiate the claim, and, if necessary, fight it on the allegations which were afterwards fully set forth in his written statement. The written statement was only put in at the last moment, when the suit was on for disposal as a short cause. It was then transferred to the long cause list, and very shortly after that Surajmal ceased to act as Attorney for the plaintiff. It is fair argument that he did not like the look of the written statement, and decided that if the suit was going to be fought out, he had better keep out of the contest as much as he could. That was in September, 1915. This may not be such good argument, but it is permissible to doubt whether the suit would have ever come on at all had it not been for the settlement of the account suit. The withdrawal of all allegations in that suit might have heartened Surajmal to go on with this suit. He might have thought that Dada would never persist in these allegations so soon after he had withdrawn a number of other serious allegations in another suit. I say this because I am trying to put myself in the place of a critic about to comment on the suit before Davar, J., just after its dramatic ending. Surely, he would have been asking himself how, if Dada's version was substantially true, as the course and result of the suit seemed to indicate that it was, Surajmal could have had the foolhardiness to press it to a definite issue. Some such explanation as this may have suggested itself. That is to say, of course, if the intending critic had really known about the account suit and Surajmal's conduct in Bhugwandas's suit as plaintiff's Attorney.

Be that as it may, the suit did come on in due course. The issues raised at the trial show how deeply Surajmal was implicated. The attempt to prove cash consideration had, as is now conceded all round, failed, and failed ignominiously. If the suit had ended then and there no one need have been surprised, although most people, who took the trouble to read the pleadings and the written statement, would have drawn their own conclusions, and those conclusions would have been uniformly unfavourable to Surajmal. Moreover, he could hardly have supposed that under so vigilant and experienced a Judge his own troubles would have ended with the inglorious collapse of a manifestly false suit, in defending which the most serious charges were brought against himself. The least he could do was to brazen it out as far as he was personally concerned, and by disproving the consideration alleged by defendant indirectly support the tottering case of the plaintiff. Doubtless, he overrated his own ability and resource, as a witness. Members of the legal profession, who are constantly, if Attorneys, suggesting lines of cross-examination, if Counsel, attacking hostile witnesses by that method, usually think themselves very well qualified to face so familiar an ordeal. Experience only too frequently shows what very poor witnesses they make. Surajmal was no brilliant exception. Very soon he began to flounder. His conscience could not possibly have been as clear of offence as he wished the Court to believe. He could only explain his extraordinary answers, months later, by saying that he was frightened. Frightened of what? The point where he broke down most calamitously was upon a chance question whether he had not himself drafted a notice to be sent to himself by Dada's Attorney, D'Cunha. He could not remember. He was frightened. Frightened because he saw papers in Counsel's hands. But if he knew, as he must have known, had this allegation been utterly false, that he had never sent such a notice, that he never would have thought of doing such a thing, there was nothing in a paper flourished before his eyes to frighten him. At this precise moment, just when he must have felt most keenly that he was making a pitiable exhibition of himself, and that there were many worse rocks ahead, the Court rose for the day. On Monday, Surajmal was present in Court. The trial, as everyone thought, was going on and without doubt many were waiting eagerly to hear how Surajmal would acquit himself under further cross-examination. What happens? The plaintiff surrenders unconditionally; consents to a decree dismissing his suit with costs, and the Judge passes it, remarking that the plaintiff had adopted a very wise course. Does Surajmal, who had, in the opinion of one learned Judge, eagerly accepted the first opportunity of vindicating his character, thus displaying the courage of an honest and injured man, raise any protest? Not a word. He lets his character, which his examination so far had certainly not raised, or helped to clear, go at that. When the first of these articles appeared a week later, on the 7th of March, does he protest? He maintains the same cynical indifferent silence which he has the hardihood to explain in the libel action by saying that he did not feel in any way concerned about the suit, or care how it ended. It is only when the second article appears, and he realises that the matter will not be allowed to rest that in sheer desperation, as it seems to me, and self-defence he brings this libel action. The first and perhaps the most important question is, whether upon all the facts disclosed in the pleadings and the evidence at the trial before Davar, J., in view of its curious sudden termination, and the Judge's comment, was it a fair inference that, as Dada alleged, Surajmal was the real plaintiff, and the nature of the transaction underlying the promissory note was set out with substantial truth in the written statement? Speaking for myself, I should say unhesitatingly that it was not only fair comment, a reasonable inference, but by far the most probable, and, therefore, the most reasonable inference that could at that time have been drawn. Does any one seriously believe that between Saturday night and Monday morning Surajmal was not consulted? Does any one seriously believe that had he declined to consent to the suit being withdrawn, it would have ended as it did? When I put these questions in this form I mean them to be answered, of course, with reference to the materials before the defendant when he wrote the articles. Remember that the nominal promisee of the promissory note was Surajmal's own clerk. The nominal plaintiff was a man of no substance at all. Presumably whatever information he got for use in supporting his claim he got from his first Attorney, master of his deceased brother, Surajmal. If such evidence as the plaintiff, thus advised, decided to give was all false, who should have known that better than Surajmal? Who should have known the real truth of the matter better than Surajmal? Who was most interested in refuting the defence set up by Dada, Bhugwandas or Surajmal? With all these considerations before him, would any one have hesitated to conclude that it was Surajmal who decided that the claim had better be dropped before further unpleasant disclosures had to be made? Would any one at that time have hesitated to conclude that in the main at any rate Dada's defence was true? It is common ground throughout all the judgments that it was fair comment to say that the plaintiff's suit was utterly false, and that the withdrawal at the stage when it was withdrawn indicated that the plaintiff knew it, and felt that the defence would, or, at any rate, might, be established, if he persisted. But if the claim as brought was utterly false, and that was a perfectly fair conclusion, it appears to me to be just as fair a conclusion from that that the real plaintiff was Surajmal and not Bhugwandas. Bhugwandas may not have known how the promissory note came to be given to his deceased brother Shambhuprasad, but Shambhuprasad must have known. And if it was not given him for cash, as he alleged, he would have had to show what it was given for and what interest he had in it. Does any one suppose that he could have done so after launching the suit on the basis of an ordinary loan transaction, a promissory note for value in cash paid and received? Failing that, what other conclusion was reasonably possible than that defendant's case was substantially true, and that Bhugwandas was the creature of Surajmal, that Surajmal was the only person interested in the consideration for the note, and that the suit was in fact his? It is all very well now to say that had the case gone on Surajmal would have improved under cross-examination, and Dada would have broken down, and failed to prove his defence. That was clearly not the opinion of those in charge of the case. For, had they had any hopes of that kind, it is as certain as anything in human conduct well can be, that the plaintiff would not have been advised to consent to a decree dismissing his suit with all costs. Apart from the charges against Surajmal, what worse fate could have overtaken the plaintiff? True, he might have had to pay costs of one, or, at most, I should think, two more days' hearing. But that was relatively unimportant. As it was, I have since ascertained that his two Attorneys' bills were taxed against him for an aggregate of over Rs. 2,000. So that a few hundreds, more or less, would certainly not have deterred him from fighting to a finish, had it really been his suit, and had he been advised that there was still a fighting chance dependent upon the result of Dada's examination and the conclusion of Surajmal's evidence. And putting myself now in the place of a jurymen I feel no doubt whatever what my verdict would have been upon that, now generally conceded to have been by far the most important, part of the libel. There is no question here of any facts untruly stated. There never has been. It is simply a case for a Jury to say whether, upon the facts, it was fair comment to say that the suit was Surajmal's suit and that the case made out by Dada in his written statement was probably true.

I have never felt the least doubt myself that that was perfectly fair comment. As to the rest of the libel I have shown that it contains certainly one fact untruly stated. But whether the cheque was Surajmal's or Tatia Saheb's, is utterly unimportant. I have pointed out that it was a very natural mistake, such a slip as any one might have made. As soon as we dismiss the idea, which pervaded the plaintiff-appellant's argument right up to the end of the hearing, that the defendant was alleging, and had any conceivable reason for alleging, that Surajmal had settled the suit with Dada, without Tatia Saheb's knowledge or consent, the unimportance of the slip is self-evident. Let us suppose that Surajmal had settled the suit for Rs. 9,000 without consulting his principal Tatia Saheb. It would have been a very daring thing to do, and one which Surajmal could not have defended, had Tatia Saheb repudiated the settlement. But he might even then have pleaded that he so settled in the best interests of his client and in the sure confidence that he would ratify the settlement. Dada's case from the first has been that he expected at least Rs. 20,000 from Tatia Sahab, acting under Surajmal's advice. It is certain, I think, that he would have got some damages. How much was the only question. If Surajmal had ever told Tatia Sahab that Dada meant to insist on a minimum of Rs. 20,000 damages, he might very well have settled for Rs. 9,000, reducing costs proportionately, with the certainty that Tatia Sahab would gladly consent. But I do not believe that it ever entered the head of the defendant to make such an allegation against Surajmal. He was attacking Surajmal. He was holding up his professional conduct to public reprobation. He was pointing out that amongst his tortuous dealings he had first instigated one of his clients, Dada, to file a suit against another of his clients, Holkar, and, then, after, for form's sake, he had sent Dada to another attorney, D'Cunha, he had settled with Dada over the head of D'Cunha. And that he had then written a letter (in this lay the sting of the accusation) to D'Cunha meant to convey a false impression and conceal his unprofessional conduct. There would have been no sense at all that I can see in suggesting that Surajmal had settled this suit without Holkar's knowledge, even supposing any one believed that an Attorney could do anything of the kind. What was charged against him he could do, and as far as I can see, he actually did. Nor was it in itself a very serious matter. No one would have attached any importance to it but for the lying letter which Surajmal next wrote to D'Cunha. To make and bring home that charge two things were necessary: (1) that Surajmal did write the letter. That is admitted. (2) That as between him and Dada no agent of Holkar intervened. In other words, that no agent of Holkar settled the suit with Dada without Surajmal's knowledge, and only after the settlement had been made, informed Surajmal of it. There the defendant had Dada's written statement to go upon; and in addition Surajmal's own evidence given before he realized that any such point was going to be made against him. Both, if true,—and why should the defendant not have believed Surajmal himself upon oath regarding this matter?—conclusively establish the falsity of the letter. It is only by insisting that the sentence "as a matter of fact, etc.", should be wrenched from its context, and read as an isolated statement literally, that the plaintiff can make any show of a grievance out of it. So read and meaning that Holkar never had an agent with Surajmal, it would doubtless be untrue. But I cannot understand how such arguments could be used, in face of the plain meaning of the passage as a whole.

This, again, I consider to be perfectly fair comment. And that disposes of the whole matter, both law and fact. I never was in any doubt, after hearing the Advocate-General's first day's argument, that there was no libel at all. My only anxiety has been to understand how my two learned brethren, Heaton and Macleod, JJ., whose opinions I must respect and acknowledge to be fully as deserving of weight as my own, had come to a contrary conclusion.

I am of opinion that the plaintiff's suit should be dismissed with all costs throughout.

MARTEN, J.—In this libel action the plaintiff, Surajmal, is a Solicitor and the three defendants are or were the editor, printer and proprietor respectively of a newspaper called The Bombay Chronicle. The alleged libel relates to Surajmal's professional conduct in two actions, viz., Suit No. 907 of 1912 (Ashidbai v. T. S. Holkar), which was a suit for damages for breach of contract of sale of real estate; and Suit No. 837 of 1915 (Bhagwandas v. Dada), which was a suit on a promissory note for Rs. 3,000.

The circumstances giving rise to the alleged libel are as follows: In 1912, Surajmal had two rich clients, viz., Tatia Sahab Holkar, whom I will call "Holkar," and Haji Ahmed Haji Hassam Dada, whom I will call "Dada." In that year Holkar sold some land in Nepean Sea Road twice over, viz., first, to a purchaser called Khambatta, and, secondly, in February 1912, to Ashidbai as Dada's nominee. As regards this second sale which was for Rs. 65,000, Surajmal acted for both the vendor and the purchaser. The first purchaser

SURAJMAL V. HORNIMAN.

Khambatta then brought an action for specific performance against Holkar and obtained a decree therein. In that action Surajmal acted for Holkar.

In August 1912 Dada, by his mother and nominee Ashidbai, brought against Holkar the above Suit No. 907 of 1912 for damages for breach of the contract of February 1912. This suit was settled in January 1914 by Holkar paying Dada Rs. 9,000 as damages. In this suit Surajmal acted for Holkar and a Mr. D'Cunha acted for Dada.

Meanwhile, on the 26th April 1913, Dada had executed a promissory note for Rs. 3,000 in favour of a clerk of Surajmal's, named Shambhuprasad. This clerk died on the 12th June 1914 leaving a brother named Bhugwandas, who claimed the promissory note as a joint family asset to which he was entitled by survivorship.

Subsequently, in July 1915, Bhugwandas brought against Dada the above suit No. 837 of 1915 to enforce the promissory note. In this suit Surajmal acted for Bhugwandas until September 1915, when there was a change of Solicitors, Messrs. Hiralal, Mehta & Co. thenceforth acting for Bhugwandas. Dada also changed his Solicitors, being represented at first by Vachha & Co. and afterwards, viz., in February 1916, by Ardesbir, Hormusji, Dinsha & Co.

The written statement in that suit was declared on the 17th August 1915 and raised a startling defence, which in effect was as follows:—Dada alleged that Surajmal had instigated him to bring the 1912 suit; that Surajmal promised he would influence his client Holkar to pay Rs. 20,000 to Rs. 25,000 as damages; that Surajmal was to be paid by Dada Rs. 3,000 if such damages were in fact obtained; that the promissory note was in respect of such Rs. 3,000 and was passed in the name of Surajmal's clerk Shambhuprasad as nominee for Surajmal, who, it was submitted, was a necessary party to the suit; that as only Rs. 9,000 had been obtained as damages, Dada was not liable on the promissory note and had received no consideration therefor, and he accordingly counterclaimed for its cancellation and delivery up.

This, then, was the position when the 1915 suit came on for trial before Davar, J., on Saturday, 26th February 1916, and it will be seen that the suit involved issues of a very grave character for Surajmal, although he was not a party to the proceedings and was no longer on the record as Solicitor for the plaintiff. At the trial the plaintiff in that suit proceeded to call his evidence although the onus would appear to have been on his opponent. His first two witnesses claimed to have been present at the execution of the promissory note and the payment of the Rs. 3,000, but appear to have been seriously shaken in cross examination. Then Surajmal was called and after denying in examination-in-chief the allegations made against him was partly cross-examined by Mr. Davar, when he soon showed a somewhat surprising ignorance as to what advice he had given Dada when told of Khambatta's prior contract of sale: and as to whether he had drafted a notice for Dada to send to Holkar: and as to whether he had advised Dada to go to another Solicitor. Stopping here for a moment, I must respectfully dissent from Mr. Justice Macleod's criticism of this cross-examination. In my opinion Mr. Davar was quite entitled to ask the questions he did, and I may further observe that before us the Advocate-General expressly declined to put forward any contention to the contrary. In fact the cross-examination was never finished, as on the Monday morning (28th February 1916) the suit was abruptly withdrawn, and according to the newspaper report, Exhibit S, the Judge observed that it was an extremely wise step to take and ordered that the suit should be dismissed with costs. Surajmal appears to have acquiesced in this, notwithstanding that the Saturday's proceedings had been reported in the public press. At any rate he made no sign. Even the first alleged libel which was published on the 7th March elicited no response from him, and it was not till after the publication on the 15th March of the second alleged libel that an apology was asked for and the present suit instituted. It is also noteworthy that in cross-examination in the present suit, after stating that he was not surprised at Counsel's statement to the Court that the 1915 suit was going to be dismissed, Surajmal added, "I was quite indifferent as I was not concerned."

As regards the alleged libellous articles, they have been read and re-read several times over and I do not think it necessary to repeat them. It will be seen that they demand an enquiry by the proper authorities into Surajmal's conduct in relation to the 1912 and 1915 suits, and in particular as to (1) the charge that the promissory note for Rs. 3,000 was in effect a secret commission or bribe taken by Surajmal as the price for giving his client Holkar certain advice and that the 1915 suit was a false suit engineered by Surajmal; and (2) the charge that Surajmal settled the 1912 suit over the head of Dada's Solicitor and then by his letter of the 19th January 1914 endeavoured to create the false impression that the parties themselves had settled the suit.

Of these two charges, the first is by far the most serious. The second is little more than an alleged breach of professional etiquette, apart from the interpretation to be put on the letter of 19th January 1914.

The defence is substantially one of fair comment. In particular the defendants do not contend that charge No. 1 is true. As regards charge No. 2 they justify some of the details obtained aliunde, and for this purpose rely on paragraph 6 of the written statement.

The legal principles governing a defence of fair comment are set out by Lord Ludlow in South Hetton Coal Company v. North-Eastern News Association (7), by Lord Cozens-Hardy in Hunt v. Star Newspaper Company, Limited (2) and by Lord Atkinson in Dakhyl v. Labouchere (4) and have been cited again in the Court of Appeal in Walker v. Hodgson (17). I need not repeat them. It is sufficient to say that in the present suit the Advocate-General accepted Lord Cozens-Hardy's view in Hunt v. Star Newspaper Company, Limited (2) that the statement of facts must be substantially true, and did not rely on the literal interpretation of Lord Collins' judgment in Digby v. Financial News, Limited (1), which is to the effect that there must be no misstatement of fact whatever.

Turning then to the first charge, there is one clear misstatement of fact, for it was not Surajmal but Shambhuprasad, who was alleged to have said it would not look good for the promissory note to be in Surajmal's name. The misstatement is not, however, pleaded nor was it raised at either the trial or the first appeal; and before us the point was only taken as the result of a remark from the Bench towards the close of the Advocate-General's opening speech. Under all the circumstances I think that the misstatement, even if now admissible, must on the plaintiff's own showing be regarded as too minute or trivial for him to rely on as defeating the plea of fair comment.

The Advocate-General largely relied on the fact that the article omitted to mention Surajmal's denial of the charge in examination-in-chief. The article shows, however, that he was being cross-examined and I think one would infer that he had previously denied the charge. Otherwise why was he called and what need would there be to cross-examine him?

I have carefully considered all the other points raised on Surajmal's behalf, e.g., as to the words "creature," "little doubt," "content to have the case withdrawn," and "the...allegations...left unrefuted." But as Sir Basil Scott pointed out in his judgment, we must consider what the writer of the article knew at the time, and must disregard matters subsequently proved or alleged in the present suit. At that time the writer had not before him Surajmal's evidence in the present suit. But he did have before him Surajmal's conduct on the withdrawal of the 1915 suit. I quite recognise that a lawyer may remember the saying: "No case, abuse the plaintiff's Attorney" and may properly be slow to take offence. But a line must be drawn somewhere and I think it may be drawn at a charge of fraud. Speaking for myself. I regard it as almost inexplicable for any respectable Solicitor to behave like Surajmal did in making no protest or appeal whatever either to the Judge or to the Law Society, so that his character might be cleared of the charges of fraud made against him. Surajmal's own explanation, viz., that he was quite indifferent as he was not concerned, demands in itself an explanation, but this, of course, was said in the present suit and was not before the writer of the article and I, therefore, merely use it as showing that even now no real explanation has been given of Surajmal's silence. In my judgment, therefore, the writer was justified in drawing very adverse inferences from Surajmal's behaviour and from the Judge's comment that it was extremely wise to withdraw the suit.

There is, too, another important consideration. The story as to the cash consideration for the promissory note having broken down at the trial, how came it that Dada signed this promissory note in favour of Surajmal's clerk at a time when he was engaged in litigation with a client of Surajmal's, viz., Holkar? Dada's story is in effect that it was a bribe. There is no other explanation even now of this promissory note, which admittedly is a genuine document. I recognise that Surajmal, if innocent, would not know the real origin of the promissory note, e.g., if it was part of a fraudulent scheme concocted by the deceased clerk alone. But this possibility has to be taken into consideration with the other circumstances of the case, and the unexplained origin of the promissory note is, in my opinion, a matter from which an adverse opinion could fairly be drawn. In saying this I have not overlooked the fact that Dada on his own showing was in effect an accomplice in the attempted fraud on Holkar, and that Nanabhoy from whom the defendants obtained some information was a discharged clerk of Surajmal and on hostile terms with him. A fair critic would, therefore, regard anything these men said with caution, and in fact Dada has never gone into the witness-box and Nanabhoy at the present trial was shown to be an unreliable witness. The case does not, however, depend on whether the statements of these two men were all true.

Looking, then, at the articles as a whole, and after giving my best consideration to the judgments at the trial and on the first appeal, I think the articles did not exceed the bounds of fair comment as regards the first and graver charge I have mentioned.

As regards the second charge, it is true that the defendant Horniman amplified the allegations made in paragraph 4 of the written statement in the 1915 suit and relied on matters contained in "observations for Counsel," which in fact were not before Counsel at the trial. But if in consequence of this it becomes necessary to justify, I think Surajmal did in effect settle the 1912 action over Mr. D'Cunha's head. Even on his own showing his clerk Nanabhoy brought about the settlement in company with Holkar's agent Vinayakrao. Surajmal further admits having drafted the letter, Exhibit 2, which Mr. D'Cunha's client was to send to Mr. D'Cunha informing him of the settlement of the suit. I also think that Surajmal's letter of the 19th January 1914, Exhibit F, was in such terms as to give Mr. D'Cunha the erroneous impression that the parties themselves had settled the suit. Under these circumstances I am not disposed to regard as vital any inaccuracy in the passage "as a matter of fact there was no intervention on the part of any agent at all." It is clear that no agent was acting for Dada in the settlement. It is also clear that Surajmal by himself or his clerk Nanabhoy took part in that settlement, and that Surajmal either knew of the settlement himself or was informed of it by Nanabhoy. That being so, why write to Mr. D'Cunha, "We are informed by our client's agent," meaning thereby Vinayakrao, unless it was to create a wrong impression? Under these circumstances, I think that even if the passage alleges in effect that Vinayakrao gave no information or assistance, it is not of a sufficiently substantial character to defeat either the plea of fair comment or that of justification. So too, as regards the statement that Surajmal gave his own cheque this is not true but is either a fair inference from Dada's written statement or, if not, is unimportant in the view I take of the case.

There are other points in connection with this second charge which have been raised in argument and duly considered by me, including what I have already said about the unreliability of Nanabhoy, but looking again at the articles as a whole and on a full consideration of the circumstances, I think the defendants succeed on this second charge as well as on the first.

In the result, therefore, I think that the plaintiff's appeal should be dismissed and the defendants' cross-appeal as to costs allowed, the effect being that the action will be dismissed and that the plaintiff will pay the costs of the action and of both appeals and will refund any costs already paid to him.

Appeal dismissed.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE NO. 1707 OF 1916.

April 4, 1918.

Present:—Mr. Justice Richardson and Mr. Justice Walmsley.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT
versus

SHIB NARAIN HAZRA AND OTHERS—
PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), ss. 15 (2), 29 (1) (b)—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII B. C. of 1885), ss. 104 H, 184, 185—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 80—Suit under s. 104H, Bengal Tenancy Act, against Secretary of State—Notice under s. 80, Civil Procedure Code—Limitation—Period of notice, whether can be deducted—Local Act—Interpretation of Statutes.

In computing the period of limitation for a suit instituted under the provisions of section 104H, Bengal Tenancy Act, against the Secretary of State, the plaintiff is not entitled under section 15 (2) of the Limitation Act to deduct the two months in respect of the notice required by section 80, Civil Procedure Code. [p. 505, col. 1.]

The Bengal Tenancy Act is a Local Act to which the saving clause in section 29 (b) of the Limitation Act applies. [p. 504, col. 2.]

The Bengal Tenancy Act has always been regarded as a self-contained Act on the subject of limitation even as regards periods of limitation prescribed by it to which sections 184 and 185 are inapplicable. [p. 504, col. 2; p. 505, col. 1.]

In interpreting the plain words of a positive enactment any suggestion of hardship is out of place. [p. 505, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

RICHARDSON, J.—This is an appeal by the Secretary of State in a suit brought against him by the plaintiffs under the provisions of section 104H of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

As the suit was not instituted within the period of six months prescribed by clause (2) of the section, it is contended for the Secretary of State, and has been contended throughout, that the suit is out of time. The Courts below have overruled this plea of limitation, on the ground that the plaintiffs are entitled under section 15 (2) of the Limitation Act of 1908 to a deduction of two months in respect of the notice which section 80 of the Civil Procedure Code required them to give to the Secretary of State or his representative before they could present their plaint. The question is whether the view so taken is right or wrong.

The precise point which arises was determined in the Secretary of State's favour by the judgment of this Court in Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 405 of 1914 (decided by Mookerjee and Walmsley, JJ., on the 22nd August 1917) and since reported as Secretary of State v. Gangadhar Nanda (1). The learned Government Pleader relies on that decision. On the other side, it has been strenuously urged by Sir Rash Behari Ghose that the decision is inconsistent with other decisions of the Court said to be in pari materia and that it ought to be referred to a Full Bench.

The argument turns on the division of the Limitation Act into parts with separate headings—Part II being headed "Limitation of Suits, Appeals and Applications" and Part III "Computation of Period of Limitation" and on the effect of the saving clause enacted in section 29 (1) (b), "Nothing in this Act shall affect or alter any period of limitation specially prescribed for any suit, appeal or application by any special or local law now or hereafter in force in British India." It is said that that clause applies expressly to the period of limitation and does not necessarily make Part III, relating to computation of the period, inapplicable to a special period of limitation prescribed by a special or local law. It is not suggested that the provisions in Part III can be aptly described as general principles of law, but it is argued that it is a question of construction in each case whether the Legislature intended (without expressly saying so) that the special period of limitation specially prescribed should or should not be subject to those provisions.

Now I confess that I find the argument at the outset somewhat difficult to follow. To my mind the provisions of Part III do affect the periods of limitation prescribed in the Act itself by section 3, which is the first and the enacting section in Part II. Section 3 begins with the words "Subject to the provisions contained in sections 4 to 25 (inclusive)", those sections comprising the remainder of Part II and the whole of Part III. Stopping there, it hardly seems that Part II and Part III can be differentiated in the manner which the argument requires. The section as a whole enacts that subject to the provisions specified, "every suit instituted.....after the period of limitation prescribed therefor by the First Schedule shall be dismissed, although limitation has not been set up as a defence." It may well be that where a period of limitation is prescribed by a special or local law, a suit need not be dismissed if limitation is not set up as a defence, but I find it difficult to say that the application of the provisions of Part III to such a period would not "affect" it.

We were referred, however, to a number of authorities, decided for the most part under Acts prior to the present Limitation Act. Under Act IX of 1871, the saving clause relating to a period of limitation prescribed by local or special law ran:—"Nothing herein contained shall affect such law." Under Act XV of 1877, it was—"Nothing herein contained shall affect or alter the period so prescribed." Apparently it was held that this change in the language had the effect of making the provisions in the latter Act, relating to the computation of the period of limitation, applicable, in the absence of any reason for holding the contrary, to special and local laws prescribing special periods of limitation. [Compare Purran Chunder Ghose v. Mutty Lall Ghose Jahira (2), decided under Act IX of 1871, with the following cases decided under Act XV of 1877, Behari Loll Mookerjee v. Mungolanath Mookerjee (3), Golap Chand Nowluckha v. Krishto Chunder Dass Biswas (4), Hossein Ally v. Donzelle (5), Khoshelal Mahton v. Gunesh Dutt (6), Niabutoolla v. Wazir Ali (7) and Khetter Mohun Chuckerbutty v. Dina Bashy Shaha (8).] These cases or some of them have been cited in later cases as authority for the rule of construction which they appear to lay down. But the rule has by no means gone unchallenged.

It was not followed in Girija Nath Roy Bahadur v. Patani Bibee (9) in regard to suits for arrears of rent under Bengal Act VIII of 1869. In connection, however, with previous cases, a distinction was there suggested between the application of the provision corresponding to that contained in section 4 of the present Limitation Act and the application of other provisions which have the effect of extending the period of limitation in particular circumstances. Section 4 provides for the case where the Court is closed when the period of limitation expires and extends the period to the day when the Court re-opens. The distinction bore fruit and led to what may be roughly called the rule of the dies non, laid down in Shooshee Bhusan Rudro v. Gobind Chunder Roy (10) and Peary Mohun Aich v. Anunda Charan Biswas (11). Even this rule has not escaped criticism from high authority [Ahad Baksh v. Babar Ali (12) and Sheodas v. Narayan Asaji (13)]. The rule, however, has received legislative recognition in the General Clauses Act in respect to Acts passed by the Indian Legislative Council since 1887 (section 7, Act I of 1887, section 10 of Act X of 1897: cf. also Bengal Act I of 1899, section 12).

In Nagendra Nath Mullick v. Mathura Mahun Parhi (14), a Full Bench held that section 14 of the Act of 1877, corresponding to the same section of the present Act, had no application to suits for arrears of rent under Act No. X of 1859.

In Abdul Hakim v. Latifunnessa Khatun (15) it was similarly held that section 14 did not apply to a suit brought under section 77 of the Registration Act (III of 1877). It was said that Rhetter Mohun Chuckerbutty v. Dina Bashy Shaha (8) could not stand beside the Full Bench case of Nagendra Nath Mullick v. Mathura Mahun Parhi (14). The decision in Matubbar Mollah v. Shoshi Bhushan (16) is referable like Nijabutoolla's case (7) to the rule of the dies non.

The rule in the wider form has not fared well at the hands of Full Benches in Madras: see Venkata v. Chengadu (17), Veeramma v. Abbiah (18) and Abu Bakr v. Secretary of State (19). The decision of the learned Judges in Srinivasa Aiyangar v. Secretary of State (20) seems to me, if I may say so with respect, to be inconsistent with the Full Bench decisions, at any rate, those in the two later cases.

In Guracharya v. President, Belgaum (21) the earlier Calcutta cases were followed, but in Queen-Empress v. Nageshappa Pai (22) more sober counsels prevailed. This last case, however, was under the Criminal Procedure Code.

The case of Moro Sadashiv v. Visaji Raghunath (23) relates to minors. It was not followed in Rebala Remana Reddi v. Rebala Babu Reddi (24), where the point was more fully considered. Both these were decisions on the Civil Procedure Code.

It is true that in Dropadi v. Hira Lal (25), where the question arose under the Provincial Insolvency Act (No. III of 1907), a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court seems to have returned to the earlier cases for guidance. But of the six cases to be found in the Calcutta series from 5 Calcutta to 10 Calcutta, four are referable to the rule of the dies non, one [Nijabutoolla v. Wazir Ali (7)] has been held to be overruled and the remaining one [Behari Lall Mookerjee v. Mungolanath Mookerjee (3)] also falls in view of the Full Bench decision in Nagendra Nath Mullick v. Mathura Mahun Parhi (14). Since that decision and the previous decision in Girija Nath Roy Bahadur v. Patani Bibee (9), the general provisions of the Limitation Act have not been applied to the various Rent Acts which have been in force in Bengal.

Some stress was laid by Sir Rash Behari on the ruling of the Privy Council in Phoolbas Koonwur v. Lalla Jegesh Sahoy (26). That decision turned on the construction of the Civil Procedure Code of 1859 (Act No. VIII of 1859) in reference to the Limitation Act of the same year (Act No. XIV of 1859). These Acts, of course, were clothed in their own language. The applicability of the general provisions of the present Limitation Act to special periods of limitation prescribed by the present Civil Procedure Code raises another question, which may perhaps depend in some degree on the further question whether the Civil Procedure Code is to be classed as a "special" or "local" law within the meaning of the saving clause in section 29 (b) of the present Limitation Act. [Dropadi v. Hira Lal (25).] In any case the decision relied upon has no bearing on the question before us which arises under the Bengal Tenancy Act. There is no dispute that that is a Local Act to which the saving clause of the Limitation Act applies.

Moreover, whatever may be said about other Acts, in view of sections 184 and 185 and Schedule III, the Bengal Tenancy Act has always been regarded as a self-contained Code on the subject of limitation, even as regards periods of limitation prescribed by it to which sections 184 and 185 are inapplicable [Akhoy Kumar Soor v. Bajoy Chand Mohatap (27), Kamal Krishna Kundu v. Kedar Nath Kundu (28) and Radha Shyamkar v. Dinabandhu Biswal (29)].

On the question whether an Act embodying the law on a particular subject is or is not complete in itself, there are always the observations of Lord Herschell in Bank of England v. Vagliano (30), to which Lord Macnaghten referred in connection with section 188 of the Bengal Tenancy Act in the course of the argument in Jatindra Nath v. Prasanna Kumar (31).

The language of section 104 in the present respect is not ambiguous and in interpreting the plain words of a positive enactment such as this, any suggestion of hardship is out of place. It was argued that if the period of limitation had been two months the plaintiffs could not have sued at all. Possibly that is why the Legislature chose the longer period of six months. If the prescribed period had been twelve months, instead of six, the same plea of hardship would have been put forward.

In my opinion, therefore, the decision in the unreported case*, which is binding on us, is not inconsistent, but consistent, with the current of authority, and it would serve no useful purpose to make a reference to a Full Bench.

The learned Government Pleader informed us that subject to the maintenance of the rent assessed by the Settlement Officer, he had no objection to the plaintiffs being described in the Record of Rights as occupancy raiyats in place of the present description 'tenure-holders'. It may be well, however, to add that if there are tenants under the plaintiffs, they are not parties to this litigation and are not bound by the result of it.

The result is that this appeal should be Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 39—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 91—Cancellation of instrument, suit for—Limitation, starting point of.

The word 'entitled' in Article 91 of Schedule I of the Limitation Act means entitled by law, i.e., under section 39 of the Specific Relief Act. [p. 506, col. 1.]

In a suit for cancellation of a document time will begin to run from the time when plaintiff becomes aware of facts which create in him a reasonable apprehension that he will suffer injury if the document be left outstanding. [p. 506, col. 1.]

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Tuticorin, in Appeal Suit No. 104 of 1916, preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Tuticorin, in Original Suit No. 362 of 1915.

JUDGMENT.—The right to bring a suit to have a document adjudged void and to have it cancelled is governed by section 39 of the Specific Relief Act. One of the provisions in this section is that the person suing must have reasonable apprehension that the instrument, if left outstanding, may cause him serious injury. Under Article 91 of the Limitation Act time begins to run when the facts "entitling" the plaintiff to have the instrument cancelled or set aside become known to him. We think that the word "entitled" must be interpreted as meaning "entitled by law," i.e., under section 39, Specific Relief Act, for we can find no other provision of law which gives a right to bring such a suit to avoid an injury before it is suffered. This is the view taken in Singarappa v. Talari Sanjivappa (1) and according to it the period of limitation in the present case began to run, not when the facts which would render the document invalid became known to plaintiff, but when he became aware of facts which aroused a reasonable apprehension that he would suffer serious injury if the document were left outstanding. The plaintiff says he felt this apprehension when the document was registered, and we can see no circumstances to justify us in finding that he must have had a reasonable apprehension before that date. If the date of registration is taken as the starting point for limitation, the suit is within time. We accordingly set aside the decree of the lower Court and remand the suit to the District Munsif for disposal on the merits. Costs will abide the result.

Appeal allowed; Case remanded.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 23—Public policy—Agreement to refer non-compoundable case to arbitration—Award, whether can be enforced.

On a complaint of cheating being lodged by the plaintiff against the defendants, the Magistrate referred the case to a gentleman for enquiry with the suggestion that perhaps he would be able to effect a settlement between the parties. The parties then agreed to refer their difference to arbitrators and the Magistrate on being informed of this dismissed the complaint. The arbitrators made an award in favour of the plaintiff and the latter applied to have it filed:

Held, that the award was not enforceable, as the agreement to refer to arbitration was invalid having been made to stifle a prosecution. [p. 507, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, 3rd Court, Hooghly, dated the 25th of May 1916, affirming that of the Munsif, 2nd Court at Serampore, dated the 29th May 1915.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Manmatha Nath Roy, for the Appellant.—The Court of Appeal below was wrong in holding that as the agreement to refer to arbitration was entered into in order to stifle a criminal prosecution, the award was invalid. No criminal prosecution began when the parties went to arbitration. The criminal case was dismissed for non appearance under section 203, Criminal Procedure Code.

It was wrong for the Court below to say that the object of the agreement was to stifle criminal prosecution, because at the time when the parties went to arbitration process in the criminal matter had not been issued and there are rulings of your Lordships' Court to show that in such cases it cannot be said that a criminal case has yet begun. Reference to arbitration and the award are valid in law inasmuch as (1) no prosecution was commenced at that time; (2) the Deputy Magistrate himself helped to have the matter settled. As the suggestion of a settlement came first from the Magistrate and as he mentioned the case as being of a civil nature and as it was finally dismissed under section 203, Criminal Procedure Code, it was wrong for the Court of Appeal below to say that the arbitration was to stifle a criminal prosecution.

Secondly, as no process was issued the criminal case could not be said to have been started. No criminal prosecution can be said to have commenced until and unless a process is issued under section 204, Criminal Procedure Code. Golap Jan v. Bholu Nath (1) referred to. In Rai Oharan Purkait v. Amrita Lal Gain (2) the reasoning of the Judges is that if a criminal prosecution is pending and if the object of the parties referring to arbitration is to stifle prosecution, then the award is invalid, otherwise not. Hence Rai Charan Purkait v. Amrita Lal Gain (2), on which the lower Court relied, is distinguishable from this case. DeRozario v. Gulab Chand Anundjee (3) referred to.

The five arbitrators who are respectable gentlemen were unanimous in their award.

Babus Dwarka Nath Chakraborty and Charn Chunder Bhatt charjiya, for the Respondents.—The agreement for submission to the award of arbitrators was an invalid agreement and was entered into by pressure. The principle of law is that if a person is under a shadow of a criminal case and if some agreement is entered into to stifle that criminal case, such agreement is invalid. Rai Charan Purkait v. Amrita Lal Gain (2) referred to. If the result of the agreement is to stop the criminal case then it is invalid. As Mr. Justice Mookerjee points out in that case, when the object of the agreement is to stifle criminal prosecution it is in essence a bargain and hence against public policy. The award of the arbitrators shows that my client was guilty of cheating which is a non-compoundable offence. When the arbitrators got notice of the criminal case, it was their duty not to proceed further and they were functus officio and by making the award they acted beyond jurisdiction.

Babu Manmatha Nath Roy, in reply.—As for the contention of my learned friend that when there is a complaint against a person, he ceases to be a free agent, I submit such a contention is not correct, because it is not a fact that whenever a complaint is made even without the issue of summons, the accused ceases to be a free agent.

The question arises whether in a criminal case in which processes are not issued, the parties can enter into arbitration before such issue of processes and whether the award in such an arbitration would be valid. The arbitrators were quite justified in making the award even after notice of the criminal case.

JUDGMENT.

WALMSLEY, J.—The plaintiff, now appellant, brought the suit out of which this appeal arises for the purpose of having an award passed by certain arbitrators filed. The plaintiff instituted a criminal case on 7th August 1913 against the defendants making various charges, the principal one being that they had persuaded her to execute a document which she meant to be a benami document but which they subsequently treated as a genuine deed of sale. The Magistrate referred the case to a gentleman living in the neighbourhood for enquiry, with the suggestion that perhaps he would be able to effect a settlement between the parties. On 31st August an ekrarnama was drawn up by which the parties agreed to refer their difference to arbitrators. They informed the Magistrate of this and on 1st October the complaint was dismissed. The result of the arbitrators' meeting was an award in favour of the plaintiff, and it is this award that she now seeks to get enforced. The main defence taken by the defendants is that the agreement was invalid because it was made in order to stifle a prosecution; and this defence has been upheld by both the lower Courts.

It is contended before us that, as a matter of fact, no prosecution had been started because no process had been issued; and our attention has been drawn to two cases where the suit was in the nature of a suit for damages for malicious prosecution. There it was held that mere filing of a complaint did not amount to a prosecution, but no useful analogy can be drawn from such cases. Here the point for consideration is whether the defendants, in coming to an agreement, did so under the pressure of an imminent criminal case. It is also urged that the Magistrate himself suggested the reference to arbitrators; but that I think cannot make any difference. A third suggestion is that, although section 417, Indian Penal Code, is one of the sections mentioned at the head of the complaint, there is, in substance, no allegation of cheating. In the written complaint the allegation is distinctly thin; but in the complaint recorded by the Magistrate it comes out quite clearly. The gist of the accusation in the complaint was that the defendants persuaded the complainant to execute a benami document, but directly she had done so they turned round and asserted they had actually bought the property. There can, therefore, be no doubt that there was an allegation of cheating; and cheating is an offence which is not compoundable under the Criminal Procedure Code.

It follows on these findings that the case comes within the scope of section 23 of the Contract Act as explained by illustration (b); and I am fortified in this view by the decision to which reference is made by the learned Munsif. In my opinion, therefore, the Courts below have taken a correct view of the case. The appeal must be dismissed with costs, hearing fee two gold mohurs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXIII, r. 1—Withdrawal of suit on behalf of minor, when permissible—Minor, benefit of—Court, duty of, to protect interests of minor.

Courts should be very jealous of the interests of minors and should not allow a suit or part of a suit instituted on a minor's behalf to be withdrawn without being satisfied that it is for his benefit. [p. 510, col. 1.]

In a suit for a declaration that the sale of certain land will not affect the plaintiffs' reversionary rights, it appeared that the plaintiffs had in their minority sued along with certain others for the same relief asking in the alternative for pre-emption of the land sold and that, subsequently there had been an amendment of the plaint by which the other plaintiffs alone claimed pre-emption, it being stated that the minor plaintiffs had no money with which to pre-empt. Later on an application was presented by all the plaintiffs for permission to withdraw the prayer for declaration. The Court did not give its permission, nor did it consider whether the withdrawal was for the benefit of the minors. The case proceeded and eventually a decree for pre-emption was passed in favour of the adult plaintiffs, but by mistake the names of all were entered in the decree:

Held, that inasmuch as no reason was given by the next friend for withdrawing the suit on behalf of the minors, nor was the Court asked to allow the plaintiffs to withdraw from part of the suit with liberty to institute a fresh suit in respect of the subject-matter of such part, nor was the interest of the minors considered, the minors were entitled to bring a separate suit for the relief which was abandoned in the previous suit. [p. 509, col. 2; p. 510, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decree of the Additional Judge, Lahore, dated the 31st August 1914, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge, 1st Class, Lahore, dated the 10th June 1914, dismissing the suit with costs.

Lala Mathra Das, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In order to understand the facts of the present case the following pedigree table will be found useful:—

On the 2nd June 1908 Musamm Manna, Bela and Wahga sold 800 kanals of land to Ghulla, defendant respondent, for Rs. 6,000. On the 25th May 1909 a suit was brought by Bakhsha and Jamala, adults, and Rajada and Sajada, minors, through Bakhsha, their next friend, for a declaration that the sale would not affect their reversionary rights; and in the alternative they asked for pre-emption of the land sold. In November 1909 there was an amendment of the plaint by which Bakhsha and Jamala alone claimed pre-emption, it being stated that the minor plaintiffs had no money with which they could pre-empt. Subsequently on the 20th March 1911, an application was presented by the plaintiffs for permission to withdraw the prayer for declaration. No reason, however, was given for this application. It came up before the Court on the 6th May 1911; but as the plaintiffs were not present in person, the hearing was adjourned until the 8th May. On that date Jamal Din stated that he did not wish for a declaratory decree but only for pre-emption. Bakhsha, plaintiff, stated, "I relinquish the claim to a declaratory decree for myself and for the minors." The Court did not give its permission for the withdrawal of this part of the claim, nor did it purport to consider whether the withdrawal was for the benefit of the minors; it recorded an order to the effect that costs would be considered at the time of the final order. The case was then proceeded with and eventually a decree was given for pre-emption of the land in favour of Jamala and Rajada; but in the decree by mistake the names of all the four plaintiffs were entered. Jamala and Rajada appealed for reduction of the price as fixed by the Court. But eventually their suit was dismissed on the ground that they had not paid the sum ordered within the time fixed by the Court. Rajada and Sajada have now brought the present suit for a declaration to have the same alienation of land declared invalid as against them.

The Courts below have dismissed the suit on the ground that the plaintiffs were bound by the withdrawal of part of the previous suit on 8th May 1911, and the plaintiffs have thereupon filed a second appeal in this Court. It is contended on their behalf that the withdrawal does not bind them, mainly because it was without the leave of the Court, which did not consider whether it was in the interests of the minors. In the plaint in the present suit the previous suit was altogether ignored, no mention whatever being made of it. The defendant Ghulla, however, in his pleas referred to the previous suit; but plaintiffs were not called upon to put in any replication to his pleas; nor were they or their Counsel orally examined in respect of them. If they had been, it is possible that fraud or negligence on the part of the next friend of the minors might have been specifically pleaded by them. Counsel for the appellants does not now urge that there was any fraud on the part of the next friend, but he urges that there was gross negligence, and he cites Doraswami Pillai v. Thungasami Pillai (1) and Ram Sarup Lal v. Shah Latafat Hossein (2) as authorities for the proposition that in the circumstances the plaintiffs are not bound by the withdrawal of the previous suit.

In the Doraswami Pillai v. Thungasami Pillai's case (1), where a suit, which was being conducted on behalf of a minor, was withdrawn without leave being asked for or given to bring another suit, the order passed on the petition for withdrawal was set aside by the High Court on revision on the ground that it was prejudicial to the interests of the minor.

The case of Ram Sarup Lal v. Shah Latafat Hossein (2) was one where the next friend of a minor plaintiff withdrew from the suit and it was held that it was open to the minor through another next friend to have the suit re-opened on review, on the ground that the former next friend, though guilty of no fraudulent conduct, was grossly negligent of the minor's interests in withdrawing from the suit. At page 737 of the report the following passage occurs:—

"Against such conduct as his, a minor is entitled to invoke the assistance of a Court of equity either by an application for review of judgment or by separate suit. As remarked by Lord Hardwick in Gregory v. Molesworth (3), the infant has such a remedy when either gross laches or fraud and collusion appear in the next friend."

This case may not strictly come within the terms of section 462 of the Code of Civil Procedure, because it is not proved that the defendants entered into any agreement or compromise with the next friend of the infant, but it is within the scope of the general principle enunciated in Story's Equity Jurisprudence, section 1353: "In all cases where an infant is a ward of Court, no act can be done affecting the person, or property, or state of the minor, unless under the express or implied direction of the Court itself."

The present case is very similar to the one referred to above. No reason was given by the next friend for withdrawing the suit, nor was the Court asked to allow the plaintiff to withdraw from part of the suit with liberty to institute a fresh suit in respect of the subject-matter of such part, nor does the Court appear to have considered whether the withdrawal was in the interests of the minors or not. Under such circumstances, we consider that the minors can bring a separate suit for the relief which was abandoned in the previous suit. A Court should be very jealous of the interests of minors and should not allow a suit or part of a suit instituted on their behalf to be withdrawn without being satisfied that it is for their benefit.

We accordingly accept the appeal and setting aside the orders of the lower Courts remand the case to the Court of first instance for trial on the merits. Stamps in this and in the lower Appellate Courts will be refunded and other costs will be costs in the case.

Divorce Act (IV of 1869), ss. 7, 11—Petition for —Procedure.

A petitioner cannot be allowed to proceed in a Court for the dissolution of his marriage without having observed all the safeguards imposed by the law to prevent the chance of connivance or collusion. [p. 511, col. 1.]

Where a petitioner for dissolution of marriage is unable to discover the name of the co-respondent, he should apply to be excused from making him a party to the petition, on motion to the Judge supported by an affidavit before the hearing of the petition. [p. 511, col. 1.]

Where there is no co-respondent to a petition for dissolution of marriage, the Master ought not to issue citation to the respondent unless the Judge has granted leave to the petitioner to proceed without a co-respondent. [p. 511, col. 1.]

Mr. A. N. Chaudhuri (with him Mr. P. C. Mitter), for the Petitioner.

Messrs. Avetoom and A. C. Banerji, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a petition presented to the Court by C. W. G. Cox for the dissolution of his marriage with the respondent E. F. Cox on the ground of adultery. To this petition there is no co-respondent.

The adultery alleged in the petition is said to be proved by the admission contained in a letter, dated the 31st January, written by the respondent and addressed to the petitioner, in which it is said that she admitted that in a weak moment she had committed adultery with a man who sympathises with her but whose name she will not give up. The other case of adultery alleged is in the month of December, when it is said the respondent on three occasions was visited in the petitioner's house by a man whose name the petitioner has been unable to discover. Now the petition was presented to the Court and the Master directed citations to issue to the respondent. In my opinion, he was wholly wrong in doing that. However that may be, the jurisdiction is a special jurisdiction vested in the Court by the Indian Divorce Act to enable it to grant divorces in respect of persons professing the Christian religion and resident in India. The Act is chiefly modelled on the Matrimonial Causes Act of 1857. Section 7 is the first material section, being placed under the heading "Jurisdiction", and it says:—"Subject to the provisions contained in this Act, the High Courts and District Courts shall, in all suits and proceedings hereunder, act and give relief on principles and rules which, in the opinion of the said Courts, are as nearly as may be conformable to the principles and rules on which the Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes in England for the time being acts and gives relief." The other section that is material in this case, and which is substantially taken from section 28 of the Matrimonial Causes Act of 1857, is section 11, which enacts:—"Upon any such petition presented by a husband, the petitioner shall make the alleged adulterer a co-respondent to the said petition, unless he is excused from so doing on one of the following grounds, to be allowed by the Court:— (i) that the respondent is leading the life of a prostitute, and that the petitioner knows of no person with whom the adultery has been committed; (ii) that the name of the alleged adulterer is unknown to the petitioner, although he has made due efforts to discover it; (iii) that the alleged adulterer is dead." Now the rules in England which govern this application are rules 4, 5 and 6 of the Divorce Court Rules. First rule 4 provides: "Upon a husband filing a petition for dissolution of marriage on the ground of adultery, the alleged adulterers shall be made co respondents in the cause, unless the Judge Ordinary shall otherwise direct." Rule 5 says: "Application for such direction is to be made to the Judge Ordinary on motion founded on affidavit." That it must be by affidavit shows obviously that the direction must be by application to the Judge on motion founded on affidavit before the hearing of the petition. Then rule 6 applies to the case where the address of the adulterer is unknown to the petitioner. It is obvious in this case that the direction ought to have been applied for on motion to the Judge supported by an affidavit and the affidavit ought to be sufficient to satisfy the Court that the petitioner, after having made reasonable endeavours, has been unable to find the name of the co respondent. It seems to me to be a matter of grave public importance that a person should not be allowed to proceed in a Court for the dissolution of his marriage without having observed all the safeguards imposed by the law to prevent the chance of connivance or collusion. In my opinion, the Master ought not to have issued the citation when the petition contained no co-respondent, unless the Judge had granted leave to the petitioner to proceed without a co-respondent. In my opinion, the Court has no jurisdiction to entertain the petition and that, therefore, the petition must be dismissed with costs to the respondent.

Petition dismissed.

Pre-emption, suit for, dismissal of—Vendee recovering costs out of deposit—Suit decreed on appeal—Deposit, whether to be treated as intact—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 144.

A suit for pre-emption was dismissed by the first Court with costs. The vendee thereupon recovered his costs from the deposit of one-fifth of the purchase price made by the plaintiff. On appeal the suit was remanded and the plaintiff eventually got a decree:

Held, that the deposit made by the plaintiff must be treated as if it were intact, and that the plaintiff was bound to pay into Court only the balance of the purchase price after deducting the full amount of his deposit. [p. 52, col. 1.]

Miscellaneous second appeal from the order of the District Judge, Rawalpindi, dated the 2nd January 1917, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge, 2nd Class, Rawalpindi, dated the 11th November 1916, disallowing the objection of the judgment-debtor.

Bhagat Gobind Das, for the Appellant.
Dr. Nand Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In these two connected appeals the same questions arise to understand which it is necessary to give a brief recital of facts. Plaintiff sued for pre-emption in three separate cases. He made deposits of one-fifth of the purchase price. His suits were originally dismissed by the first Court with costs. The defendant vendee then proceeded to recover his costs from the deposits. The District Judge on appeal remanded the cases for re-trial on the merits and his decision was upheld by the Chief Court. Plaintiff was finally successful and obtained elaborately prepared decrees from the first Court, showing how the purchase money was to be paid. The Court allowed the plaintiff the full amount of his deposits and also allowed him deduction of costs. Plaintiff paid up the amounts as ordered by the Court. In fact he paid up sums in excess in both cases. The vendee objected in the first Court that the pre-emption money was not properly paid. His objections were disallowed and his appeals to the District Judge were dismissed.

On appeal it is first argued that the amounts which the defendant vendee had taken as his costs from the original deposits could only have been recovered under section 144, Civil Procedure Code, and that only the balances standing at the credit of the plaintiff could be deducted from the total payable. I agree that plaintiff, if he had wished for a refund of the costs taken by the vendee, could only have proceeded under section 144, but this section appears to have no application to the present case. As it was subsequently held that plaintiff was not responsible for these costs, the deposits were rightly considered intact by the first Court.

The second point taken is—that described in ground 3 of appeal, viz., that the decree did not authorize the decree-holder to deduct costs allowed to him by the Chief Court. This ground of appeal was not pressed before me and the omission was clearly due to an oversight. The first Court was, therefore, justified in allowing a deduction of these costs when the error was brought to its notice.

Counsel also objects to the inclusion of costs of the appeal to the District Judge. In this technical plea he is met by the fact that his grounds of appeal are silent on the subject. Under these circumstances and as the deduction was justly allowed by the lower Court, I decline to take notice of this point.

The first ground of appeal, viz., that the decree-holder did not deposit the money which he was required to do by the Court, is not based upon the facts on the record. The decree-holder did deposit the money which he was required to do by the decree minus his costs of the Chief Court, which he was allowed to deduct by a valid order of the Court.

I dismiss the appeals with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Appeal, right of—Execution—Order overruling judgment-debtor's objection to valuation, whether appealable, —Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 47.

There is no right of appeal against an order of the executing Court overruling the judgment-debtor's objection to the valuation put in by the decree-holder in the sale proclamation and refusing the judgment-debtor's prayer for adjournment of the sale and issue of a fresh proclamation.

Deoki Nandan Singh v. Bansi Singh, 10 Ind. Cas. 371; 14 C. L. J. 35; 16 C. W. N. 124, Panch Dwar Thakur v. Mani Raut, 17 Ind. Cas. 88; 16 C. W. N. 970, relied upon.

Appeal against the order of the Subordinate Judge, 1st Court, Tipperah, dated the 6th of April 1918.

FACTS.—On the 6th of January 1918 the decree-holders made an application to execute their decree. On the same day notices, under Order XXI, rule 66, were issued on the judgment-debtors. The judgment-debtors did not appear on the due date and a sale proclamation was issued on the 22nd February 1918 fixing the 5th of April for the sale. In the proclamation the valuation put by the decree-holders was inserted. On the following day the judgment-debtors appeared and objected to the valuation as put by the decree-holders. They also prayed for adjournment of the sale and issue of a fresh sale proclamation. The objections of the judgment-debtors were overruled by an order, dated 6th April 1918. From the said order the present appeal was preferred.

Babu Mohendra Nath Roy (with him Babu Rupendra Kumar Mitter), for the Respondents.—No appeal lies from the said order. The settlement of sale proclamation is an administrative act and not a judicial act in a judicial proceeding, and orders made in that connection, do not come under section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code. See Sivagami Achi v. Subrahmania Ayyar (1), Deoki Nandan Singh v. Bansi Singh (2) and Panch Dwar Thakur v. Mani Raut (3).

Baba Gunada Charan Sen, for the Appellant, referred to Ganga Prosad v. Raj Coomar Singh (4) and Rajah Ramessur Proshad Narain Singh v. Rai Sham Krissen (5) and submitted that the appeal was competent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal must stand dismissed. Clearly there is no right of appeal in this case, as is shown by the authorities of the cases of Deoki Nandan Singh v. Bansi Singh (2) and Panch Dwar Thakur v. Mani Raut (3). The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs—two gold mohurs.

Muhammadan Law—Guardianship—Mother acting as de facto guardian, powers of—Alienation by mother, validity of—Moveables and immoveables, distinction between—Marriage—Legitimacy—Acknowledgment, presumption arising from—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XIII, r. 1—Documentary evidence, admissibility of.

Under the Muhammadan Law a person who has charge of the person or property of a minor without being his legal guardian, and who may, therefore, be conveniently called a "de facto guardian", has no power to convey to another any right or interest in immoveable property which the transferee can enforce against the infant, nor can such transferee, if let into possession of the property under such unauthorised transfer, resist an action in ejectment on behalf of the infant. [p. 523, col. 2; p. 524, col. 1.]

A mother is entitled only to the custody of the person of her minor child, but is not the natural guardian of the minor and has no larger powers to deal with her minor child's property than any outsider or non-relative who happens to have charge of the infant for the time being. [p. 518, col. 2.]

A father alone, or if he be dead, his executor (under the Sunni Law) is the legal guardian of his minor child. If the father dies without appointing an executor (wasi), and his father is alive, the guardianship of his minor children devolves on their grandfather, and should he also be dead, and have left an executor, it vests in him. In default of these de jure guardians, the duty of appointing a guardian devolves upon the Judge as representing the Sovereign. But the powers of even the de jure guardians to intermeddle with the property of minors are confined within legal limits. If the mother is the father's executrix or is appointed by the Judge as the guardian of the minors, she has all the powers of a de jure guardian. If there is no legal guardian, the person in charge of a minor, (e. g. the mother) has power as de facto guardian to incur debts, or to pledge the minor's goods and chattels, for the minor's imperative necessities, such as food, clothing or nursing, but has no power to deal with the immoveable property. [p. 519, cols. 1 & 2; p. 520, cols. 1 & 2.]

The Muhammadan Law makes a sharp distinction between "goods and chattels" and immoveable property with regard to the powers of dealing by guardians. [p. 521, col. 2.]

Clear and reliable evidence that a Muhammadan has acknowledged children as his legitimate issue raises a presumption of a valid marriage between him and the children's mother. [p. 517, col. 2.]

Documentary evidence which has not been produced at the first hearing of a suit in accordance with Order XIII, rule 1 of the Code of Civil Procedure, may be admitted at any subsequent stage at the discretion of the Court. [p. 517, col. 1.]

Appeal from a judgment and decree of the Calcutta High Court (Mockerjee and Carnduff, JJ.), dated the 30th August 1911, reported as 13 Ind. Cas. 678, affirming a judgment and decree of the Subordinate Judge, Saran, dated the 14th July 1910.

FACTS of the case sufficiently appear from their Lordships' judgment. Ismail Ali Khan died leaving widows and children. Zohra claimed that she was his widow and that two of her children were his children. Zohra for herself and her children executed a conveyance in favour of the plaintiffs, who brought the present suit in ejectment against Ismail Ali Khan's admitted wives and their children. The reliefs sought were; (1) a declaration of the title and status of the plaintiffs' vendors; and (2) a decree for possession of the shares covered by the deed of sale. The defendants denied that Zohra was married to Ismail and that her children were legitimate. Issues were framed. The eighth issue was as follows—"Of what properties the plaintiffs are entitled to recover possession?" The Subordinate Judge decided all the material issues in favour of the plaintiffs and allowed the claim against the contesting defendants. The High Court affirmed that decision. In reference to the contention that Zohra as the de facto guardian of her minor children was incompetent to alienate her children's shares, the learned Judges of the High Court said as follows:—

"It has finally been contended that Enayet Zohra, as merely the de facto guardian of her children, was not competent to alienate their shares, and upon this point reliance has been placed upon the cases of Moyna Bibi v. Banku Behari Biswas (1), Mafuzzul Hosain v. Basid Sheikh (2), Ram Charan Sanyal v. Anukul Chandra Acharya (3), Durgozi Row v. Fakeer Sahib (4), Ummi Begam v. Kesho Das (5), *Syedani v. IMAMBANDI v. MUTSADDI.

Babooee Munraj Koonweree (7). The question, thus raised, does not, however, properly arise in the present suit. The contesting defendants do not claim through Zohra's children; on the contrary, they completely repudiate any claim of the latter and it is not open to them to contend that they will be prejudiced if a decree is made in favour of the plaintiffs. It is conceivable that the plaintiffs may have to face a contest with the ninth and tenth defendants when they come of age and are able to assert their own rights; but in the present litigation the plaintiffs are entitled to succeed as against the first seven defendants, who have denied the title of their vendors."

Hence this appeal.

Mr. Upjohn, K.C., and Dr. Abdul Majid, for the Appellants.—Concurrent findings of the Courts below that Zohra was the wife of Ismail Ali Khan cannot stand in this case, because the Courts arrived at them by improperly excluding the account books from consideration. The accounts filed by the defendants were genuine and the grounds on which the lower Courts excluded them were not put to the defendants' witnesses. The family accounts for more than twenty years showed that Zohra was not the wife of Ismail, and in fact it was conceded before the Subordinate Judge that "the entries in these books completely disprove and demolish plaintiffs' case and this fact is admitted by the learned Counsel for the plaintiffs." The account books were admissible under section 34 of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872. Reference was made to Govind Soonduree Debea v. Juggodumba Debea (8).

There is no evidence to support the concurrent finding that the defendants mutilated the accounts. If the accounts are not left out of consideration, the concurrent findings of the lower Courts on the other part of the case cannot stand as they were arrived at after excluding the accounts: See Tayammaul v. Sashachalla Naiker (9), Rajeswari Kuar v. Rai Bal Krishan (10), Pauliem Valoo Chetty v. Pauliam Sooryah Chetty (11) and Venkateswara Iyan v. Shekhari Varma (12).

The evidence did not establish the alleged marriage ceremony. The requirement of Muhammadan Law of an unambiguous acknowledgment before witnesses is a matter of substance and not of evidence: Baillie's Digest (1865 Edition), pages 4, 5, 7, 749; Baillie's Muhammadan Law of Inheritance (1824), pages 28 and 31; Fatawa-i-Alamgiri, Volume IV, page 48; and Aklemannessa Bibi v. Mahomed Hatem (13). The evidence as to alleged acknowledgments was not sufficiently specific as to the person referred to to raise any presumption: Ashrufood Dowlah Ahmed Hossein Khan v. Hyder Hossein Khan (14) and Musammam Butoolun v. Musammam Koolsoom (15).

Further, Zohra was not the legal guardian of the minors and had no power to alienate their shares: Mata Din v. Ahmad Ali (16). The plaintiffs could not recover more than Zohra's share.

Mr. DeGruyther, K. O., and Sir W. Garth, for the Respondents, were asked by their Lordships to confine their argument to the question as to whether the mother was competent to alienate the minor's share. The widow has power to alienate the minors' share as their de facto guardian. Her act is voidable and not void and the minors on attaining majority would be free to avoid the transaction. The case of Mata Din v. Ahmad Ali (16) did not decide the point. The sale was good subject to the minors' right to set it aside on the ground that it was not for their benefit or was not made for any necessity or any other valid cause.

JUDGMENT.

MR. AMEER ALI.—This is an appeal from a judgment and decree of the High Court of Calcutta, dated the 30th August 1911,* which affirmed the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Saran awarding to the plaintiffs possession of a share in certain landed property situated in that district.

The property in suit belonged originally to one Ismail Ali Khan, a wealthy Muhammadan inhabitant of the Sub-Division of Siwan in the Saran District. The plaintiffs allege that on his death in March 1906 he left him surviving three widows and several children, and that from one of these widows, named Enayet-uz-Zohra, acting for herself and for her two minor children, they purchased the share in suit for the possession of which they brought the present action.

It appears that shortly after Ismail Ali Khan's death the contesting defendants Nos. 1 to 7 applied to the Revenue Courts for mutation of names (as proprietors) in the Collector's records, and, as usually happens in these cases in India, especially in Muhammadan families, immediately this application was made, a claim was put forward on behalf of Enayet-uz-Zohra and her children that they were equally entitled with the other heirs of Ismail Ali Khan to have their names entered as co-sharers in the estate by right of inheritance, the allegation being that Zohra was one of his lawfully wedded wives and that her children were his legitimate issue. The Revenue Courts rejected her claim, holding that it was not established to their satisfaction that she was Ismail Ali Khan's married wife or that the children were his lawful issue. They accordingly made an order directing the registration of the contesting defendants' names in succession to Ismail Ali Khan.

It should be mentioned here that the defendants Nos. 1 and 5 are admittedly Ismail Ali Khan's married wives, defendants Nos. 2, 3, and 4 are his issue by defendant No. 1, and defendants Nos. 6 and 7 his daughters by defendant No. 5.

The plaintiffs are dealers in hide and live also at Siwan. There seems to have been litigation between them and Ismail Ali Khan in his lifetime and since his death they seem to have espoused Zohra's cause. The deed executed by Zohra bears date the 10th June 1906, and purports to convey to the plaintiffs the shares of both herself and her minor children, and in the suit they are included as defendants Nos. 8 to 10. The reliefs sought are of a twofold character: first, a declaration of the title and status of the plaintiffs' vendors; and, secondly, a decree in favour of the plaintiffs for possession of the shares covered by the deed of sale.

The contesting defendants denied, as they had done in the Revenue Courts, that Zohra was one of Ismail Ali Khan's married wives or that her children were his legitimate issue, and they further contended that the shares the plaintiffs claimed to recover did not pass under the sale. The sixth issue framed by the Subordinate Judge seems to relate to this point.

The plaint was filed on the 25th March 1909, but it does not appear to have been admitted until the 2nd April. The contesting defendants filed their written statements in July 1909; after that the case dragged its slow length along until the 18th June 1910, when the actual trial began. In the interim, however, various interlocutory orders were made, including an order for the appointment of Zohra as guardian ad litem for her children (though her interest in the suit was clearly adverse to theirs). Admittedly she was never appointed under the Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890) a guardian of their property.

The examination in Court of the plaintiffs' witnesses commenced on the 16th June 1910; on the 18th June (the date given in the judgment of the High Court does not appear to agree with the date in the order-sheet) they applied for a summons against the defendants for the production of certain bahis, or account books, belonging to Ismail Ali Khan for the Fasli years 1294 to 1313 (1887—1906). The order on this application was as follows: "I decline to issue summons at this stage." And there, so far as the plaintiffs were concerned, the matter was allowed to rest.

As a large part of the judgments of both the Courts in India is occupied with an examination of these bahis, viz., whether they are reliable or not, it is necessary to mention that these very books had been produced and filed in Ismail Ali Khan's lifetime on his behalf in the litigation between him and the plaintiffs; after his death they were returned to the contesting defendants' Pleader, when it was discovered that a large number of leaves were abstracted from several of the books. This was represented to the presiding officer of the Court where the books were filed, but there is nothing to show the result of the representation. The plaintiffs' case appears to have closed on the 26th June, and on the following day the defendants commenced to examine their witnesses. On the same day they produced the bahis. The Subordinate Judge's order on their petition is in these terms: "On the defendants' application filing therewith the bahis from 1294 to 1311 Fasli, it is ordered that they be kept with the records, and that the plaintiffs' Pleader be informed accordingly.' About this time the missing leaves turned up mysteriously. The trial Judge says he received them by post from some unknown source; and apparently after receipt he handed them to the proper officer. Upon becoming aware of this fact the defendants applied to the Court that the torn-out leaves thus re-discovered might be admitted in evidence; and on the 29th June, whilst the trial was proceeding and evidently in the presence of the Pleader for the opposite party, the Subordinate Judge ordered that the leaves in question should be used as evidence, and marked them as Exhibits F 1 to F 5.

It is hardly likely that the leaves were originally abstracted by the defendants and that this roundabout way was adopted for the purpose of getting the books admitted as evidence. On the face of it, the suggestion appears to be absurd.

The use of the contending defendants wished to make of the account books was of a negative character. These books contain regular entries of payments by Ismail Ali Khan to his admitted wives, defendants Nos. 1 and 5, under the honorific designation of Haveli Kalan ("senior mansion") and Haveli Khurd ("junior mansion"), being euphemisms for wives. There is no entry, however, of any payment to Zohra. The defendants accordingly asked the Court to draw from the absence of any such entry in her name the inference that she was not Ismail Ali Khan's wife and did not hold the same position as the other ladies. Counsel for the plaintiffs seems to have been greatly impressed by this argument; in fact, he appears to have conceded that, if the books were to be relied upon, Zohra's claim must fail. He was thus driven to challenge their genuineness. The Subordinate Judge appears to have taken the same view; he thought that the books must be first eliminated before the direct evidence could be properly appraised, and this reasoning runs through the judgments of both the

IMAMBANDI v. MUTSADDI.

Courts in India. The trial Judge on certain grounds came to the conclusion that the bahis must be put aside from consideration as unreliable. He then proceeded to discuss the oral testimony; and in the result found that Zohra was, in fact, a wife of Ismail Ali Khan, and that the defendants Nos. 9 and 10 were his children by her. He accordingly decreed the plaintiffs' claim. And his decree has been affirmed by the High Court of Calcutta. The learned Judges of the High Court also felt impressed with the absence of entries in the bahis in Zohra's name, and, therefore, proceeded to deal with them first. This mode of treatment has been strongly assailed, not without reason, before this Board. It seems to their Lordships that the true criterion for the determination of the question at issue was missed by both the Courts. The onus of establishing the title of their vendors lay primarily on the plaintiffs; the evidence furnished by the books was negative and inferential, and in substance directed to the corroboration of the defendants' witnesses, who denied that Zohra was one of Ismail Ali Khan's wives. Rule 1, Order XIII of the Civil Procedure Code, requires the parties or their Pleaders to produce at the first hearing of the suit all the documentary evidence of every description in their possession or power "on which they intend to rely." But it does not exclude the discretion of the Court to receive any such documentary evidence at any subsequent stage. In the present case the books had been filed previously in another Court, and when produced on the 27th June they were in fact received and ordered to be placed with the records. There seems to have been no objection to their reception for non-compliance with the provisions of the Code. If the plaintiffs had taken notes of certain entries in the books, as is alleged they had done when the bahis were in the other Court, they could surely have cross-examined the defendants' witnesses, who were called to prove the books, as to the discrepancies. Their Lordships are not satisfied that the books are not the genuine account books of Ismail Ali Khan. What effect the absence in them of entries in Zohra's name may have in the consideration of the general evidence is another matter.

In the absence of any statutory provision making compulsory the registration of Muhammadan marriages, the Indian Courts, in case of a dispute as to the factum of a marriage, are usually left to discover, or attempt to discover, the truth from a mass of conflicting and often very unsatisfactory evidence of witnesses. Such has been the burden cast on the Courts in the present instance. The plaintiffs have endeavoured to prove in two ways that Zohra was one of Ismail Ali Khan's wives, viz., first, by direct evidence of an actual marriage, and, secondly, by the acknowledgment by him of her children as his legitimate issue, and by the presumption of marriage arising from such acknowledgment. The defendants, on the other hand, tried to show that Zohra was a woman of loose character, with the object apparently of establishing that it was most unlikely a man in Ismail Ali Khan's position would marry such a person. They also called a number of witnesses, who are said to have been on terms of intimacy with him, to state that they never heard him speak of Zohra as his wife. Including the inference from the account books, all the evidence on the defendants' side is purely and naturally negative. In their Lordships' opinion, the oral testimony regarding the solemnisation of a marriage accompanied by ostentatious ceremonies and high dower is by no means satisfactory, and if the case had stood there, the absence of Zohra's name in Ismail Ali Khan's account books might have weighed heavily against her. But their Lordships find clear evidence of a reliable character regarding his acknowledgment of her children. Her case, therefore, comes within the rule of Muhammadan Law to which Garth, C. J., and Wilson, J. (afterwards Sir Arthur Wilson), gave expression in Mahatala Bibee v. Prince Ahmed Haleem-oozooman (30).

In their Lordships' opinion, the legal presumption arising in favour of Zohra from the acknowledgment of the children is not displaced by the mere inference the defendants seek to draw from the absence of entries in her favour in Ismail Ali Khan's account books. Such absence is capable of explanation, and it is possible she could have explained it had her attention been called to the matter. One explanation, however, is on the surface: on the facts proved in the case it is quite clear that this lady's father, though belonging to the same clan as Ismail Ali Khan, was a man considerably inferior in social status: it is not at all unlikely that the deceased was not particularly proud of his connection with the daughter. This would explain both the absence of the entries and his reticence about her to ordinary acquaintances and even friends. On the whole, their Lordships are of opinion that both Zohra and her children are entitled to their legal shares in the inheritance of Ismail Ali Khan. But the Courts in India have awarded to the plaintiffs, on the basis of the deed of purchase from Zohra, a decree for possession of her share and the shares of defendants Nos. 9 and 10. And the question is, whether they have acquired any title to the infants' shares under the sale by the mother. The defendants objected in the High Court to the decree of the Subordinate Judge on the ground that she had no power to convey her children's interest to the plaintiffs. The learned Judges overruled the objection on the ground that the question did not arise in the present case. Their Lordships regret to have to differ from this view. This is an action in ejectment; the defendants are in possession; the plaintiffs, if they are to obtain possession of the minors' shares, must do so on the strength of their own title. It is essential, therefore, to consider whether the title they allege to have acquired under the conveyance by Zohra is well-founded.

The question how far or under what circumstances according to Muhammadan Law, a mother's dealings with her minor child's property are binding on the infant has been frequently before the Courts in India. The decisions, however, are by no means uniform, and betray two varying tendencies: one set of decisions purports to give such dealings a qualified force, the other declares them wholly void and ineffective. In the former class of cases the main test for determining the validity of the particular transaction has been the benefit resulting from it to the minor; in the latter, the admitted absence of authority or power on the part of the mother to alienate or encumber the minor's property.

In this conflict of opinion, their Lordships think it desirable that a definite rule should, if possible, be laid down; and with this object they propose to review briefly the provisions and principles of the Muhammadan Law, as they apprehend it, governing the subject.

It is perfectly clear that under the Muhammadan Law the mother is entitled only to the custody of the person of her minor child up to a certain age according to the sex of the child. But she is not the natural guardian; the father alone or, if he be dead, his executor (under the Sunni Law), is the legal guardian. The mother has no larger powers to deal with her minor child's property than any outsider or non-relative who happens to have charge for the time being of the infant. The term "de facto guardian" that has been applied to these persons is misleading: it connotes the idea that people in charge of a child are by virtue of that fact invested with certain powers over the infant's property. This idea is quite erroneous; and the judgment of the Board in ʿAta Din v. Ahmad Ali (16) clearly indicated it. There an infant's share was sold by the elder brother, in whose charge the child was, along with his own share, to pay a joint ancestral debt. The vendee at the time of the sale was in possession of the whole property under a mortgage executed by the ancestor. On attaining majority the younger brother, ignoring the sale, brought a suit against the vendee-mortgagee for the redemption of his own share. The defence set up was that the sale by the infant's de facto guardian, made for a valid necessity, was binding on the infant. The lower Courts decreed the plaintiff's claim; on appeal to this Board the arguments proceeded on the same lines as in the present case, though in reverse order.

"It is urged on behalf of the appellant that the elder brothers were de facto guardians of the respondents, and, as such, were entitled to sell his property, provided that the sale was in order to pay his debts, and was, therefore, necessary in his interest. It is difficult to see how the situation of an unauthorised guardian is bettered by describing him as a 'de facto' guardian. He may, by his de facto guardianship, assume important responsibilities in relation to the minor's property, but he cannot thereby clothe himself with legal power to sell it."

And he went on to add:—

"There has been much argument in this case in the Courts below, and before their Lordships, as to whether, according to Muhammadan Law, a sale by a de facto guardian, if made for necessity or for the payment of an ancestral debt affecting the minor's property, and if beneficial to the minor, is altogether void or merely voidable. It is not necessary to decide that question in this case."

And he then proceeded to state the reasons why that was not considered necessary.

This latter passage in Lord Robson's judgment has created the impression that their Lordships' decision was confined to the special facts of that case and left open the general question regarding the validity of alienations by unauthorised guardians of the property of the minors.

As already observed, in the absence of the father, under the Sunni Law, the guardianship vests in his executor. If the father dies without appointing an executor (wasi) and his father is alive, the guardianship of his minor children devolves on their grandfather. Should he also be dead, and have left an executor, it vests in him. In default of these de jure guardians, the duty of appointing a guardian for the protection and preservation of the infants' property devolves on the Judge as the representative of the sovereign (Baillie's "Digest," Edition, 1875, page 689; Hamilton's Hedâya, Volume IV, page 555). No one else has any right or power to intermeddle with the property of a minor, except for certain specified purposes, the nature of which is clearly defined. But the powers of even the de jure guardians are confined within legal limits. For example, whilst an executor-guardian (wasi) may "sell or purchase moveables on account of the orphan under his charge either for an equivalent or at such a rate as to occasion an inconsiderable loss," dealings with his immovable property are subjected to strict conditions (Baillie's "Digest," page 687). The reason for the restrictions is thus given in the Hedâya (Volume IV, page 553):—

"The ground of this" (the difference in the power of dealing with the two kinds of property) "is that the sale of moveable property is a species of conservation, as articles of that description are liable to decay, and the price is much more easily preserved than the article itself. With respect, on the contrary, to immovable property, it is in a state of conservation in its own nature whence it is unlawful to sell it—unless, however, it be evident that it will otherwise perish or be lost, in which case the sale of it is allowed."

In fact the Mussulman Law appears to draw a sharp distinction between moveable and immovable property (A'kâr) in respect of the powers of guardians, as will be seen from the following passage in Baillie's "Digest," page 689:—

"With regard to the executor of a mother or brother,—when a mother has died leaving property and a minor son, and having appointed an executor, or a brother has died leaving property and a minor brother, and having appointed an executor, the executor may lawfully sell anything but *Akar belonging to the estate of the deceased, but can neither sell the Akar, nor lawfully buy anything for the minor but food and clothing which are necessary for his preservation. The executor of a mother has no power to sell anything that a minor has inherited from his father, whether moveable or immovable, and whether the property be involved in debt or free from it. But what he has inherited from herself when it is free from debts and legacies the executor may sell what is moveable, but he cannot sell Akar. If the estate is involved in debt or legacies, and the debt is such as to absorb the whole, he may sell the whole, the sale of Akar coming within his power: and if the debt does not absorb the whole, he may sell as much of it as is necessary to defray the debts, and as to his power to sell the surplus there is the same difference of opinion as has been stated above."

Akar* is immovable property and includes houses, groves, orchards, etc.

When the mother is the father's executrix, or is appointed by the Judge as guardian of the minors, she has all the powers of a de jure guardian. Without such derivative authority, if she assumes charge of their property of whatever description and purports to deal with it, she does so at her own risk and her acts are like those of any other person who arrogates an authority which he does not legally possess. She may incur responsibilities, but can impose no obligations on the infant. This rule, however, is subject to certain exceptions provided for the protection of a minor child who has no de jure guardian. A fatherless child is designated in the law books an "infant-orphan" (yeteem saghir). The Hedaya classifies the acts that may have to be done for an infant under three heads. It says:—

"Acts in regard to infant-orphans are of three descriptions, viz., (1) acts of guardianship, such as contracting an infant in marriage, or selling or buying goods for him, a power which belongs solely to the walee, or natural guardian whom the law has constituted the infant's substitute in those points; (2) acts arising from the wants of an infant such as buying or selling for him on occasions of need, or hiring a nurse for him, or the like, which power belongs to the maintainer of the infant, whether he be the brother, uncle, or (in the case of a foundling) the *mooltakit or taker-up or the mother, provided she be the maintainer of the infant; and as these are empowered with respect to such acts, the walee, or natural guardian, is also empowered with respect to them in a still superior degree; nor is it requisite, with respect to the guardian, that the infant be in his immediate protection; (3) acts which are purely advantageous† to the infant, such as accepting presents or gifts, and keeping them for him, a power which may be exercised either by a mooltakit, brother, or uncle, and also by the infant himself, provided he be possessed of discretion, the intention being only to open a door to the infant's receiving benefactions of an advantageous nature." (Volume IV, page 124, Bk. XLIV.)

The examples given under the second head indicate the class of cases in which the acts of an unauthorised person who happens to have charge of a child are held to be binding on the infant's property. They also help to explain and illustrate the extent of such "de facto guardian's" powers. The permissibility of these acts depends on the emergency which gives rise to the imperative necessity for incurring liabilities without which the life of the child or his perishable goods and chattels may run the risk of destruction. For instance, he may stand in immediate need of aliment, clothing, or nursing; these wants must be supplied forthwith. He may own "slaves" or live-stock: food and fodder must be immediately procured. And these imperative wants may recur from time to time. Under such circumstances power is given to the lawful guardian to incur debts or to raise money on the pledge of the minor's goods and chattels (mata')* (Majma-ul-Anhar, Vol. II, page 571). And this power, in the absence of a de jure guardian, the law extends to the person who happens to have charge of the child and of the child's property, though not a constituted or authorised guardian.

There is no reference to the pledge or sale of immoveable property (A'kâr), as the power of dealing with that class of property is confined to the de jure guardians, and is treated in the Fatawa-i-Alamgiri in a separate chapter (Baillie's "Muhammadan Law of Sale," Chapter XVI).

It is to be observed that under the third "description" of acts that may be needful for an infant, a person in charge of a child, although not a de jure guardian, may validly accept on behalf of his ward an unburdened bounty, it being an act "purely advantageous" to the child, to use the expression of the Hedaya.

*A mooltakit is a person who undertakes to bring up a foundling or an orphan-child.

† In the original the words are nafa mahar, which mean 'unmixed benefit.'

* Mr. Hamilton translates mata as meaning "personal chattels."

IMAMBANDI v. MUTSADLI.

The reasoning on which it is sought to give to persons who happen to have charge of the person and property of a child, and are, therefore, called "de facto guardians," the same powers as are possessed by de jure guardians, is purely inferential. It proceeds on the analogy of a dealing by an outsider who purports to sell another's property without any authority from the real owner. Such a person in the Hanafi Law is called a fazuli, or, as Mr. Hamilton spells it fazoollee, which expression is defined by Richardson to mean a person "busying himself in things not belonging to him, or acting without authority." With the effect of the acts of a fazuli their Lordships will deal presently. Before doing so, they wish to refer briefly to the state of the decisions in the Indian Courts.

The Calcutta High Court, in sustaining transactions entered into by de facto guardians, has proceeded mainly on considerations of necessity for and benefit to the infant. The other High Courts, generally speaking, have cut the Gordian knot by holding that all such dealings with a minor's property were void.

Their Lordships do not feel called upon to examine in detail either set of decisions. But the last case on the subject in the Madras High Court requires their careful and respectful consideration [Hyderman Kutti v. Syed Ali (17)]. In their judgment in this case the learned Judges have examined the law at considerable length, and their decision appears to divide itself into three broad propositions: first, that as regards the powers of guardians, de jure as well as de facto, the Muhammadan Law recognises no distinction as to the nature or kind of property, viz., whether it is immoveable or moveable; secondly, that in substance the powers of an unauthorised person who has charge of an infant are co-extensive with those of a lawfully constituted guardian, except in so far that the acts of the former are subject to considerations of necessity or benefit to the infant; and, thirdly (and this seems to form the essence of the judgment), that dealings by "a de facto guardian" are neither void nor voidable, but are "suspended" until the minor on attaining majority exercises his option of either ratifying the transaction or disavowing it.

With regard to the first of the above propositions, their Lordships have already indicated their views. In their opinion, the Muhammadan Law, for obvious reasons, makes a distinction, and sharp distinction, between "goods and chattels" (mata') and immoveable property (A'kar) with regard to the powers of dealing by guardians.

The second proposition, speaking with respect, appears to their Lordships to lose sight of the fact that the acts of de jure guardians also are subject to the conditions of necessity for or benefit to the infant. So that upon the reasoning of the Madras judgment, the powers of "a de facto guardian" would, to all intents and purposes, be co-extensive with those of a de jure guardian. This conclusion would wipe out one of the most important safeguards provided by the Muhammadan Law for the protection of the interests of infants. The learned Judges say that:—

"The law as regards the effect of dealings with a minor's property by a de facto guardian otherwise than in a case of absolute necessity or clear advantage to the minor is but a corollary of the general rule relating to sales by a person professing to deal with another's property, but without having legal authority to do so, i.e., by a fazuli, as he is technically called; such sales generally are treated as manquf, or dependent."

Then, after referring to various authorities, they continue as follows:—

"The result of the above discussion is that, according to Muhammadan Jurists, in cases of urgent and imperative necessity, such as those mentioned, the de facto guardian can alienate the property of the minor, no distinction being made between moveable and immovable property."

It would have been an advantage to their Lordships if they had been placed in a position to judge for themselves, on the actual texts, the meaning of the Arabian text-writers and commentators. However, the Hedayah and the Fatawa i-Alamgiri are recognised as standard authorities in India on the Hanafi branch of the Sunni Law. Of the Hedayah there is a rendering in English made by Mr.

IMAMBANDI v. MUTSADDI.

Hamilton under the orders of Warren Hastings; and a large part of the Fatawa-i-Alamgiri has been paraphrased into English by Mr. Neil Baillie, which is commonly known as Baillie's "Digest" (Hanafia Law). Both Mr. Hamilton and Mr. Neil Baillie in their renderings have, with the object of elucidation, occasionally added phrases which do not exist in the original, but on the whole the English versions of the Hedayah and of the Fatawa-i-Alamgiri are valuable works on Muhammadan Law.

The subject of sales by unauthorised persons is treated in the Hedayah in a separate section entitled "of Fazooli Bees,* or the sale of the property of another without his consent" (Book XVI, Volume II, page 508). It says:—

"If a person were to sell the property of another without his order the contract is complete, but it remains with the proprietor either to confirm or dissolve the sale as he pleases. Shafei is of opinion that the contract, in this case, is not complete, because it has not issued from a lawful authority, for that is constituted only by property or permission neither of which exist in this case."

It then proceeds to give the arguments of the Hanafi doctors in support of their view that the unauthorised contract is "complete." And then it adds:—

"If the proprietor should die, then the consent of the heirs is of no efficacy in the confirmation of the Fazooli sale, in either case, that is, whether the price has been stipulated in money or in goods; because the contract rested entirely on the personal assent of the deceased."

In other words, the so-called sale remains wholly ineffective until it receives the "confirmation" of the owner, to whom alone belongs the power of "confirming" it. If he dies before he has "confirmed" it, the transaction falls to the ground, as the right to adopt the fazuli's act does not pass to his heirs.

In the Fatawa-i-Alamgiri† the subject is treated under the designation of "dependent sales" (Volume III, page 245 Baillie's "Muhammadan Law of Sale," pages 218-219):—

"When a person sells the property of another, the sale is suspended, according to us [i.e., the Hanafis], for the sanction or ratification of the proprietor; and the existence of both the parties to the contract, and of the subject of sale, is a necessary condition to the validity of his sanction

"If the owner should die before sanctioning the sale, sanction by his heir would not suffice to give it operation. Sanction by an owner himself renders a sale operative."

The word in the above passage translated as "suspended" is derived from the same root as the word that has been translated in the heading as "dependent" and in this connection really means "is dependent upon"; also the words "or ratification" have been introduced by Mr. Baillie by way of explanation. The word ijazat in the original is rightly rendered into "sanction."

The Majma-ul-Anhar states the rule relating to a sale by a fazuli in similar terms; it says in substance that such a sale is "established" (takes effect) on the sanction of the malik (owner), subject to four conditions, which it specifies. And then it adds significantly that according to Shafei (the founder of the second great Sunni School of Law) all dealings by an unauthorised person are absolutely void (batal); Volume II, page 88.

In their Lordships' opinion, the Hanafi doctrine relating to a sale by an unauthorised person remaining dependent on the sanction of the owner refers to a case where such owner is sui juris, possessed of the capacity to give the necessary sanction and to make the transaction operative. They do not find any reference in these doctrines relating to fazuli sales, so far as they appear in the Hedayah or the Fatawa-i-Alamgiri, to dealings with the property of minors by persons who happen to have charge of the infants and their property—in other words "de facto guardians."

The Hanafi doctrine about fazuli sales appears clearly to be based on the analogy of an agent who acts in a particular matter without authority, but whose act is subsequently adopted or ratified

* Correctly Bai'.

† The "Book on Sale" in the Fatawa-i-Alamgiri has been rendered into English by Mr. Baillie under the name of the "Muhammadan Law of Sale" by the principal which has the effect of validating it from its inception. The idea of agency in relation to an infant is as foreign, their Lordships conceive, to Muhammadan Law as to every other system.

In this connection it should be noted that whilst Chapter XII deals exclusively with the effect of "dependent sales," in Chapter XVI the rules relating to the powers of guardians are discussed at considerable length (Baillie's "Muhammadan Law of Sale," page 243; Fatawa-i Alamgiri, Volume III, page 229). The following rule lays down the conditions governing sales by the executor (i. e., the appointed guardian) of the immoveable property of an infant:—

"And, according to modern decisions, the sale of immoveable estate by an executor is lawful only in one of the three cases following: that is, where there is a purchaser willing to give double its value, or the sale is necessary to meet the minor's emergencies, or there are debts of the deceased, and no other means of paying them." (Baillie's "Muhammadan Law of Sale," page 247; Fatawa-i-Alamgiri, Volume III, page 233.)

Having regard to the object in view, this dictum appears to their Lordships to apply to all forms of property which, like A'kar, combine both security and permanency. But it does not exclude the discretion of the Judge to sanction any alteration of investment in the interests of the infant.

The following case affords a further illustration of the limitations on the powers of "de facto guardians":—

"A woman after the death of her husband sells property that belonged to him, supposing herself to be his executrix, and her husband having left minor children; she after some time declares that she was not the executrix, her assertion, however, is not to be credited as against the purchaser, but the sale remains in suspense till her children arrive at puberty. If they should admit that she was the executrix, the sale by her is lawful; but if they deny the fact, the sale is void; and though the purchaser should have manured the purchased land, he has no recourse for reimbursement against the woman. What has been said is on the supposition that the woman sues for a cancellation of the sale, on the ground that she was not the executrix; but if the minor sues on that ground, his claim is to be heard." (Baillie, page 249; Alamgiri, Volume III, page 234).

The rest of the passage is immaterial for the purposes of this judgment.

The above case shows that even where the mother believes she is vested with authority as her husband's executrix, and in that belief purports to deal with the minor's property, a purchaser let into possession by her is liable to be ejected at the instance of the minor. Her own subsequent denial of authority does not affect the purchaser's position; but if the transaction is impugned by the rightful owner—viz., the infant—the onus is on the vendee to establish the foundation of his title, that is, that his vendor possessed in fact the authority under which she purported to act.

A further rule, which is given in the "Book on Pledges" (Mortgages) (Kitab-ur-Rahn) of the Fatawa i-Alamgiri, which does not appear to have been translated by Mr. Baillie, is equally explicit. After stating the principle applicable to the powers of the father to pledge or mortgage his minor child's property, it goes on to say: "the mother: if she pledges (mortgages) the property of her infant child, it is not lawful, unless she be the executrix [of the father] or be authorised therefor by the guardian of the minor or the Judge should grant her permission to pledge the infant's property. Then it is lawful; and the right to possession and user is established in the Murtahin (pledgee or mortgagee) without power of sale;" (Fatawa-i-Alamgiri, Volume V, page 638).

It seems to their Lordships that the power to sell cannot be wider than the power to mortgage.

For the foregoing considerations their Lordships are of opinion that under the Muhammadan Law a person who has charge of the person or property of a minor without being his legal guardian, and who may, therefore, be conveniently called a "de facto guardian," has no power to convey to another any right or interest in immoveable property which the transferee can enforce against the infant: nor can such transferee, if let into possession of the property under such unauthorized transfer, resist an action in ejectment on behalf of the infant as a trespasser. It follows that, being himself without title, he cannot seek to recover property in the possession of another equally without title.

Their Lordships are accordingly of opinion that the decree of the High Court, in so far as it awards to the plaintiffs possession of the shares of the defendants Nos. 9 and 10, should be discharged, and, subject to this variation, it should be affirmed and the appeal be dismissed with costs. And their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

Their Lordships cannot help deprecating the practice which seems to be growing in some of the Indian Courts of referring largely to foreign decisions. However useful in the scientific study of comparative jurisprudence, judgments of foreign Courts, to which Indian practitioners cannot be expected to have access, based often on considerations and conditions totally differing from those applicable to or prevailing in India, are only likely to confuse the administration of justice.

IN NO. 2082 OF 1916

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA—APPELLANT

versus

Srimati JANAKIMONI DAS AND OTHERS—
RESPONDENTS.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 15 (2), applicability of —Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII B. C. of 1885), s. 104H, suit under—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 80, notice under—Exclusion of time during currency of notice.

The provisions of section 15, sub-section (2) of the Limitation Act, do not apply to a suit instituted under the terms of section 104H of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Therefore, a suit under that section must be brought in any event within the six months specified therein and the plaintiff is not entitled to exclude the period of the currency of the notice to the Secretary of State under section 80, Code of Civil Procedure. [p. 527, col. 1.]

Appeals against the decrees of the District Judge, Midnapur, dated the 12th of June 1916, affirming those of the Subordinate Judge, 2nd Court of that District, dated the 23rd of July 1914.

FACTS.—These two appeals arose out of the same suit brought by the respondent under section 104H of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The facts are these:—After the abolition of the salt agency, the Jalpai lands were settled with tenants for purposes of bringing them under cultivation. The land in respect of which the suit was brought was situate in the Mal Jalpai Estate, of which the proprietors were the appellants, Nandas. The predecessor-in-interest of the plaintiff-respondent took settlement of the land for cultivation and made the same culturable. Soon after that, i.e., in 1876, a settlement was made of the Mahal by the Government under Regulation VII of 1822, when the predecessor-in-interest of the plaintiff was recorded as occupancy raiyat. Then there was a suit between the Nandas and the predecessor-in-interest of the plaintiff, which ended in a compromise; the Nandas granting him a raiyati confirmatory lease.

In the year 1910 settlement of the Mahal was made under Chapter X of the Bengal Tenancy Act for purposes of settling revenue, the Mahal being a temporarily settled estate, when the plaintiff was recorded as a tenure-holder, and her rent was increased under section 7 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The Record of Rights was finally published on the 2nd June 1910 and 10th June 1910. The plaintiff thereupon gave notice to the Secretary of State under section 80, Civil Procedure Code, and after the expiry of 2 months as required by that section brought the present suit against the Nandas and the Secretary of State for India in Council. The Nandas did not appear in the suit, but the Secretary of State for India in Council appeared and contested the suit.

Babu Ram Charan Mitter (with him Babu Srish Chandra Chowdhury), for the Secretary of State, Appellant in Appeal No. 2082 of 1916.—The plaintiff had no cause of action against the Secretary of State. The latter was made a defendant in a lower Court and was made a party; although it was said there was no necessity to make him a party and the suit not being brought within 6 months, as required by section 104H of the Bengal Tenancy Act, it was barred by limitation. The other side says that 8 months is the limitation, because a notice is to be given to the Secretary of State within two months before the institution of a suit, and he wants to add these 2 months to 6 months. My submission is that those 2 months are included within these 6 months under section 104H, Bengal Tenancy Act. The other side says because 2 months' notice was to be given to me, limitation would otherwise be virtually reduced to 4 months. But this is not so and I beg to invite your Lordships' attention to Secretary of State v. Gangadhar Nanda (1) in support of my contention, and this decision has been followed in Secretary of State v. Shib Narain Hazra (2) in this Court decided by Richardson and Walmsley, JJ. Whether the Secretary of State is a necessary party or not, I have every right to say that the suit is barred by limitation.

[HUDA, J.—You have been discharged from the suit by the order of the District Judge. Therefore, how are you affected by the order?]

Government is interested in seeing that the correct status of the plaintiff, i.e., whether he is a raiyat or a tenure-holder, is established in the Record of Rights. The lower Appellate Court was wrong in holding that the Secretary of State was not a necessary party.

Babu Saroda Charan Maity, for the Respondents.—The Nandas are the landlords. Government in its sovereign authority takes the revenue. The Government, therefore, is not a necessary party. There is no decree against the Secretary of State, therefore, he had no right of appeal.

So far as the Nandas are concerned, they did not contest the suit either in the trial Court or in the Appellate Court. The District Judge was quite right in rejecting their application. Order XLI, rule 4 or rule 33, Code of Civil Procedure, does not help them. Rangamlal v. Jhandu (3) referred to.

[FLETCHER, J.—You are not entitled to get the deduction of time. The question is, have you a right of suit beyond 6 months?]

Sections 184 and 185 of the Bengal Tenancy Act do not say that subject to those provisions the provisions of the Limitation Act will apply to cases mentioned in the Schedule and not to other cases. There is no such limitation in those sections. Therefore, those sections do not exclude the application of the Limitation Act to other suits not mentioned in the Schedule to the Bengal Tenancy Act.

[HUDA, J.—They mean that.]

I submit not. Then there is section 29 of the Limitation Act, which says that when any special period of limitation is provided for by any special or local Act, the provisions of the Indian Limitation Act will not affect or alter that. Exclusion of time requisite for notice under section 80, Civil Procedure Code, cannot affect or alter the period of limitation prescribed, it simply gives a particular mode of computation.

[FLETCHER, J.—If section 15, clause (2) of the Limitation Act, applies, it will extend the time by 2 months.]

I submit, not. If your Lordships look at the arrangement of the Limitation Act, you will see that sections 12 to 25 do not lay down any substantive rule of limitation. They only provide for the mode of calculation or computation. Dropadi v. Hira Lal (4) Srinivasa Aiyangar v. Secretary of State (5), referred to.

GANGADHAR NANDA v. JNAKIMONI DAS.

I submit not. Refers to Kripa Sindhu Mukherji v. Annada Sundari Debi (6).

[FLETCHER, J.—What is meant by “prescribed” in section 29 and section 15?]

It means prescribed by any legislative authority. It does not mean prescribed by the Limitation Act only.

[FLETCHER, J.—Suppose the Chief Commissioner of Assam passes any Act; would you contend that this section will apply?]

I will say that.

[FLETCHER, J.—There is the case of Secretary of State v. Gangadhar Nanda (1), which is directly in point. That is clearly against you. It was followed in a subsequent case.]

That is so. But those cases were wrongly decided. See Behari Loll Mukerjee v. Mungolanath Mukerjee (7). The decisions are conflicting. Therefore, the matter ought to be set at rest by reference to a Full Bench.

[FLETCHER, J.—Have you any reported case under section 104H which is in your favour?]

I have not, but I say the reasons given in those cases are not correct.

[FLETCHER, J.—How can you say that?]

Because the exclusion of the period of notice will not affect or alter the period of limitation. The period of 6 months remains the same, only the 2 months during which the notice is to be given will not be taken into account for determining the starting point for limitation. The fallacy in those cases is obvious. Your Lordships can refer this case to a Full Bench and see what the effect would be. In the case of other persons the period is 6 months but in the case of Government it will be practically 4 months if the period of notice under section 80, Code of Civil Procedure, be not excluded.

[FLETCHER, J.—At present we are not convinced that these cases are wrongly decided].

Then your Lordships will have to consider another point. This is a suit for declaration of status under the proviso of section 111A, for which the limitation is 6 years;

[FLETCHER, J.—But you amended your plaint so as to bring it under section 104H. On the face of this amendment, how can you say that?]

Even after the amendment the suit is competent for purposes of section 111A proviso. What was the amendment? Before the amendment there were two prayers: (1) For declaration of status; and (2) for reduction of rent. After the amendment both the prayers were amalgamated into one. The prayer for declaration of status was not omitted.

[HUDA, J.—That is only ancillary to the main prayer.]

But see Jogendra Nath Singh v. Secretary of State (8) which says that the only prayer competent in a suit under section 104H is regarding rent.

[FLETCHER, J.—No, after amendment it is a suit under section 104H.]

Then your Lordships will allow me to amend the plaint.

[FLETCHER, J.—No, we cannot allow you to re-amend.]

[HUDA, J.—You can even now bring a suit under section 111A, proviso, if you like.]

Babu Shib Chandra Palit for Babu Khirode Narain Bhuiyan, for the Appellants in No. 2072 of 1916.

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—The question raised in these two appeals is whether the suit was competent. That arises on a consideration of the terms of section 104H of the Bengal Tenancy Act. First of all, it is quite clear that, as against the Nandas, that is, one set of defendants who has preferred one of these appeals, namely, Appeal No. 2072 of 1916, the suit was brought eight months after the final publication of the Record of Rights. There does not seem to be any ground why as against them the period should be extended. As against the Secretary of State for India in Council, the reason why the suit was brought beyond six months is this: The Secretary of State was entitled to two months' notice under the provisions of section 80, Code of Civil Procedure, and the plaintiff's view is that he was entitled under the provisions of section 15, sub-section (2) of the Indian Limitation Act, to exclude the period during which the notice to the Secretary of State was current. That, of course, depends on this: Does the provision of section 15, sub-section (2) of the Indian Limitation Act, apply to a suit instituted under the terms of section 104H of the Bengal Tenancy Act? The decisions of this Court are clear that it does not. There is, first, in support of it the decision in the case of Secretary of State v. Gangadhar Nanda (1). That case, it is admitted, is directly in point. That decision was followed and approved of in Secretary of State v. Shib Narain Hazra (2) by Mr. Justice Richardson and Mr. Justice Walmsley. It is quite clear that we are bound by those two considered judgments of this Court, unless we see reason to disapprove them and send them to a Full Bench. It has been suggested in this case that these two cases ought to be sent for consideration to a Full Bench. I do not think so. I think that both these cases were rightly decided. The only case that has been suggested as having any value as against these two decisions is the case of Behari Loll Mukerjee v. Mungolanath Mukerjee (7). That decision is not consistent with the decision of the Full Bench case in Najendra Nath Mullick v. Mathura Mahun Parhi (9). We cannot send two considered judgments, the terms of which we approve, for consideration by a Full Bench on the doubtful authority of the decision reported as Behari Loll Mukerjee v. Mungolanath Mukerjee (7).

It seems to me quite clear that a suit under section 104H of the Bengal Tenancy Act must be brought in any event within the six months specified in that section. As against the Nandas, there is absolutely no reason why the time should on any account be extended. It is only in the case of the Secretary of State, if at all, that the plaintiff can say that he should get an extension of time. But on the decisions already referred to, in a suit under section 104H of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the parties are not entitled to exclude the time during the currency of the notice to the Secretary of State.

Then, another point is taken which seems to be a point that has got no force in it. It is said that this is not a suit under section 104H but is a suit under section 111A of the Bengal Tenancy Act. That is a most extraordinary proposition to put forward in the Court here. In the lower Court, it was expressly objected by the Government that the suit was not maintainable, it not being a suit under section 104H of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Thereupon, the plaintiff applied to the Court for leave to amend and amended his plaint so as to bring it under section 104H of the Bengal Tenancy Act. How can he be now heard to say that the suit is a suit under section 111A when he deliberately applied to the Court to make such amendments as would bring it under the provisions of section 104H. That is a position that cannot possibly be taken.

Finally, an appeal has been made that we should permit the plaint at this stage to be amended or rather re-amended so that the plaintiff, having once made amendments which he said were necessary to bring the case under section 104H of the Bengal Tenancy Act but which he now urges were not sufficient for that purpose, might further amend his plaint by taking back shelter under section 111A. It is quite clear that he cannot be allowed to shift his case between the two sections as he finds most convenient. He must stick to one case and having made his case under section 104H, it is quite clear that on the decisions of this Court already referred to, the present suit was instituted beyond the period of limitation mentioned in section 104H, sub-section (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act. In my opinion, the suit was incompetent for the Court to deal with at the very outset. The present appeals must, therefore, be allowed and the plaintiff's suit dismissed. In Appeal No. 2072, the Nandas will get costs only in this Court and will bear their own costs in the lower Courts. In Appeal No. 2082, the Secretary of State for India in Council will get his costs in this Court as well as in the Courts below.

SHAMSUL HUDA, J.—I agree.

NAZAR ALI V. ASHRAF ALI.

NAGPUR JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT.

MISCELLANEOUS JUDICIAL CASE No. 9B OF 1917.
December 28, 1917.

Present:—Mr. Prideaux, A. J. C.

NAZAR ALI, MINOR, BY GUARDIAN COLLECTOR, AMRAOTI—APPLICANT

versus

ASHRAFALLI—NON-APPLICANT.

Power-of-attorney, construction of—Minor, suit against—Admission by unauthorised agent, whether binding on minor.

A power-of-attorney should be construed strictly. [p. 528, col. 2.]

Where a power-of-attorney relates to matters connected with the management of a minor's jagir only, it cannot, in the absence of express provisions, be held to authorize the person in whose favour it has been executed to defend the minor's title to the jagir in a suit. Any statements or admissions made by such agent in a suit against the minor relating to the jagir cannot, therefore, bind the minor. [p. 528, col. 2.]

Application for review of judgment in Second Appeal No. 122 B, 1914, dated the 29th September 1916.

ORDER.—This is an application by the respondent, a minor, for review of my judgment passed on the 29th September 1916 in Second Appeal No. 122-B, 1914. The application was presented on the 23rd March 1917, and is thus barred by time 72 days, and objection on this ground has been taken to its admission. The application has been filed by the Collector of Amraoti as guardian, and the circumstances accounting for the delay, as shown in the affidavit of the 22nd March last, are so exceptional that I have no hesitation in extending time. I do so and proceed to consider the grounds on which review is sought. These are as follows: The fact that the applicant who is a minor was not properly represented in the original case and in the first and second appeals was not brought to the notice of this Court. The suit was filed on the 22nd January 1912 and the plaintiff did not move the Court by affidavit or otherwise for the appointment of a guardian to represent the present applicant. One Govindrao, alleging himself to be the agent of Kasam Ali Beg, appeared and made certain statements and admissions on behalf of the minor applicant. But he was not a recognised agent for the minor defendant and had no power to appear. It was not until the 17th July 1912 that the Court discovered that no guardian had been appointed and proceeded to appoint Mirza Kasam Ali Beg. This was after the statements and preliminary issues had been recorded, and the appointment was made without ascertaining the fitness of the said Mirza Kasam Ali Beg to be a guardian. It is contended for the applicant that the said Mirza Kasam Ali Beg on whose power-of-attorney Govinda the agent appeared was formerly acting as the guardian of the estate and person of the minor but was removed from the guardianship by the District Judge, Amraoti, for mismanagement; the Collector being appointed in his place on the 6th September 1915.

The application of Mirza Kasam Ali to be appointed guardian under the Guardians and Wards Act was made to the District Judge in November 1912 and orders were passed on the 12th August 1913. That is long after the statements of the agent complained of had been made, and after the date of the power-of-attorney under which the agent acted. As Mirza Kasam Ali failed to put in an inventory of the property, the District Judge was of opinion that the estate was being mismanaged; he, on the 6th September 1915, removed Mirza Kasam Ali from the guardianship of the property and appointed the Collector such guardian.

It is clear that though this was the case, the said Mirza Kasam Ali failed to intimate the fact to the Civil Courts, nor did he inform the Collector of the second appeal filed by Ashraf Ali then pending. In my opinion in any case the power-of-attorney given to Govinda by Mirza Kasam Ali Beg did not authorise the agent to defend a suit of the character brought by Ashraf Ali. The power related to matters connected with the management of the Jagir, only. A power has to be strictly construed and in the absence of authority in that power to defend the minor's title to the Jagir I cannot hold that the said Govinda was a properly constituted agent for Mirza Kasam Ali in that suit. His statements and admissions cannot, therefore, bind the minor. Mirza Kasam Ali Beg did not live in British India and would not, in my opinion, have been appointed guardian by the trial Court had that Court gone into the matter of his fitness for the appointment. Taking the case as a whole, I have come to the conclusion that the minor applicant was not properly represented and that the agent appointed by Mirza Kasam Ali Beg was not empowered by his power-of-attorney to defend the suit I, therefore, allow this review and cancel the directions contained in my judgment under review as to the burden of proof. I return the case for trial de novo after the appointment of the Collector as guardian for the minor.

No refund certificate will issue and costs will abide the result. I fix Pleader's fees as Rs. 25.

Review allowed.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

ORIGINAL CIVIL SUIT No. 534 OF 1912.

August 20, 1917.

Present:—Justice Sir Asutosh Chaudhuri, Kt.

THE BANK OF UPPER INDIA

versus

THE ADMINISTRATOR-GENERAL OF BENGAL.

Administration of assets—Priority—Crown debts—Mortgage, English, debts secured by—Mortgagee, rights of—Fixtures, whether pass to mortgagee—Shares, deposit of, effect of—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XX, r. 13 (2)—Presidency Towns Insolvency Act (III of 1909), s. 49.

In the distribution of the assets of a deceased person whose estate is under administration by a decree of the Court, under Order XX, rule 13 (2), Code of Civil Procedure, read with section 49 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, all debts due to the Crown must be paid in priority over all other debts, secured or unsecured, except debts secured by a first mortgage in English form. [p. 530, col. 2; p. 533, col. 1.]

In an English mortgage the ownership is wholly transferred to the creditor, which is, however, liable to be divested by the repayment of the loan on an appointed day. The mortgagee has the right to enter upon possession of the property immediately upon execution of the deed, unless the possession of the mortgagor is protected by a covenant for quiet enjoyment till default. The mortgagor has only the right to redeem. The mortgagee is not obliged to apply for sale of the property mortgaged under rule 18 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act. He has no debt proveable in the insolvency until his security has been valued or realised. He stands outside the bankruptcy. [p. 532, col. 2; p. 533, col. 1.]

The general rule is that unless a contrary intention is shown, a mortgage of land or buildings passes the right to the fixtures then upon the premises, and fixtures attached by the mortgagor to the property after the date of the mortgage will also, except under an agreement to the contrary, pass to the mortgagee [p. 533, col. 1.]

The ownership of the property passes to the first mortgagee in an English mortgage but not to the puisne mortgagees. [p. 533, col. 1.]

The rule of law, that where the titles of the Crown and of the subject concur the title of the Crown shall be preferred, except so far as the Legislature has thought fit to interfere with it, appears to be one of universal application. [p. 532, col. 2.]

Shares merely deposited and not actually transferred do not create a right in favour of the depositor superior to the right of the Crown. [p. 533, col. 2.]

Mr. Buckland, for the Alliance Bank of Simla, Ltd.

Mr. Langford James, for the Punjab Government.

Mr. Gregory, for the Administrator-General, Bengal.

JUDGMENT.—This matter was before me on the 2nd September 1915 in connection with the claim of the Administrator-General of Bengal for the refund of a certain sum by the Punjab Government, which that Government claimed the right to set off against the amount which was due to it for still-head duty.

The question which now comes up for consideration arises out of the claim of that Government to priority, in respect of the said amount for still-head duty, over the Alliance Bank of Simla, Limited, and the Delhi and London Bank, claimants Nos. 34 and 33, who are mortgagees.

The deceased died on the 20th January 1911. This suit was instituted on the 27th May 1912 by the plaintiff Bank as unsecured creditors. Letters of Administration to the estate were granted by this Court to the Administrator-General on the 28th March 1912. The mortgages to the present claimants were executed on the 10th April 1903 and the 2nd November 1910 respectively. By an order made by this Court on the 29th August 1913 the Administrator-General was appointed Receiver of the Distillery Company with power to carry on the business with a view to the sale thereof. There was a still-head duty due to the Punjab Government at the time of the death of the deceased. For the purpose of enforcing its claim warrants of attachment of the machinery, plants, stock and other moveable properties of the distillery at different places were executed under section 34 of the Excise Act and section 70 of the Punjab Land Revenue Act. These attachments were issued on the 30th September 1913 for Rs. 1,84,926-0-3. The amount owing appears not to have been definitely settled at the time. These attachments were issued in consequence of the proposed sale of some of the properties by the Administrator-General who had obtained the consent of the mortgagees. Certain steps were taken for the sale of those properties and they were sold, but the sale was cancelled, and the properties in respect of which the warrants of attachment had been withdrawn were subsequently re-attached by the Punjab Government. The Administrator-General then applied to this Court for leave to sell, and on the 13th February 1914 leave was given to him to sell the land, buildings, plants, machinery, etc. of the sugar factories at certain places and to hold the proceeds subject to all encumbrances, attachments and distrains justly made on those properties subject to the further orders of this Court. On the 3rd May 1915 the Administrator General applied for leave to sell the Amritsar Distillery as a going concern, free from encumbrances, but without prejudice to the rights of the Punjab Government and of the mortgagees. An order was made by consent to that effect on the 2nd June 1915. The Distillery was sold on the 29th March 1916. There was a dispute as to a sum of Rs. 17,167-5-0 paid to the Government for duty on certain spirits supplied to troops by the Distillery after the death of the testator. The Administrator-General claimed that it should be refunded, but the Government said that they were willing to refund, provided the amount was set off against their claim. I held on the 2nd September 1915, on the materials then before me, that this amount was refundable by the Government and it has now been reported by the Assistant Referee as an outstanding asset of the estate. This is the position of the contending parties at present. The attachments by the Government were withdrawn and the sales were effected free from encumbrances, but such sales were without prejudice to their rights. The Government in addition to their rights under the Excise Act claim priority over all other debts as Crown debts. The mortgage to the Alliance Bank is in respect of the leasehold properties mentioned as items 5, 6 and 7 of Part II of Schedule A to Referee's report, and upon the distillery and the buildings, plants and machinery thereof in item 1 of Part II of Schedule A, and also upon certain shares belonging to the deceased mentioned as item 7 (b) of Part I of the said schedule. The mortgage to the Delhi and London Bank is a second mortgage of the same properties and a first mortgage of the shares, items X to WW of Part I of the said schedule, and of certain other securities held by the Bank, mentioned in Schedule E, consisting of shares. The assets of the estate are wholly insufficient to pay off the debts. The administration of the estate, therefore, being under a decree of this Court is governed by Order XX, rule 13, sub-clause (2), under which the same rules have to be observed as to the respective rights of secured and unsecured creditors and as to debts and liabilities proveable, as are in force in respect to estates of persons adjudged or declared insolvent within our local limits, that is to say, under section 49 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act of 1909, which provides that in the distribution of the property all debts due to the Crown shall be paid in priority. The question raised is whether there is such priority against the mortgages in favour of the Alliance Bank of Simla, Limited, and the Delhi and London Bank.

In England under the old law it was settled that the Bankruptcy Statutes did not bind the Crown, but owing to the Bankruptcy Act of 1883, as amended, so far as actual proof in bankruptcy goes, the Crown appears to be on the footing of an ordinary creditor, although the provisions relating to the remedies against the property of the debtor and the general effect of section 150 of that Act on the rights of the Crown are by no means clear in every respect, but we need hardly refer to the English Law, as under the Civil Procedure Code we have to consider the matter in view of our Insolvency Act. Order XX, rule 13 (2), provides that the same rules shall be observed "as to respective rights of secured and unsecured creditors and as to debts and liabilities proveable." This rule closely follows section 25 of the Judicature Act of 1873, in which the same words were interpreted by Jessel, M.R., as meaning debts and liabilities which can be proved and the manner in which they are to be proved [see Mersey Steel & Iron Co. v. Naylor (1) which was affirmed in 9 A. C. 434*]. It is argued on behalf of the Punjab Government that in this country a Crown debt is entitled to precedence over every other kind of debt, whether secured or unsecured. This has been based upon a passage in Dr. Ghose's work on Mortgages, 4th Edition, Volume I, page 415, and the authorities there cited, to which I shall refer.

The question in Secretary of State v. Bombay Landing and Shipping Company (2) was whether a judgment recovered by the Secretary of State was entitled to precedence over the claims of ordinary creditors who sought the benefit of a winding up order. The Court held that the Crown was not, either expressly or even by implication, bound by the Indian Companies Act X of 1866, inasmuch as that Act had not worked any alteration in the ownership in the property against which the Secretary of State sought execution. The ownership still remaining in the Company, the doctrine which prevailed in Giles v. Grover (3) was applied. Rex v. Cotton (4) was referred to, and the following observation of Chief Baron Parker was cited with approval, viz., "that the property was not altered was the true reason." Ganpat Putaya v. Collector of Kanara (5) merely decided that the Crown had the first claim for levying Court-fees on the proceeds of a pauper suit. Puthia Valappil Barga v. Veloth Assenar (6) decided that inasmuch as the stamp fee recoverable by the Government in connection with a pauper suit was a first charge under section 411, Civil Procedure Code, the purchase of property sold to recover the amount due to the Government prevailed against the subsequent purchase of the same property sold in execution of any other decree. In Gayanoda Bala Dassee v. Butto Kristo Bairage (7) the amount of Court-fees was declared as the first charge on the premises in which the pauper plaintiff succeeded in getting her right declared, and Sale, J., decided that inasmuch as the Crown had the prerogative of precedence, it was not necessary for the Crown to attach the fund in Court which represented the proceeds of the property sold. These cases do not directly deal with the question now before me and do not appear to me to support the passage cited from Dr. Ghose. Sale, J., relied upon Collector of Moradabad v. Muhammad Daim Khan (8), where it was held that the principle that the Government took precedence of all other creditors is not liable to exception in the case of lien holders, upon the strength of Ganpat Putaya v. Collector of Kanara (5), I have already referred to, which does not appear to me to support the principle enunciated by the Allahabad Court in Collector of Moradabad v. Muhammad Daim Khan (8), which has now been expressly overruled by a Full Bench of that Court: see Dost Muhammad Khan v. Mani Ram (9). I find Stanley, C. J., took the same view of the Bombay case and said, "I am at a loss to see how the Government's claim in respect of the Court-fee in such a case can be properly satisfied out of the property of the mortgagee who is in no way liable for its payment. The Court-fee is no doubt a first charge upon the interest of the mortgagors, but before the mortgagor is entitled to any benefit from the property mortgaged he must... satisfy the subsisting mortgage." The question of the precedence of a Crown debt over private hypothecation debts was discussed in Rama chandra v. Pitchaikanni (10). The learned Judges in that case were not prepared to accept Collector of Moradabad v. Muhammad Daim Khan (8) and said they "hesitated to import into places outside the presidency towns the doctrine of the common law of England relating to Crown debts." They held that the right of Government to priority to a mortgagee was not recognised in the Mofussil, was shown by the express language of the Act—which declared the land revenue to be a first charge on the land—an unnecessary provision if by common law every debt due to the Crown was a first charge on the land. This case has been followed in Ibrahim Khan Sahib v. Rangasami Naicken (11). The Madras cases arose out of sales for Abkari revenue and in the last case I have referred to, the learned Judges held that the sale did not affect a mortgage which had been created prior to the sale. In some of the cases above referred to, a view seems to have been taken that the law relating to the priority of Crown debts in a presidency town where the common law of England may be applied, is different from the law applicable to the Mofussil.

The English Law relating to the matter is conveniently summed up in Coote on Mortgages, 8th Edition, pages 1386-88. It says that a mortgagee is liable to have his security postponed to certain claims of the Crown, which by virtue of its prerogatives has the right to issue an "extent" or execution against all the lands of its debtors, except copyholds, and to follow such lands into the hands of subsequent mortgagees or purchasers, though without notice. The Crown claiming under an "extent" is like a judgment-creditor, subject to prior equities and to such encumbrances as the debtor has lawfully created. Not only all interests actually created by the debtor before the lien of the Crown has attached, but also the conditions to which the lands have been subjected prior to the date of such lien, are binding upon the Crown.

The question in England does not now depend merely upon the common law, which has been largely modified by special Statutes. There is no general priority in all cases for Crown debts over the debts of the subject. The matter before me is a matter solely of the administration of assets under the direction of the Court. In such a case it has been held by James, L. J., in Henley & Co., In re (12) that whenever the right of the Crown and the right of the subject with respect to payment of a debt of equal degree come into competition, the Crown right prevails. It was held that the Crown having a right of distress, which was not taken away by the Companies Act of 1862, could proceed to distress and it was, therefore, right that the Crown debt should be paid in priority to the other creditors. Cotton, L. J., held that this right existed even when the Crown submitted to come in under the administration of the assets in the winding up of the Company. A distinction has always been drawn between bankruptcy and winding up, inasmuch as in the former, the whole of the property is divested from the bankrupt and passes to the trustee and becomes his property, while in the case of winding up there is no such divesting. The decision of the Court of Appeal in Henley & Co., In re (12) rested upon both grounds, namely, that the property had not passed out of the Company and also on the right of the Crown to be paid in priority to all other creditors of equal degree. This case was considered in New South Wales Taxation Commissioner v. Palmer (13). In England it has been held that if for any reason the Crown loses its prerogative remedies, such as extent, or does not choose to avail itself of them, it can still come in and claim priority of payment in administration by virtue of "the incontrovertible rule of law that where the King's and the subjects' title concur, the King's shall be preferred" [R. v. Wells (14)]. Except so far as the Legislature has thought fit to interfere with it, this rule appears to be one of universal application. In the present case there is no question of divesting, because the assets are in the hands of the Administrator-General as Receiver.

The question, so far as we are concerned, depends upon section 49 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act. The position of secured creditors in that Act is different from that of unsecured creditors, see section 12, clause (2). A secured creditor may not petition for adjudication of an insolvent unless he is willing to relinquish his security for the benefit of the general body of creditors, or gives an estimate of the value of his security, and in the latter case he may be admitted as a petitioning creditor to the extent of the balance of the debt due to him after deducting the value so estimated. Schedule II of that Act provides for the proof of debts by secured and other creditors. Clauses 9 to 16 are the rules applicable to the former. A secured creditor may realise his security, or choose to surrender it to the Official Assignee and may prove for the balance. These rules are the same as under the English Bankruptcy Act, 1883.

English mortgages. In such mortgages the ownership is wholly transferred to the creditor, which is, however, liable to be divested by the repayment of the loan on the appointed day. The mortgagees have the right to enter upon possession of the property immediately upon execution of the deed, but the possession of the mortgagor is protected by a covenant for quiet enjoyment till default. The mortgagor has only the right to redeem. The mortgagee is not obliged to apply for sale of the property mortgaged under rule 18 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act. He has no debt proveable in the insolvency until his security has been valued or realised. He stands outside the bankruptcy. I, therefore, hold that the Crown is not entitled to priority over the immoveable properties so mortgaged. In this I am supported by Dost Muhammad Khan v. Mani Ram (9) and Ibrahim Khan Sahib v. Rangasami Naicken (11). The general rule is that unless a contrary intention is shown, a mortgage of land or buildings passes the right to the fixtures then upon the premises, and fixtures attached by the mortgagor to the property after the date of the mortgage will also, except under an agreement to the contrary, pass to the mortgagee.

In respect of the mortgages, the Alliance Bank ranks first. The second mortgagee has a right to redeem, so has the Official Assignee on behalf of the insolvent debtor. The ownership of the property passes to the first mortgagee in an English mortgage, but not to the puisne mortgagee. I, therefore, hold that he is not entitled to priority over the Crown.

The next question is as to the shares. The Alliance Bank claims paramount title to certain of their own shares registered in the name of the deceased which were not mortgaged to them. The claim arises upon clause 35 of their Articles of Association. I do not think this article affects the right of the Crown. In Harrold v. Plenty (15) the deposit of a certificate of shares as security for a debt was held to create an equitable mortgage, or in other words, an agreement to execute a transfer of the shares by way of mortgage. It was not treated as a pledge, on the ground that a share is a chose in-action and the certificate is merely evidence of title. Shares merely deposited and not actually transferred do not seem to me to create a right in favour of the deposit, superior to the right of the Crown. I hold the same in respect of what is claimed as the hypothecation of moveables.

Order accordingly.

ADHIKARI VISHNUMURTHIAYYA—DEFENDANT No. 1—APPELLANT

versus

AUTHAIYA AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS Nos. 1
AND 2 AND DEFENDANTS Nos. 3 TO 5—
RESPONDENTS.

Ejectment, suit for, by tenant-in-common—Claim for fractional possession—Co-tenant impleaded as defendant, right of, to obtain decree for his share on plaintiff succeeding—Offer to pay Court-fee in written statement—Hindu Law—Alienation by widow—Suit for possession by reversioner against alienee from widow—Right of co-reversioner defendant to obtain decree for his share.

Where a tenant-in-common sues in ejectment for his share alone of the property, the co-tenants who are impleaded as defendants and who did not ask to be made co-plaintiffs cannot, on the plaintiff obtaining a decree, be given a decree for their shares on payment of the requisite Court-fee. [p. 534, col. 1.]

The procedure applicable to partition suits where one co-owner seeks a joint declaration by which all co-owners can benefit, cannot be resorted to in the above class of cases. [p. 534, col. 2.]

Somusundara Mudali v. Kulandavelu Pillai, 28 M. 457; 14 M. L. J. 404, distinguished.

Plaintiff sued for recovery of his share of property from 1st defendant, who was an alienee from a Hindu widow. The plaintiff was a reversioner next after the widow, as also was the 2nd defendant. The 2nd defendant offered to pay Court-fee for his share, in the event of the plaintiff succeeding in the suit. The plaintiff obtained a decree for possession of his share, and defendants Nos. 3 to 5, legal representatives of 2nd defendant, claimed a decree for their share:

Held, that no decree could be passed in favour of defendants Nos. 3 to 5 for their shares. [p. 535, col. 1.]

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court of South Canara, in Appeal Suit No. 55 of 1916, preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif of Udipi, in Original Suit No. 167 of 1915.

FACTS appear from the judgment,

ADHIKARI VISHNUMURTHIAYYA v. AUTHAIYA.

Mr. B. Sitarama Row, for the Appellant.—The lower Court erred in giving a decree to defendants Nos. 3 to 5 for their share in the property. The 2nd defendant, whose legal representatives they were, did not ask to be made co-plaintiff and by continuing as a defendant, he risked his position. If the plaintiff had brought a suit for a general partition, then the position might be more favourable for defendants Nos. 3 to 5.

Mr. K. Y. Adiga, (with him Mr. K. P. Lakshmana Row), for the Respondents.—The procedure adopted in partition suits is applicable to this case. The action must be deemed to be brought by the plaintiff for the benefit of his co-reversioner, the 2nd defendant. On plaintiff's succeeding, 2nd defendant was entitled to be delivered his share in this suit alone. He offered to pay the Court-fee in the written statement.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the plaintiff sued the 1st defendant, here appellant, to recover the half share of property alienated to the latter by a widow, whose husband's reversioners plaintiff and 2nd defendant are; 3 to 5 defendants are 2nd defendant's legal representatives. The lower Appellate Court's judgment is concerned with the validity of this alienation; and the 1st defendant has not disputed the correctness of its conclusion in plaintiff's favour before us. The appeal, therefore, so far as it relates to plaintiff's claim, must be dismissed with costs as between him and 1st defendant.

As between 1st defendant and 3 to 5 defendants the facts are that, although the suit was brought in ejectment by plaintiff as a co-owner and 2nd defendant made no attempt to disclaim his position as a defendant, he offered in his written statement to pay the necessary Court-fee in case a decree should be given him for his share, proposing apparently to follow the procedure which is undoubtedly open to a defendant in a suit for partition of joint property; and the question is whether this procedure is open to a tenant-in-common, when his co-tenant has sued for possession of the common property or a part of it.

Before, however, dealing with this question, we refer to another argument: that he took this course without objection being made to his doing so at any stage of the litigation, that it may now be too late for his legal representatives to sue separately and that they should not be prejudiced by 1st defendant's acquiescence with the possibility that they may suffer, if 1st defendant's contention is allowed now. We are not impressed by this argument. It was open to 2nd defendant to have himself made a plaintiff and pay duty on his claim in the ordinary way. He chose at his own risk to adopt a procedure, which enabled him to postpone payment of duty, until he could tell whether it would be worth while to pay it; and, if he was wrong in supposing that the benefit of that procedure was open to him, he risked and his legal representatives must take the consequences. But in fact 1st defendant did not acquiesce in his conduct. The suit was first tried before one District Munsif and afterwards on remand by another; and at each trial a distinct issue as to 1st defendant's right to recover was framed and decided; and, although the grounds of appeal to the lower Appellate Court are badly worded, we are not prepared to hold that Nos. 4 and 19 did not raise 1st defendant's present contention.

On the merits 3 to 5 defendants rely on the analogy of the procedure in suits for partition and ascertainment and possession of a share in joint or common property, in which relief was sought against an alienee thereof and the fact, recognised in Raghuraj Singh v. Bishen Tewary (1), that a suit is maintainable by one co-owner on behalf of all against a trespasser, the inference suggested being that all suits by one co-owner, whether for the whole or of his share in the property in question, must be regarded as so brought and as terminable by a decree in favour of any or all of those on behalf of whom the plaintiff is regarded as suing. This is unsustainable. For it neglects the distinction drawn in Hikmat Ali v. Wali-un-nisa (2) between suits in which the plaintiff (as here) only claims his share and those in which a comprehensive partition between him and his joint owners or co-owners is asked and in which he desires to obtain a joint declaration by which all interested in the property can benefit. Dost Muhammad Khan v. Said Begam (3) and Assan v. Pathuma (4). In Somasunlara Mudali v. Kulandavelu Pillai (5) the plaintiffs, although they purported to sue on behalf of the co-owners, were not regarded as doing so; and the conclusion was that a co-owner defendant could not take advantage of the decision as res judicata. The fact that the defendant then in question was ex parte makes no difference to the principle involved, since it was held sufficient that in the suit, as framed, for the plaintiff's share he could not have been joined as a co plaintiff, and, it may be added, he did not in order to be so joined obtain an amendment in respect of the additional share he claimed. When, as in the present case, the plaintiff sues for his own share alone and not as representing co-owners, nothing regarding the latter's shares is or can legitimately be decided. The right of a defendant to execution of a decree, which does not grant him relief explicitly, has been recognised only in certain well-defined cases, of which this has not been shown to be one. Tricomdas Cooverji Bhoia v. Gopinathji Thakur (6) is relied on; but in it the defendant concerned had asked to be made a plaintiff and the High Court in appeal merely gave him the decree, which would have been given at the trial if this prayer had not been erroneously disregarded. In these circumstances we hold that 3 to 5 defendants were entitled to no decree in the present case.

The result is that the appeal is allowed to the extent that the decree, so far as it is in favour of 3 to 5 defendants, is set aside, but that it is confirmed in other respects. Defendant No. 1 will pay the plaintiff's costs in this Court. The District Munsif gave no costs to 3 to 5 defendants and the lower Appellate Court gave costs only to 4th defendant, who alone of them appeared before it. Defendants Nos. 3 to 5 will pay half of 1st defendant's costs here and in the lower Appellate Court.

Fraud—Ex parte decree set aside on ground of fraud—Revival of suit—Procedure—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXIII, r. 3—Adjustment of suit.

The defendants instituted a suit to set aside an ex parte decree on the ground of fraud. The specific fraud alleged was to the effect that the plaintiff had agreed on a receipt of Rs. 44 from the defendants to withdraw from the suit but that he had not intimated this arrangement to the Court and had, on the other hand, taken advantage of the absence of the defendants to secure against them an ex parte decree. This allegation was fully established and the ex parte decree was set aside on the ground of fraud:

Held, that the setting aside of the ex parte decree revived the original suit and that the parties were restored to the position they occupied on the day the ex parte decree was made, so that the agreement between the parties under which the plaintiff had to withdraw from the suit on receipt of Rs. 44 should be carried into effect by a decree of the Court under Order XXIII, rule 3, Civil Procedure Code, as an adjustment of the suit. [p. 536, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decision of the Subordinate Judge, Hooghly, dated the 30th May 1916, reversing that of the Munsif, Howrah, dated the 29th May 1915.

Babu Manmatha Nath Ray, for the Appellant.

Babu Ram Charan Mitra, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal is directed against an order of remand made in a suit for recovery of arrears of rent and for ejectment. The suit was decreed ex parte, by the trial Court, on the 1st June 1910. The defendants thereupon instituted a suit to set aside the ex parte decree on the ground of fraud. The specific fraud alleged was to the effect that the plaintiff had agreed, on receipt of Rs. 44 from the defendants, to withdraw from the suit, but that he had not intimated this arrangement to the Court and had on the other hand taken advantage of the absence of the defendants to secure against them an ex parte decree. This allegation was fully established and the ex parte decree was set aside on the ground of fraud. An appeal was preferred against this decree, but the finding of the Court of first instance was not challenged. At the instance of the then appellant, an addition, however, was made to the decree to the effect that the original suit do stand revived. The propriety of this direction has not been challenged before us, and in view of the decision of the Judicial Committee in Kharoonissa v. Rowshan Jehan (1), which has been repeatedly followed in this Court, cannot be successfully questioned. The position, consequently, is that the ex parte decree which concluded the suit has been vacated and the suit has been revived. Here the defendant argues, as regards the further progress of the suit, that the parties have been restored to the position they occupied on the day the ex parte decree was made. This contention is obviously sound and was accepted by the first Court; the Subordinate Judge on appeal has, however, taken a different view, and has remanded the case for trial on the merits. This is clearly erroneous. On the day the ex parte decree (subsequently vacated) was made, the true position was that the plaintiff had in fact agreed to withdraw from the suit on receipt of a certain sum of money. Whether the agreement between the parties was to this effect or not, cannot be investigated afresh in this suit. This was the precise subject of investigation in the suit to set aside the ex parte decree on the ground of fraud; indeed, this formed the sole material point for determination in that litigation. Consequently, it must be taken as conclusively decided between the parties that on the day the ex parte decree was made in favour of the plaintiff no ex parte decree should have been made, but the arrangement between the parties, namely, that the plaintiff do withdraw from the suit, should have been carried into effect by a decree of the Court, under Order XXIII, rule 3 of the Civil Procedure Code. We must accordingly now give effect to this adjustment of the suit.

The result is that this appeal must be allowed, the order of remand set aside and a decree drawn up to the effect that the plaintiff withdraws from the suit. The appellant is entitled to her costs in all the Courts. We assess the hearing-fee in this Court at two gold mohurs.

Mortgage suit—Party impleaded without objection, whether can complain of error in impleading him after decision of suit.

A party who has been impleaded in a suit on his own motion or being impleaded does not object, cannot, after being cast in the suit, change front and complain of the error in impleading him. Having taken the chance of a favourable verdict, he cannot be permitted to undo the effect of an adverse verdict by being permitted to retire from the suit. The adverse verdict must, however, be one which is correct in point of law. [p. 537, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Amraoti, in Civil Appeal No. 156 of 1916, dated the 29th March 1917, arising out of Civil Suit No. 94 of 1915, decided by the Sub-Judge, Yeotmal, on the 14th July 1916.

Mr. M. V. Joshi, for the Appellant.

The Hon'ble Mr. M. R. Dixit, for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal arises out of a suit for foreclosure based upon a mortgage, dated the 6th October 1909, executed by the first defendant as manager of a joint family consisting of himself and his brother, the second defendant. The third defendant, who is the appellant before me, was made a party on the sole allegation that he was in possession of the mortgage field No. 6. In Suit No. 55 of 1905 the first two defendants sued the third defendant for, among other reliefs, possession of the western half of survey No. 6, on the ground that defendant No. 3 was in wrongful possession thereof. As regards the eastern half share defendants Nos. 1 and 2 claimed pre-emption. On the 15th May 1909 the defendants obtained on appeal a decree for possession of the western half of survey No. 6 and for pre-emption of the eastern half on payment of Rs 626-10-0 within two months from the date of the decree. It is now conceded that the money was deposited by defendants Nos. 1 and 2 within the time allowed by the decree. In 1912 and 1913 defendants Nos. 1 and 2 applied for execution of the decree but failed to obtain an order of the Court for delivery of possession on account of some technical defects in the applications.

In the present suit the defendant No. 3 pleaded that he was holding field No. 6 in his own right, that possession was not taken in execution of the decree in suit No. 55 and that the right to apply for execution was barred by limitation. There was also an irrelevant plea that the third defendant had no notice of the deposit made by the first two defendants. There was also an untenable plea that the plaintiff's mortgage was taken pendente lite.

The Subordinate Judge held that the plaintiff's mortgagors duly deposited the pre-emption money on the 14th July 1909, and under Order XX, rule 14, acquired a title from the date of the deposit. As regards the plea of limitation it was held that the right of the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 to execute the previous decree was not barred by limitation at the date of the mortgage. The learned Subordinate Judge writes:—

"The defendant No. 3 has no right of redemption at all, as he does not claim any interest through defendants Nos. 1 and 2. Really speaking he was not a necessary party to a foreclosure suit, but his contentions were heard and decided as the plaintiff claimed possession also and the field was in defendant No. 3's possession. In order to avoid multiplicity of suits I have adjudicated upon his claim: and I was within my right to do so [vide, Gokul Chandra Roy v. Rasheswari Chowdhurani (1)]."

The usual foreclosure decree was passed against the first two defendants and possession was decreed as against all the three. On appeal by defendant No. 3 the District Judge merely observes that defendant No. 3 is only entitled to the money deposited as the price of pre-emption.

It is conceded on behalf of the plaintiff-respondent that defendant No. 3 was not a necessary party, but it is argued as the latter did not set up a paramount title, the decree of the lower Court was correct. The defendant No. 3 did claim that he was holding in his own right, but he certainly did not say that he was not a necessary or proper party to the suit. The learned Counsel for the plaintiff-respondent relies upon the following passage in Dr. Gour's Transfer of Property Act:

"But a party who has been impleaded on his motion, or being impleaded does not object cannot, after being cast in the suit, change front and complain of the error in impleading him. Having taken the chance of a favourable verdict, he cannot be permitted to undo the effect of an adverse verdict by being permitted to retire from the suit."

This may be conceded, but it does not touch the real question for decision. The adverse verdict must be one which is correct in point of law. Now all that has been rightly decided in the case is that the plaintiff's mortgagors by paying the pre-emption money acquired a title to the entire field No. 6, and that at the date of the plaintiff's mortgage the mortgagors' right to apply for execution had not been barred.

The learned District Judge is wrong in deciding what the defendant No. 3 was entitled to: what had to be decided was whether the plaintiff can obtain any relief against defendant No. 3. At the utmost the plaintiff can only get a declaration that his mortgagors had a title to mortgage at the date of the mortgage. The plaintiff is not entitled to a decree for possession against defendant No. 3 as he is a mortgagee by conditional sale. He only asked for a foreclosure decree against all the defendants. This, it is conceded, the plaintiff cannot ask for against defendant No. 3, nor has a decree for foreclosure been passed by the Subordinate Judge. As mere mortgagee the plaintiff is not entitled to possession against defendant No. 3. His mortgage-money may be paid by defendants Nos. 1 and 2 and a final decree for foreclosure may never be passed.

The learned Advocate for defendant No. 3 only asks that the relief by way of possession granted against his client should be disallowed. But he does not urge that defendant No. 3 should now be discharged from the suit, as he is willing that any adjudication correctly arrived at should bind him. I have also not been asked by the plaintiff to pass a declaratory decree against defendant No. 3. Under these circumstances, I modify the decree of the lower Courts by disallowing possession against defendant No. 3. Each party will bear his own costs throughout.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 73, O. XXI, rr. 55, 83—‘Assets held by Court’, meaning of—Property of judgment-debtor, attachment of, at instance of several decree-holders—Payment, into Court, of money raised by private alienation under O. XXI, r. 83—Permission, grant of, in execution proceedings started at instance of one decree-holder—Rateable distribution, right to, of all attaching creditors.

Where money is paid into Court by any one of the modes mentioned in Order XXI, rule 55, Civil Procedure Code, it is an ‘asset held by the Court’ within the meaning of section 73 of the Code. [p. 539, col. 2.]

Sorabji Coovarji v. Kala Raghunath, 12 Ind. Cas. 911; 36 B. 156; 13 Bom. L. R. 1193, not approved.

J. C. Galstaun v. Woomesh Chandra Bannerjee, 35 Ind. Cas. 850; 44 C. 789; 25 C. L. J. 303, distinguished.

When permission is granted to a judgment-debtor under Order XXI, rule 83, Civil Procedure Code, to raise money by private alienation and the money thus raised is paid into Court, it is paid under a pending execution application. [p. 539, col. 1.]

Where property is attached at the instance of several decree-holders, permission should not be granted under Order XXI, rule 83, to satisfy only one of the decrees. [p. 540, col. 1.]

Money paid into Court by virtue of a permission granted under rule 83 of Order XXI should not be credited to the decree of the person in whose execution application the permission was ordered, but should be rateably distributed among all the attaching decree-holders. [p. 539, col. 2.]

Semble.—The language of section 73, Civil Procedure Code, is wide enough to cover cases where money is in the hands of the Court, however realised. [p. 539, col. 1.]

Second appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Madura, in Appeal No. 40 of 1915, preferred against that of the Additional District Munsif, Madura, in Original Suit No. 153 of 1913.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. C. V. Ananthakrishna Aiyar, for the Appellants.—There were two attachments on the property of the judgment-debtor and money paid into Court on behalf of the judgment-debtor is an ‘asset held by the Court’ for the benefit of both the attaching creditors. No distinction should be drawn between money realised by Court sale and money paid into Court by virtue of the provision in Order XXI, rule 83. The fact that the permission was granted in the proceedings had at the instance of the plaintiff cannot give him a higher right.

Mr. T. R. Venkatarama Sastriar (with him Mr. P. S. Narayanaswami Iyer), for the Respondent.—On the analogy of the general provisions in Order XXI, the money paid on the judgment-debtor’s behalf should be taken to have been earmarked for plaintiff. To enable all decree-holders to claim rateable distribution, the assets should have been realised by process of execution. Sorabji Coovarji v. Kala Raghunath (1) and Sukeena Katum Sahiba v. Mahomed Abdul Aziz. (2). Money paid into Court as the result of a private alienation by the judgment-debtor is not an asset held by the Court.

JUDGMENT.—Plaintiff and first defendant obtained decrees against one Thoppiah Pillai. Plaintiff applied for execution and an order was made for the attachment of the judgment-debtor’s property. The first defendant also applied for execution and the same property was again attached at his instance. When the property was about to be sold, the judgment-debtor applied under Order XXI, rule 83 of the Code of Civil Procedure, for permission to raise money by private alienation. The District Munsif gave him permission. Why he granted it when there was an attachment at the instance of the first defendant, and why he accepted the payment by the judgment-debtor of monies which could only have covered the amount due to the plaintiff have not been explained. It seems to us that the permission should not have been accorded, but as the judgment-debtor is not before us, we shall not deal with that question any further. In accordance with the permission, the judgment-debtor executed a mortgage on the property and the mortgagee paid into Court money just enough to cover the plaintiff's decree. The District Munsif divided this amount rateably between the plaintiff and the first defendant. Thereupon this suit was instituted to contest that order. The Courts below have held that the money should entirely be given to the plaintiff, apparently on the ground that it was deposited in Court by virtue of the permission obtained in the proceedings taken by the plaintiff. We are unable to agree with them.

Mr. Venkatarama Sastriar, Vakil for the respondent, in his able argument took us through the various analogous provisions contained in Order XXI and argued that the money paid by the judgment debtor must be taken to have been earmarked for the benefit of the plaintiff. A significant change has been made in the language of section 73 of the present Civil Procedure Code. In the old Code, the words were "whenever assets are realized by sale or otherwise in execution of a decree." In the present Code, the words are "where assets are held by a Court." The change was apparently intended to set at rest the question whether the word "realization" should not be restricted to what is paid in by virtue of process taken in execution; but apparently the Legislature has not succeeded in the object. There can be no question that the language of the present Code is wide enough to cover cases where monies are in the hands of the Court by whatever process the same has been realized. It is true that the learned Judges of the Bombay High Court hold that even under the new Code, the money to be held by the Court must have reached its hands in execution. See Sorabji Coovarji v. Kala Raghunath (1). An observation of Mr. Justice Bakewell in Suikeena Katum Sahiba v. Mahomed Abdul Aziz (2) lends support to this proposition. It is not necessary to express any opinion on this question, as we are of opinion that when permission is granted under Order XXI, rule 83, to raise money by private alienation, the money is paid under a pending execution application. The further point which Mr. Venkatarama Sastriar pressed before us was that the money should be taken to have been paid solely to the credit of his client's decree. The learned Vakil asked us to apply the analogy of Order XXI, rule 55. In that rule three classes of payments are indicated. We are prepared to concede that if money is paid outside the Court and the decree-holder certifies the payment, it cannot be said that it is an asset held by the Court. It may be that in such a case, as the attachment would cease to subsist, rival decree-holders can have no remedy, but if money is paid into Court by the other modes mentioned in rule 55, we are not satisfied that this money cannot be regarded as an asset held by the Court. If Sorabji Coovarji v. Kala Raghunath (1) lays down this proposition, we are not prepared to accept it. It must be remembered that an attaching creditor acquires no lien upon the proceeds of the sale because he procured the attachment, and we fail to see why the fact that the attachment is raised in consequence of the payment made into Court should take the money out of the expression "assets held by the Court." As regards J. C. Galstaun v. Woomesh Chandra Bannerjee (3) that was a decision under Order XXI, rule 89. That rule distinctly provides for payment to the decree-holder or to the purchaser, consequently the payment must be taken to be earmarked.

The learned Vakil for the respondent conceded that where monies are realized by process of Court solely at the instance of one of the attaching decree-holders he does not obtain, apart from getting his expenses paid, any higher right than the other decree-holders who have before payment applied for execution. This being so, we fail to see on what principle the fact that the money was paid into Court by virtue of the permission granted to raise money privately should give a larger right to the person in execution of whose decree permission was so granted. The policy of the Legislature seems to be to bring all monies realized at least in process of execution to the hotchpot to be shared by all the decree-holders. It is analogous to distribution on an insolvency. The language of Order XXI, rule 72, shows that even when monies are not actually paid into

(3) 35 Ind. Cas. 850; 44 C. 789, 25 C. L. J. 303.

DINDAYAL SHEODUTTA v. SUKHA.

Court, as in cases where the decree-holder is given permission to purchase property and the sale proceeds are applied to the satisfaction of his decree, the Legislature specifically provided for the money being regarded as assets held by the Court. The intention of the Legislature is to afford every creditor equal opportunities of obtaining a rateable advantage in the available assets of the judgment-debtor. Therefore, unless there is something clear in the language of the provisions of the Code to exempt a payment from being applied to the benefit of all the creditors, Court should incline to the view that monies in the hands of the Court should be shared by all decree-holders rateably.

In this view, we must reverse the decrees of the Courts below and dismiss the plaintiff's suit with costs throughout. The memorandum of objections is dismissed. There will be no order as to costs.

To bring a case under clause (b) of section 81 of the C. P. Tenancy Act it is necessary that there should have been an adjudication as between persons impleaded as parties to the suit and having conflicting interests.

Hemraj Askaran v. Kanhailal, 14 C. P. L. R. 31, followed.

Plaintiff Malguzar sued the defendants for arrears of rent, the amount of which was less than Rs. 100. The defendants pleaded that they were not liable for rent as they had relinquished their share in the holding in favour of their nephew J.

Held, that no second appeal lay, inasmuch as the amount claimed was less than Rs 100, and the case did not fall under clause (b) of section 81 of the C. P. Tenancy Act, J. not being a party to the suit and the defendants and J. not having conflicting claims with regard to the tenancy.

Appeal from the decree of the Additional District Judge, Bilaspur, in Civil Appeal No. 780 of 1917, dated the 4th July 1917.

Mr. P. S. Kotwal, for the Appellant.

Mr. Gangadhar Sitaram, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff-appellant, who is the Malguzar of the village, sues the defendants for arrears of rent. The defence was that by a compromise they have relinquished their share in the holding in favour of their nephew one Jodha and have, therefore, ceased to be liable for rent. This defence has prevailed in the Courts below, and this second appeal has been filed by the landlord.

The preliminary point for decision is whether having regard to the provisions of section 98 of the Tenancy Act there is a second appeal. The amount claimed was less than Rs. 100. Admittedly there will be no second appeal unless the case comes under clause (b) of section 81, that is, "unless a question relating to a title to land or some interest in land has been determined as between parties having conflicting claims thereto." The plaintiff's title to the land has never been disputed. But it is urged that a decision has been arrived at regarding the rights to the tenancy as between the defendants and Jodha. Jodha was not a party to the suit, nor can the defendants and Jodha be said to have had conflicting claims with regard to the tenancy. The defendants admit Jodha's right and do not dispute it. To bring the case under clause (b) it is necessary that there should be an adjudication as between persons impleaded as parties to the suit and having conflicting interests. Hemraj Askaran v. Kanhailal (1). Neither of these conditions is fulfilled in this case. The appeal is dismissed with costs, on the ground that no appeal lies in the case.

Appeal dismissed.

Construction of document—Contract for sale of rice milled by certain firms—Election—Breach of contract.

Defendant contracted to sell a certain quantity of rice to the plaintiff, and the contract gave the seller the right of delivering the milling of seven specified firms. One of the clauses of the contract absolved the defendant from liability in case of accidents to machinery, etc. It appeared that the plaintiff agreed to accept the milling of the defendant's mill, but before the delivery was completed the mill was burnt down. Plaintiff sued the defendant for damages for non-delivery of the balance:

Held, (1) that the clause giving the option to the defendant to deliver the milling of any of the specified firms was inserted for the benefit of the defendant and that the latter could not be compelled to deliver from all the mills; [p. 542, col. 1.]

(2) that the clause relating to accidents to machinery referred to the mill from which delivery was to be taken or was being taken and that that mill having been burnt down, the defendant was absolved from giving or completing delivery of so much of the rice as remained undelivered under the contract. [p. 542, col. 1.]

Mr. Lentaigne, for the Appellants.

Mr. N. M. Cowasji, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The defendants in Rangoon agreed to sell to the plaintiff 10,000 bags of rice, delivery to be taken "ex hopper in April 1916 at Moulmein" date at sellers' option. The contract was in writing, upon one of the defendants' Rangoon printed forms of "rice sale notes."

The plaintiff took delivery of 6,442 bags from the defendants' mill at Moulmein up to 26th April, when the mill was burnt down and the deliveries under the contract ceased. The plaintiff sued for damages for breach of contract in not delivering the balance. The defendants rely upon clause 16 of the contract: "...Accidents to machinery, strikes or sickness of mill hands or coolies always excepted." Clause 18 gives the sellers the right of delivery under the contract the milling of seven specified firms, some of which have no mill at Moulmein, and the defendants' mill is not included. No evidence was taken at the hearing and there is nothing in the contract to show that the defendants had a mill or were entitled to give delivery of their own milling. But the plaintiff in his plaint says that "in terms of the said contract the defendants delivered to the plaintiff 6,442 bags," and the learned Judge on the original side has assumed that the contract was for the defendants' milling. He gave the plaintiff a decree on the ground that clause 18 applied not only to the defendants' mill, but to the other mills mentioned therein as well; and that the defendants were bound to deliver from those other mills if they could not deliver from their own mill.

Clause 16 is in the interest of the seller and absolves him from giving delivery, if prevented from doing so by a breakdown in the mill. Mr. Lentaigne for the defendant-appellant contends that clause 16 refers to the defendants' mill. Mr. Cowasji for the plaintiff-respondent contends that clause 16 would not operate to absolve the seller from giving delivery, until all the mills mentioned in the contract had broken down—which in effect means that clause 16 applies only to the last surviving mill.

If the contract had stated that the defendants were selling their own milling the defendants would not have been under any obligation to deliver their own milling. They could have selected any one or more of the mills mentioned in clause 18; and having communicated to the buyer their election to deliver the whole or a portion of the rice from one of those mills, the contract would have to be read as if the buyer had expressly agreed to buy that quantity of rice of that milling; and the buyer could not require the seller to give him any other milling.

If A agrees to buy rice from B of X milling "ex hopper" and gives B the right of delivering, under the contract, Y milling, and if B elects to give Y milling, A cannot compel B to give delivery of X milling. And the fact that delivery of Y milling has after B's election has been communicated to A become impossible, does not alter the case. Under the contract, the seller is entitled to say that he will give delivery from one mill only. The learned Judge was in error in construing clause 18, which is clearly inserted for the benefit of the seller, as if it imposed an obligation upon the seller to deliver, in certain circumstances, from all the mills.

Clause 16 clearly refers to the mill from which delivery is to be taken or is being taken; and means that if that mill breaks down, the seller is absolved from giving or completing delivery of so much rice as the buyer would have had to take from that mill if it had not broken down. The clause absolves the seller from anticipating and providing against a breakdown in the mill from which delivery is to be given.

In the present case the plaintiff accepted a milling notice on the defendants' mill. It must be taken, therefore, that the parties had agreed that the defendants should be at liberty to give delivery under the contract from their own mill and the milling notice has been taken to have been in respect of the whole quantity of rice. Clause 16, therefore, applies to a breakdown of machinery in the defendants' mill which actually occurred, and the defendants are absolved from any further delivery.

The appeal is allowed and the plaintiff's claim is dismissed with costs in both Courts.

JUDGMENT.—The suit from which this appeal arises was filed on two mortgage bonds, dated respectively the 7th May 1912 and 18th March 1914. The foreclosure decree asked for has been obtained. In this appeal I am concerned with the question of costs. The lower Court, following the stipulations in the two documents sued upon, has given the plaintiff a personal decree for costs of the suit against the present appellant. It is contended for him that this should not have been done. A preliminary objection is raised that no appeal lies. Sidha Gopal Brahmin v. Puran (1) is quoted in support of the objection. This authority does not seem to me applicable, for the decree in the present case cannot be said to be final. It seems to me that an appeal does lie. On the merits, however, I am of opinion that the appellant has no case. There is no valid reason why the mortgagee in the present case should not get his costs and as both mortgage-deeds contain personal covenants to pay, the lower Court was in its discretion justified in directing that such costs should be recovered from the appellant personally. That a Court may award costs personally is clear from Dhondu v. Daulatpuri (2). The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Suit for recovery of land forming part of entire estate, but neither sub-divided nor separately assessed—Valuation, method of—Court-fee payable.*

The Court-fee payable in respect of a suit for recovery of land forming part of an entire area, but neither sub-divided nor separately assessed to land revenue, must be computed on the market value of the land sued for under section 7 (v) (d) of the Court-Fees Act. [p. 544, col. 2.]

Appeal, under clause 15 of the Letters Patent, against the judgment of Mr. Justice Coutts Trotter, in Civil Revision Petition No. 663 of 1915, praying the High Court to revise the order, dated the 27th April 1915, of the Court of the Additional District Munsif of Tenali, in Original Suit No. 43 of 1915.

FACTS appear from the following judgment of COULTS-TROTTER, J.—This case raises the question of the construction of a section of the Court Fees Act, VII of 1870, and the way that the matter arises is this. A suit was brought for the recovery of land which was a definite plot forming part of Survey No. 304 and was in fact 3 acres and 59 cents in extent. That Survey Number, as a whole, consists of 4 acres and 42 cents, out of which 83 cents had been sold away before, leaving a residue of 3 acres 59 cents, which was what the plaintiff was suing for. The point is this, that according to the construction of the Court Fees Act will the question be determined as to what Court has jurisdiction, because it is not contested that on the method of valuation of the land, the jurisdiction of the Court to try will depend. According to the plaintiff the proper sub-section to apply is sub-section 5 (b) of section 7 of the Act, which would be to apply a system of multiplying the revenue payable in order to arrive at the calculation provided by the Act for fixing the value of the suit. According to the defendant, it is sub-section 5 (d) of the section which really governs the matter, in which case the market-value of the land has to be ascertained. According to the plaintiff, as I say, section 5 (b) applies and the words then are these:—“Where the land forms an entire estate.” That is not this case—“or a definite share of an estate, paying an annual revenue to Government, or forms part of such estate, and is recorded as aforesaid,” which by reference to sub-clause (a) means “is recorded in the Collector’s register as separately assessed with such revenue.” It is not disputed that what appears in the Collector’s book is this, a description of the whole area covered by a particular patta, an enumeration of its extent and a figure representing the total revenue payable in respect of that patta. Then there follow particulars which show the rate charged per acre. I am asked to say by the plaintiff that the true construction of this Act is that because you can, by a mathematical calculation, arrive at what fraction of the whole patta any piece of land is, therefore, any and every bit of land that you take within the whole patta must be considered to be separately assessed to revenue. That seems to me to be a proposition which is utterly incapable of being supported, if for no other reason because it gives no meaning whatever to the words “separately assessed.” It is all assessed; the only thing is whether it is separately assessed as distinct from something which is assessed as part of a whole, and that is what I find to be the meaning of the words. Within the meaning of these words, therefore, the land in question in this suit cannot fall.

Then it is said that, even if this is not a part of an estate separately assessed to revenue, nevertheless it may be regarded as “a definite share of an estate.” Once more I make the same criticism on that construction as upon the other. It entirely ignores the word ‘definite’, because every share in an estate is in some sense a definite share, and I have no doubt that what is meant by the words “definite share” is an undivided tangible fraction of an estate as distinct from a defined demarcated plot which has been taken out of an estate. Supposing, for instance, I sell Brownfield plot out of Whiteacre estate, that would be, in my opinion, not a definite share of an estate within the meaning of this enactment. But if I sell a fraction of my Blackacre estate and it has got to be divided up among different kinds of land, that, I think, is a definite share of an estate within the meaning of the section. I observe the same view was taken by a learned Judge of the Allahabad High Court in Reference under the Court Fees Act, 1870, section 5 (1). I am conscious of the extreme inconvenience of this decision but I see no possible escape from that construction of the Act. It leads, no doubt, to this absurdity in some cases. For instance, you might have a case where, if you sue for the recovery of the whole plot, if it falls under sub-section 5 (b), taking five times the revenue would result in a lower value than if you sue for a portion of the land which, according to this view, has to be taken at the market-value. Probably in the present case it may be that a suit for the recovery of the whole Survey Number will have to go to the District Munsif, whereas the suit for a portion of it may have to go to the Subordinate Judge's Court. The result is, doubtless, regrettable and I tried very hard to avoid it; it seems to me that the view of the person who drafted the section in fact was that, wherever you can calculate with reasonable certainty the amount of revenue payable on a plot, you should take 5 or 10 times the revenue and in default of any possibility of measuring the revenue then you must, in the last resort, have recourse to the inconvenient and cumbersome method of valuation by the market-value. That is a logical and intelligible method and must have been the intention of the framer of the Statute, but if so, he has fallen very short of his object; because though, as I say, the construction that I have adopted is probably not what was intended, it is the only possible construction on the wording of the Statute.

The result is that this petition is allowed and I declare that the subject-matter of this suit must be valued according to its market value and the case must be remanded to the lower Court to ascertain the market-value and determine the question of jurisdiction in accordance with the value found. The petitioner's costs in this Court will be paid by the respondent.

Mr. P. Narayanamurthy, for the Appellant.—The Court-fee must be computed under section 7 (v) (b) of the Court Fees Act, and not on the market-value. Though the land sued for is not separately assessed, it is possible to determine, by reference to the Collector's register, which furnishes particulars of the revenue charged per acre, what fraction of the whole area the land in suit is. It must, therefore, be deemed to be separately assessed.

Mr. A. Krishnasawmy Aiyar, for the Respondent.—Section 7 (v) (b) cannot clearly apply. The language used is a 'definite share' of an estate. A fractional plot not sub-divided is not separately assessed. The whole area is assessed. The Court-fee should be calculated according to the market-value.

JUDGMENT.—The report of the District Munsif now received places it beyond doubt that the portion of Survey No. 304, which is a part of the subject-matter of the suit, has not been sub-divided and separately assessed to land revenue.

It cannot, therefore, be valued under clause (b) of section 7 (v) of the Court Fees Act. The order of the learned Judge is clearly right.

The appeal must be dismissed with costs.

and customs" of church, meaning of—"Solemnised", meaning of.

Section 4 of the Divorce Act, which provides that the jurisdiction exercised by the High Court in all causes, suits and matters matrimonial shall be exercised subject to the provisions of the Divorce Act and not otherwise, does not preclude the Court from considering the provisions of sections 4 and 5 of the Christian Marriage Act and declaring a particular marriage void as not having been solemnised in accordance therewith. [p. 546, col. 1.]

The word "solemnised" in section 5 of the Christian Marriage Act means "celebrated" and refers to the ceremony only. [p. 547, cols. 1 & 2.]

Section 5 of the Christian Marriage Act deals only with the ceremony and the person who may perform it, and not with the capacity of the persons on whom it is performed or with the capacity of the person who performs it, save that he should have received episcopal ordination [p. 547, col. 2.]

There is no degree of deception which can avail to set aside a contract of marriage knowingly made, unless the party imposed upon has been deceived as to the person and thus has given no consent at all. [p. 546, col. 2.]

When fraud is spoken of as avoiding a marriage, it means such fraud as procures the appearance without the reality of consent: it does not include such fraud as induces a consent, nor fraud which is practised on a third party in order to procure a license. [p. 546, col. 2.]

Messrs. Giles and Villa, for the Petitioner.

Messrs. DeGlanville and Miller, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In this suit the petitioner seeks to have it declared that his marriage with the respondent is null and void (a) on the ground that his consent was procured by fraud, (b) on the ground that they were married by a Roman Catholic priest, who was by the rules and regulations of his church incapable of marrying them inasmuch as the respondent was a divorced woman, a fact of which he was unaware when he performed the marriage ceremony.

Mr. DeGlanville for the respondent raised a preliminary objection to the jurisdiction relying on sections 4, 18 and 19 of the Indian Divorce Act, the effect of which is clearly, if this Act alone is to be considered, to deprive the Court of any jurisdiction to consider the petitioner's second ground. Mr. DeGlanville also urged that section 4, which provides that the jurisdiction then exercised by the High Courts in all causes, suits and matters matrimonial shall be exercised subject to the provisions of the Divorce Act and not otherwise, precludes the Court from considering the provisions of section 4 of the Christian Marriage Act, which declares that every marriage solemnised otherwise than in accordance with the provisions of section 5 shall be void. In support of his contention he relied upon the case of Gasper v. Gonzales (1), in which Pontifex, J., held that the High Court could not entertain a suit of a matrimonial nature otherwise than as provided by the Indian Divorce Act and, therefore, had no jurisdiction to make a decree of nullity on the ground that the marriage was invalid. This case, however, was decided ex parte. Further in Lopez v. Lopez (2), where the question was whether a certain marriage was void on the ground that the parties were within the prohibited degrees—one of the grounds on which a marriage may be declared null and void under the Indian Divorce Act, it was also argued that the marriage was void under the Christian Marriage Act and Wilson, J., who delivered the opinion of the Full Bench, stated as follows: "Section 5 of Act XV of 1872 enacts, as did the Act of 1855, that 'marriage may be solemnised in India (1) by any person who has received episcopal ordination provided that the marriage be solemnised according to the rules, rites, ceremonies, and customs of the church of which he is a minister'. It was argued that the words 'rites, rules, ceremonies, and customs' here used include rules as to capacity to marry, and make those rules in each case depend upon the law of the church whose minister performs the marriage. That argument would lead by a short process to the same conclusion at which we have arrived upon this reference. The construction of those words is difficult: we are not prepared to express a unanimous opinion upon it and it is unnecessary that we should deal with it."

The case was, therefore, decided on the Indian Divorce Act, but while it is unfortunate that this Court is deprived of the advantage of learning the views of the Calcutta High Court on the meaning of these words, it is significant that it never occurred either to Counsel or to Court to question the jurisdiction to decide the references under the Christian Marriage Act. The Court refrained from doing so only from lack of unanimity and because it was possible to decide the question raised in the case under the Divorce Act. I am of the same opinion: the Christian Marriage Act in section 4 expressly declares that marriages are null which are not solemnised in accordance with the provisions of section 5 and I fail to see how if, as here, the question is whether a particular marriage was so solemnised, I can refrain from deciding it and declaring the result in accordance with the law. I cannot agree with the decision in Gasper v. Gonsalves (1), if, and so far as, it decides to the contrary, and I am not bound by it, and if I were, I should require to be satisfied that the suit being one to declare a marriage solemnised in Chandernagore, a French settlement, null and void, the learned Judge had any jurisdiction to deal with the case at all, for under the Divorce Act decrees of nullity can only be granted in cases where the marriage has been solemnised in British India (section 2) and the same is the case under the Christian Marriage Act. Unless, therefore, Chandernagore is in India, which seems to me doubtful under the General Clauses Act, which defines India as meaning British India together with any territories of any native prince, or chief under the suzerainty of His Majesty, the decision would be one without jurisdiction. As, however, I am not bound by the decision, I do not propose to discuss the point on which I have not had the advantage of hearing argument. I hold that I have jurisdiction to deal with both grounds of the petition.

As regards the first ground, viz., that the petitioner's consent was obtained by fraud, the cross-examination of the petitioner showed that if there was fraud within the meaning of the Divorce Act, it was condoned and the authorities of Moss v. Moss (3) and Swift v. Kelly (4) shew that the frauds alleged do not, according to the principles and rules of the English Courts which under section 7 of the Divorce Act I am bound to follow, afford grounds for granting the relief sought. Thus in Swift v. Kelly (4) the Judicial Committee stated as follows: "It would seem indeed to be the general law of all countries, as it certainly is of England, that unless there be some positive provision of Statute Law requiring certain things to be done in a specified manner, no marriage shall be held void merely upon proof that it had been contracted upon false representations, and that but for such contrivances consent would never have been obtained. Unless the party imposed upon has been deceived as to the person and thus has given no consent at all, there is no degree of deception which can avail to set aside a contract of marriage knowingly made," and in Moss v. Moss (3) Sir Francis Jeune expressed his agreement with this view of the law of England, and stated (page 268) that "when in English Law fraud is spoken of as a ground for avoiding a marriage, this does not include such fraud as induces a consent, but is limited to such fraud as procures the appearance without the reality of consent." In this case it is not alleged that there was no consent, the petitioner expressly pleads that he did consent, but that his consent was procured by fraud. He also pleads that the license was fraudulently obtained by the respondent concealing from the priest that she had been divorced. The alleged fraud upon the petitioner is expressly dealt with by both the above authorities and the fraud upon the priest is inferentially dealt with in Moss v. Moss (3) and expressly in Swift v. Kelly (4), where their Lordships say. "If such be the law touching consent to the marriage itself and the fraud whereby that consent was obtained, it would be extraordinary indeed if another rule were allowed to govern the case where fraud has been practised upon a third party, acting immaterially in granting the license to celebrate it." Moreover, section 19 does not include fraud upon a third party as one of the grounds for invalidating a marriage. At the commencement of the second day's hearing I asked Mr. Giles whether in the face of these authorities and the evidence as to condonation it was worth while proceeding with the case upon the ground of fraud, and he abandoned this portion of it.

It remains to deal with the second ground viz., that the marriage was celebrated by a Roman Catholic priest in this city of Rangoon and that as the lady had been divorced, the marriage was null and void under the provisions of the Christian Marriage Act. Section 5 of the Act provides that marriages may be solemnised in India by (amongst others) any person who has received episcopal ordination, provided that the marriage be solemnised according to the rules, rites, ceremonies and customs of the church of which he is a minister. There is no doubt that in this case the celebrant had received episcopal ordination and no doubt that the marriage was celebrated according to the rules, rites, ceremonies and customs of his church, except as regards the fact that the lady had been divorced. There is equally no doubt on the evidence that according to its rules and customs no priest of the Church of Rome can celebrate a marriage between persons one or both of whom has been divorced, and no person can marry a divorced man or woman. The question, however, is not whether the marriage is valid in the eyes of the church which is simple, but whether it is valid in the eyes of the law which is difficult. It is exactly the question on which the Calcutta High Court were not unanimous, and on which unfortunately they expressed no opinion, and the answer depends upon the meaning of the words "provided that the marriage be solemnised according to the rules, rites, ceremonies and customs of the church." According to the tenets of the Roman Church such a marriage is bigamous, no priest can solemnise it, no person can enter into it. According to the law it is otherwise and if the parties had had their marriage solemnised by a marriage registrar or a clergyman of the Church of England, no question, so far as I can see, could have arisen, and it undoubtedly would have been more prudent if the lady, who it may be assumed desired to contract a marriage that would be binding, had adopted this course. But she elected not to do so, and it is, therefore, necessary to determine, not whether the union is binding according to the Church of Rome, but whether it is binding in law.

In my opinion in this Act "solemnised" means celebrated; see Queen-Empress v. Paul (5), and while the Divorce Act gives the external reasons and causes for which, apart from the ceremony, a marriage may be declared null and void, the Christian Marriage Act in these sections deals with the ceremony and the ceremony only. Section 4 does not say that persons may marry each other if the law of the church by which they are married so permits, and does not say that priests may marry such persons if and only if the law of their church allows, but merely provides, as it seems to me, how every Christian marriage is to be solemnised or celebrated. "Every marriage," it says, "shall be solemnised in accordance with the provisions of section 5 and every marriage not so solemnised shall be null." Again, section 5 does not say that Christians in India may marry one another provided that they are married by a person who has received episcopal ordination and provided further that they are permitted to marry each other by the rules of the church and are married in accordance with its rules, rites, ceremonies and customs, but that marriages may be solemnised in India by certain persons, provided that they are solemnised in accordance with certain rules. In other words, the section, in my opinion, deals only with the ceremony and the person who may perform it and not with the capacity of the persons on whom it is performed or with the capacity of the person who performs it, save as is expressed in the section, viz., that he should have received episcopal ordination. It is not suggested that the parties are not Christians, or that the person who performed the marriage ceremony had not received episcopal ordination or that the ceremony was performed in any way differently from that in which marriages are celebrated in the Roman Church. Such being the case, the marriage, in my opinion, fulfilled the conditions required by the Christian Marriage Act, and the parties in the eye of the law are man and wife.

I dismiss the application with costs, eight gold mohurs.

LETTERS PATENT APPEAL NO. 97 OF 1917.

Present:—Sir John Wallis, Kt., Chief, Justice, Mr. Justice Sadasiva Aiyar and Mr. Justice Spencer.

YEGNARAMA DIKSHADAR AND OTHERS
—APPELLANTS

versus

GOPALA PATTAR AND OTHERS—
RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11, Sch. II, paras. 20, 21—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 526—Scheme for management of private endowment, settlement of, by award—Award, filing of, in Court and decree thereon—Variation of terms by consent of parties, legality of—Res judicata.

A consent decree cannot be set aside by the consent of the parties. [p. 549, col. 1.]

A decree embodying the terms of an award settling a scheme of management for a private endowment cannot be varied or altered by consent of parties where the scheme does not provide for such alteration. [p. 549, col. 1; p. 551, col. 1.]

Alterations in such a scheme can be secured only by a suit filed for the purpose. [p. 549, col. 1.]

Per Wallis, C. J.—Where a decree which settles a scheme for a temple proceeds on the basis that it is a private endowment, the Court should not interfere with such decree by raising an issue in any subsequent proceeding whether the endowment is public. The rights of the public, if any, will not be jeopardised by the decree or any subsequent order made in proceedings between parties to the decree. [p. 549, col. 1; p. 550, col. 1.]

Per Spencer, J.—As against the parties themselves, the decree will operate as res judicata in subsequent proceedings except when one of the issues before the Court raises the question whether the scheme, owing to a change of circumstances or for other good reasons, needs to be altered by the Court. [p. 550, col. 1.]

Appeal, under section 15 of the Letters Patent, against the judgment and decree of Mr. Justice Abdur Rahim and Mr. Justice Napier, in Second Appeal No. 273 of 1915, reported as 41 Ind. Cas. 738, preferred against the decree of the District Court of South Malabar in Appeal No. 184 of 1913, preferred against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge of South Malabar at Palghat, in Original Suit No. 48 of 1911.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. T. R. Ramachandra Aiyar, for the Appellants—The temple is a private endowment and the villagers who had the management of it made a reference to arbitration for framing a scheme. The arbitrators passed an award which was filed in Court and acquired the force of a decree. The petition for filing the award in Court was unopposed. The villagers, by a majority, subsequently varied some of the provisions of the scheme. That they could not do except by obtaining the orders of the Court. The consent of parties cannot have the effect of vacating an order of Court, Ramanathan Chetti v. Murugappa Chetti (1). The decree does not provide for the scheme being altered by the villagers or being superseded by a fresh scheme. None of the parties ever pleaded that it was a public endowment and this Court cannot go behind the allegations in the plaint.

Mr. C. V. Anantha Krishna Aiyar, for the Respondents.—The temple belongs to the villagers and is, therefore, a public endowment. Neither the award nor the decree in which it was merged could bind the body of villagers. The decree could not operate as res judicata.

Even if it is a private endowment, there is nothing to prevent the parties from agreeing to modify the terms of the scheme. The scheme is not unlimited in duration and contingencies that arise have to be provided for. There was no need to apply to Court for directions. The award was only a tentative arrangement providing for the exigencies of the time, and it will be unreasonable to hold that it should not be modified in the light of future contingencies.

JUDGMENT.

WALLIS, C. J.—The case made in the plaint was that the villagers, including the plaintiffs and defendants, are the owners and Urallars or managers of the suit temple situated in their village, that is to say, that it was a private endowment; and this was not contested on the other side. Dealing with the case on this footing we agree with the lower Courts and the learned Judges in holding that the villagers, acting by a majority, were entitled to make the reference to arbitration, Exhibit A, for the purpose of settling a scheme of management and that the award made by the arbitrators, Exhibit B, was afterwards properly filed under section 526 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the 116 Urallars who joined in the petition being entered as plaintiffs and the 46 counter-petitioners being entered as defendants, and thereupon became enforceable as a decree. The order, Exhibit C, recites that some of the counter-petitioners had withdrawn their objections and that some had been removed from the record so that the petition was not opposed.

Assuming that this is to be treated as a consent decree by virtue of the original agreement to refer to arbitration, the next question, as to which the learned Judges have differed, is whether the villagers, acting by a majority, validly set aside the provisions of the award as regards the management of the temple. Mr. Ramachandra Aiyar contended that they could not, relying on the decision of the Privy Council in Ramanathan Chetti v. Murugappa Chetti (1), which does not appear to have been cited before the learned Judges. It was held in that case that an agreement between several branches of a family as to the management by the various branches of a private endowment belonging to the family must hold good until altered by the Court or superseded by a new scheme effected with the concurrence of all parties interested. In this case there is the further objection that the award has acquired the force of a decree. The scheme of the management sanctioned by the decree does not provide for any alterations being made by the majority of the villagers, and I do not think that any such provision can be read into it. It is now well settled that a consent decree cannot be set aside by the consent of the parties. In The Bellcairn (2) Lord Esher, M. R., observed: "When, at a trial, the Court gives judgment by consent of the parties, it is a binding judgment of the Court and cannot be set aside by a subsequent agreement between the solicitors, or the parties even though it be placed in the form of an order by consent on a summons and taken to a Registrar or Master and by him made as a matter of course. It is only the Court, with full knowledge of all the facts on which it is called on to act, which can set aside the first judgment." And in Huddersfield Banking Company v. Lister (3), in which the grounds on which the Court would set aside a consent decree or order were considered, Lindley, L. J., observed: "A consent order, I agree, is an order and, so long as it stands, it must be treated as such, and so long as it stands ... it is as good an estoppel as any other order. I have not the slightest doubt on it". In the present case the respondents, if they wished to modify the scheme in the award, should have filed a suit for that purpose. I, therefore, would allow the appeal and remand the case to the lower Court for disposal according to law. Costs to abide.

I have already said that it is not the case of any of the parties to the suit that this is a public endowment. In Appu Pattar v. Kurumba Bhagavati (4), where such a case was not raised in the pleadings or issues, but the lower Courts went into it and the lower Appellate Court found that the endowment was a public one, this Court set aside the finding as at variance with the case disclosed by the plaint. I think this was the proper course to take, and that we should not be justified in raising such an issue now. The public are in no way represented in this suit, there is no one on the record to assert their rights, and those rights cannot be in any way affected by the decision in this case.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—I agree with my Lord. I was, at first, inclined to hold that, on the pleadings themselves, the temple in question might be held to be a public religious trust and hence the old decree settling a scheme on the award passed on a private reference was a nullity and that the plaintiffs, who rely upon that decree, ought to be non-suited on that ground. It is significant that neither side would unhesitatingly assert that it is not a public temple. In Muthia Chettih v. Perianan Chetti (5) my Lord the Chief Justice says (see pages 232 and 233*): "It may be that a caste or a section of a caste can own a temple as it has been held in Pragji Kalan v. Govind Gopal (6), that they can own vessels for cooking and dining, but in Thackersey Dewraj v. Hurbhum Nursey (7) ... it was held that a temple which was managed by a certain caste was the subject of a public charitable trust and that a scheme could be framed for it under section 539 of the old Civil Procedure Code.... Even if it had been shown that the temple was founded for the use of the particular section of the caste (Ilayathakudi Kovil Nagarathar sub-section of the Nagarathar caste), which consists of several families not shown to be otherwise than very distantly related to one another, we should, as at present advised, be inclined to hold that they are a section of the public and that section 92 is applicable. Serious inconveniences would arise from holding that a temple of this kind was the private property of such a large body of persons as the Ilayathakudi Kovil Nagarathars, and we think that such private ownership should be strictly proved." To hold that a temple alleged to belong to the fluctuating residents of four large streets is a private temple is rather extraordinary, even though it is not expressly admitted by either side that other Hindu worshippers have been worshipping in the temple. However, as the case seems to have been argued all along on the footing that the old decree was a valid decree and as my Lord has, in his judgment, sufficiently indicated that the interests of those members of the public who would be interested in the temple, if it was a public temple, would not be jeopardised by the decision in this suit, I concur with my Lord in the decision in this suit just now pronounced by him in favour of the plaintiffs.

SPENCER, J.—I am satisfied, on the pleadings, that no case has been put forward as to this being a public charitable trust and that no such plea should be allowed to be raised now. I also feel no doubt that a scheme for the management of a private endowment, such as the village temple or Devaswom which has been the subject of an award and has further become embodied in a decree, cannot be altered merely by the will of the majority of the persons interested, unless in the scheme itself there is a provision for such alteration. Against those defendants among the villagers who were themselves parties to the decree, the decree would operate as res judicata in subsequent proceedings, except where one of the issues before the Court raised the question whether the scheme owing to a change of circumstances or for other good reasons needed to be altered by the Court. One of the learned Judges, who heard the second appeal (Abdur Rahim, J.), considered it reasonable to treat the award as intended to be only a temporary arrangement. There is nothing in the award, so far as I have been able to discover, to limit the duration of the scheme and, therefore, it must be treated as remaining in force until set aside or altered by a competent authority, that is, by a Court having jurisdiction in the matter.

I agree that the appeal should be allowed, that the plaintiffs should be given a decree declaring the proceedings of September 25th, 1910, invalid so far as they purported to contravene the decree in Original Suit No. 292 of 1898.

I think the suit must be remanded to the Subordinate Judge for deciding what reliefs the plaintiffs are entitled to out of those claimed in the plaint upon our decision on this point of law.

Appeal from the decree of the 3rd Additional District Judge, Buldana, dated the 4th July 1917, in Civil Appeal No. 7 of 1917.

Mr. M. V. Joshi, for the Appellants.

Mr. K. K. Gandhey, for Respondents
Nos. 1 and 2.

JUDGMENT.—The plaint alleges that the defendants Nos. 1 to 4 illegally dispossessed the plaintiffs of the eastern half of survey

BHAOSINGH v. MAIEPAT.

No. 29, which belonged to the latter and was in their possession till 1915. Paragraph 2 of the plaint further states the cause of action against the remaining defendants in the following terms:

"Before the Record of Rights the khata of the field stood in the name of Dhurpati, defendant No. 5. As she and defendants Nos. 1 to 4 have given the field in suit in mortgage to Narayan Sah, defendant No. 6, in the year 1912, she and Narayan Sah have been impleaded as defendants Nos. 5 and 6. Defendant No. 7 is joined because he helped in removing the crops."

The plaintiffs' prayer was that they be put in possession of the eastern half which the defendants Nos. 1 to 4 have taken possession of and that the defendants be directed to pay Rs. 97 as mesne profits.

The defendants Nos. 1 to 4 pleaded that they were in possession under a mortgage of 1888 executed by one Gopai, the predecessor-in-title of defendant No. 5, who was according to these defendants owner of a half share in the survey number. The case proceeded ex parte against the remaining defendants. The Munsif held that the plaintiffs were the owners of the whole field and were in possession till 1915, that Gopai's title to the half share was not proved, and that defendant No. 7 did not help defendants Nos. 1 to 4 in taking away the crops. Dismissing the suit against defendant No. 7, the Munsif passed a decree in favour of the plaintiffs against all the other defendants directing them to deliver back possession and to pay Rs. 40 as mesne profits.

Against this decree defendants Nos. 1 to 4 appealed. The Additional District Judge held that the plaintiffs were in possession till 1915, that Gopai, the predecessor-in-title of defendant No. 5, had an interest in the field but that the interest was lost by lapse of time. The lower Appellate Court further held that the mortgage by defendants No. 1 to 4 was not proved. On these findings the appeal was dismissed.

This second appeal has been filed by defendants Nos. 1 to 4. It is contended on behalf of the plaintiffs-respondents that the finding of the lower Appellate Court regarding the appellants' mortgage is fatal to the appeal and that no question of title on the part of defendant No. 5 can be raised by the present appellants by way of jus tertii. It is also urged that Order XLI, rule 4, does not apply to the case, as the appellants are bound to fail upon the finding that their mortgage is not proved. It is contended that rule 4 applies only when the Court is competent to interfere with the decree in favour of the appellants, without reference to the merits of the case so far as the non-appealing defendants are concerned, and that the non-appealing defendants can only be given the benefit of a decision so arrived at in favour of the appellants. On behalf of the appellants reliance is placed upon Order XLI, rule 33, and it is further contended that the decree of the lower Courts proceeds upon a common finding applicable to all the defendants that the plaintiffs have proved their title. I have come to the conclusion that the appeal must succeed even if the scope of Order XLI, rule 4, is limited in the manner contended for by the plaintiffs-respondents and apart from a resort to the provisions of Order XLI, rule 33.

The plaint is not very clear as to the cause of action against the defendants other than the four defendants. Although the actual dispossession was by the first four defendants, yet mesne profits have been claimed against all, and the Court has decreed both ejectment and mesne profits against all defendants except defendant No. 7. In other words, the decree has been passed against the representatives of Gopai under whom the appellants claimed. This could only have been passed upon the view that all the defendants acted in concert in dispossessing the plaintiffs, and this appears to be the suggestion made in paragraph 2 of the plaint. Upon any other interpretation of the plaint it is difficult to see how the plaintiffs were entitled to anything but a declaratory relief against defendants Nos. 5 and 6. The decree of the Courts below proceeds then upon the ground that although ejectment was by the defendants Nos. 1 to 4, all the defendants against whom the suit has been decreed were acting in concert. To act in concert with another person is to act under his authority and hence the trespass may be justified by showing title in that person.

The appellants admit that they have failed to prove their derivative title as based upon their mortgage deed of 1888, but, I think, they are entitled to say that as the plaint proceeds upon an allegation of joint trespass, they are entitled to defeat the plaintiffs' claim by showing title in one of the co-defendants. The plaintiffs cannot maintain a suit based merely upon their previous possession against defendant No. 5 if the latter has a title to the land. Under these circumstances the argument that defendants Nos. 5 and 6 have not appealed does not carry much force. A defendant who is sued as a trespasser, can rely upon the title of his co-defendant if both are alleged to have been acting in concert, even though his own derivative title is not proved. There is nothing in this view which militates against the view adopted in Nand Ram Patel v. Narbad Patel (1), which is strongly relied upon by the plaintiffs-respondents. I think that notwithstanding the adverse finding on their mortgage the appellants are entitled to show that defendant No. 5 has a title to the land in dispute. The plaintiffs denied that Gopai ever had any interest in land. There was, therefore, no plea nor issue about Gopai losing her rights by lapse of time. This can only be decided after taking proper pleadings and framing proper issues.

The decree of the lower Appellate Court is set aside as against the defendants Nos. 1 to 6 under Order XLI, rule 4, and the appeal is remanded to the lower Appellate Court for a fresh decision with advertence to the above remarks. Costs will follow the result. There will be no order for refund of Court-fees.

Appeal remanded.

APPEAL SUITS No. 47 OF 1913 AND No. 243 OF 1914.

versus

ALAGAMMAL AND ANOTHER—PLAINTIFF AND DEFENDANT No 2—RESPONDENTS.

Hindu Law—Partition—Construction of deed—Division of all family properties except outstandings—Severance in status—Presumption—Partial partition, validity of.

A deed of partition executed between a Hindu father and son recited that the division was effected owing to misunderstandings among the female members of the family and that the properties mentioned in the schedule were divided. The outstandings due to the family were not mentioned in the schedule:

Held, (Wallis, C. J., dubitante) that the family became divided in status even in respect of the outstandings. [p. 555, col. 1.]

Per Wallis, C. J.—The mere fact that members of a joint Hindu family execute a document dividing a particular item of property is not sufficient to raise a presumption that they intend to become divided in status. If such a presumption is to be raised, there must be something else in the document to raise it. [p. 553, col. 2.]

Vaidyanath Aiyar v. Aiyasamy Aiyar, 1 Ind. Cas. 408; 32 M. 191; 19 M. L. J. 94; 5 M. L. T. 49, explained.

Per Seshagiri Aiyar, J.—When one member of a joint family intimates his willingness to get separate from others, that effects a division in status and where a partition is effected not specifically dealing with some items of the joint property, the status of co-parcenary cannot be deemed to be continued in respect of this property which is not divided. [p. 555, col. 1.]

Appeals against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Ramnad at Madura, in Original Suits Nos. 76 and 151 of 1911, respectively.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

The Hon'ble Mr. T. Rangachariar (with him Mr. K. V. Krishnaswamy Ayyar).—The deed of partition only effected a severance in respect of the properties specifically dealt with in it. The outstandings have been reserved and the co-parcenary status continues with respect to them. The existence of the outstandings was known to the parties and it was the intention of the parties that they should be reserved. Moreover, the usual clause recited in all partition deeds, 'Hereafter there shall only be blood relationship between us and not property relationship', which is generally indicative of a complete severance, has been omitted in this deed.

Mr. S. Srinivasa Aiyangar (with him Mr. A. Krishnasawmy Aiyar), for the Respondents.—There can be no partial partition. From the language of the document and the express recital as to differences among the females, a presumption can be raised that the parties intended to become divided in status. The exclusion of outstandings was due to the feeling that the debts and decrees should be apportioned as they were realised, and there was no use in dividing what might subsequently turn out to be bad debts.

JUDGMENT.

A. S. No. 47 of 1913.

WALLIS, C. J.—The only question of any difficulty in this case is, whether Exhibit VI is to be construed as effecting a division in status as well as a division of the specific properties with which it deals expressly. This appears to me to be mainly a question of the construction of the document. In Vaidyanath Aiyar v. Aiyasamy Aiyar (1), where a partial partition of property was held to raise a presumption of division in status, there was no deed of partition and I do not think that case is an authority for holding that wherever the co-parceners execute a document dividing a particular item of property, that raises a presumption that they intended to become divided in status. If such a presumption is to be raised, there must, in my opinion, be something else in the document to raise it. This was a case of partition between the 1st defendant and his father, the 1st defendant being the son by the second of the father's three wives, and the partition was brought about by the father who was ill and anxious to make provision for his first and third wives, as he did immediately afterwards in the Will, Exhibit VII, which he executed on the 3rd September, the partition deed Exhibit VI having been executed on the 25th August. Whereas the partition deed appears to have included expressly all the joint family properties except the outstanding decrees and debts which were not mentioned and were considerable, the Will bequeaths to the two wives not only the moveable and immoveable properties taken by the testator under the partition deed, Exhibit VI, but also "all the moveable and immoveable properties, outstanding loans and properties belonging to me at present but not included in this Will, and the moveable and immoveable properties, outstanding loans and properties which I may hereafter acquire." This shows, if proof were necessary, that at the time of Exhibit VI all parties must have been perfectly well aware of the existence of other joint family properties which were not included in the partition deed and the question, in my opinion, is whether from the terms of the deed we can gather that it was the intention of the parties to remain joint or become separate as to these items also. I do not think any strong presumption arises from the situation of the parties who were father and son. If the father was anxious to partition all the joint family properties with a view to leaving his share to his two wives, it is strange he did not do so expressly and it has been argued that such was not his intention and that he probably thought that the Rs. 20,000 he took under the deed would be sufficient for these wives, and was willing that his son should take the rest by survivorship. As against this, there is the recital in the deed that there had been differences between the 1st defendant and his father as well as between the women of the family. On the whole I do not think it is safe to draw any inference as to the motives actuating the parties. The partition deed, however, after providing for the division of the scheduled properties, goes on: "As we have effected partition in this manner", and provides that the 1st defendant's mother who had been living in his family should be maintained by him and not by her husband. I have come to the conclusion, though not without hesitation, that these provisions are sufficient to enable us to raise a presumption that the parties intended to become divided in interest and that the decrees and outstanding debts were not divided then, simply because they had not been collected and it was not possible to make a satisfactory division then as it could not be foretold what they would realize. The appeal will be dismissed with costs.

SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—I agree. Mr. Rangachariar frankly conceded that in the face of the overwhelming evidence there is regarding the consent of his client to the division, he is not prepared to argue that the partition was brought about by undue influence.

The only question remaining for consideration is whether the father and son were divided in status with reference to the outstandings not specifically mentioned in the deed of partition. In my opinion the language of the document shows that the parties to it were no longer to remain joint. It says, (a) we have lived hitherto as members of a joint family; (b) that owing to differences among females, it has become necessary to effect partition; (c) we shall effect a partition in respect of the undermentioned properties. The list of outstandings is not among the properties mentioned in the schedule. It has also to be mentioned, as pointed out by Mr. Rangachariar, that the usual clause "that from this day forward there shall not be property relationship but only blood relationship" is not to be found in this document. Nonetheless I am of opinion that the intention of the parties was to get separated from each other; the reason for the necessity is given in the document. The 1st defendant is the son by one of the wives who was not living with her husband, and the pleadings and the evidence in this case show that the father effected the partition with a view to devise his share of the properties to his other two wives. I am unable to see that the father had any object in allowing particular portions of the property to continue as joint property. The explanation suggested by Mr. Srinivasa Aiyangar for their omission from the schedule is the most natural one. There were debts and decrees. It was apparently thought that the moneys should be apportioned as they were recovered. Some may have been or proved to be bad debts and it was not thought expedient to divide the debts at that time.

On principle, I am clear that the father and son became divided in status. It is pointed out by Mr. Ghose in his Hindu Law that there is nothing in the Smirithis to encourage a partial partition. The practice has grown up in recent years. Mr. Mitra in his Tagore Lectures dealing with this special question quotes from the Smirithis and commentaries to show that partial partition was unknown to Hindu Law. I do not think it necessary to quote excerpts from the texts to substantiate this position (see Mitra on the "Law of Partition," pages 330 and 331).

As regards the decided cases, Sir Richard Garth in Radha Churn Dass v. Kripa Sindhu Dass (2) says: "It seems indeed very doubtful whether by the Hindu Law any partial partition of the family property can take place except by arrangement." The decisions in Satya Kumar Banerjee v. Satya Kirpal Banerjee (3), Bhowani Prosad Shaha v. Juggernath Shaha (4) and Ajodhya Pershad v. Mahadeo Pershad (5) prove that with the consent of the co-parceners a partial partition is possible. The decisions in Timmi Reddy v. Achamma (6), Kandasami v. Doraisami (7) only say that there can be a partial partition. On the other hand in Vaidyanath Aiyar v. Aiyasamy Aiyar (1) it was clearly laid down that when once a partition was made, the presumption is that it effected a complete severance of interest. This was followed in Sundaramma v. Kamakotiah (8). In Anandibai v. Hari Suba Pai (9) Chandavarkar, J., says: "If it is proved that there has been a breach in the state of union, the law presumes that there has been a complete partition both as to parties and property. The presumption in question continues until it is rebutted by proof of an agreement, which means proof of intention on the part of some to remain united as before and to confine the partition to the rest, or, if the partition was intended to extend to the interests of all individually, there must be proof that some of them re-united." I entirely agree. The recent decision of the Judicial Committee in Suroj Narain v. Iqbal Narain (10) indicates that when one member intimates his willingness to get separate from the others, that would effect a division in status. In the present case there was an agreement to become divided in consequence of misunderstandings among the female members of the family. I am unable to hold that the status of co-parcenary was intended to be continued with regard to the properties not specifically dealt with in the partition deed. It is conceded that, apart from the language of the document, there is no evidence to prove that the parties intended to remain joint with reference to the properties not specifically mentioned. I would dismiss the appeal with costs.

CIVIL REGULAR No. 339 OF 1915.

Present:—Mr. Justice Robinson.

THE OFFICIAL ASSIGNEE—PLAINTIFF

Haji MAHOMED HADY—DEFENDANT.

Procedure—Judges, change of—Successor, whether bound to accept finding of predecessor on certain issues.

A Judge who is called upon to decide a case on the conclusion of all the evidence is not bound by the previous decision of his predecessor on certain issues, and can decide them afresh.

Messrs. Cowasji, Das and Banerji, for the Plaintiff.

Mr. Giles, for the Defendant.

ORDER.—This case came on for hearing last January before another Judge, who framed the issues. By consent of parties he heard arguments and decided the first issue. The case did not come up again till now for various reasons. Mr. Giles now urges that the decision on the first issue be re-opened and that I must re-consider that issue. He relies on a ruling of a Bench of this Court, Ma Nyo v. Ma Yauk (1), which decides that the Judge deciding the case on the conclusion of all the evidence is not bound by the previous decision on certain issues and can decide them afresh. I am bound by this decision, with which I entirely agree. The only question is, whether the parties having consented to this course it is open to either of them to claim a fresh decision. The question covered by the issue is not an easy one, and it is now said that the translation of the Will the interpretation of which was involved is incorrect. I feel that I should have to consider and come to a conclusion on this issue in any case, and, therefore, even if the parties were estopped, I should still desire the matter to be argued.

I am not bound by the previous decision, but I do not think I should decide adversely to the previous decision if I should have to do so, without hearing Counsel.

The whole case must, therefore, be started now on all the issues as amended by me.

RESPONDENT.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 113, 116—Sale of goods by description—Warranty, implied—Inspection before purchase, effect of—Breach of contract—Damages. Section 113 of the Contract Act closely follows sections 14 and 15 of the English Sale of Goods Act. [p. 556, col. 2.]

Where goods are sold by description, there is an implied warranty that they are of merchantable quality, even where they have been inspected before purchase. If, however, the buyer has examined the goods, there is no implied condition as regards defects which such examination ought to have revealed. [p. 557, col. 1.]

PEER MAHAMAD ROWTHER V. DALOORAM JAYANARAYAN.

Per Spencer, J.—Section 116 of the Contract Act deals with defects which are detectable only by expert examination. [p. 558, col. 1.]

Appeal from the judgment and decree of Mr. Justice Coutts Trotter, dated 10th August 1917, passed in the exercise of the Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction of this Court, in Civil Suit No. 375 of 1916.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. M. D. Devadoss, for the Appellant.—The goods were inspected by the plaintiff before purchase. Section 113 of the Contract Act, which applies to purchase of goods by description, does not say that there is any warranty as to their being of merchantable quality. Under section 116 the seller is not responsible for latent defects in the articles sold. There is no proof that the damage by white ants was caused before the goods were delivered in Madras.

Mr. V. V. Srinivasa Aiyangar, for the Respondent.—Section 113 of the Contract Act follows the language of the corresponding sections 14 and 15 of the English Sale of Goods Act. According to the latter enactment, there is an implied warranty as to merchantable quality.

The inspection by the buyer can give him no cause of action for defects which were revealed. Section 116 of the Contract Act does not apply to the facts of this case. It refers to defects detectable by experts.

JUDGMENT.

WALLIS, C. J.—This is an appeal from a judgment of Mr. Justice Coutts Trotter giving the plaintiff damages for breach of contract, on the ground that the goods delivered pursuant to the contract were found to be damaged by white ants and not of merchantable quality. Mr. M. D. Devadoss, in appeal, has raised a fresh point that section 113, Indian Contract Act, does not mean that in the case of sales by description and sales by sample there is the same warranty that the goods are of merchantable quality as is provided in sections 14 and 15 of the English Sale of Goods Act, 1893. It would be a very extraordinary thing if these two Statutes, which are founded on the same course of English decisions, were found to vary in such a material particular as this. The language used in section 113, Indian Contract Act, is not as clear as the language used in the Sale of Goods Act, which uses the words "merchantable quality." But the first illustration to section 113, Indian Contract Act, is clearly taken from the case of Gardiner v. Gray (1), which was one of the earliest cases to lay down that there was a warranty that the goods 'shall be saleable in the market under the denomination mentioned in the contract between them' (the parties). There was a series of cases subsequently, including the case of Jones v. Just (2) down to the case of Mody v. Gregson (3). That case was decided in 1868 about the time when the Indian Contract Act was under consideration, and it appears fairly clear that the language of section 113 was borrowed from the language of that eminent Judge the late Mr. Justice Willes at page 55 of the judgment in that case. He says: "Another class of cases is that of goods bought under specified commercial description, either by sample, or even after inspection of bulk" (the two cases dealt with in the section). He goes on: "In such cases it is an implied term, notwithstanding the sample or inspection, that the goods shall reasonably answer the specified description in its commercial sense. The sample in such cases is looked upon as a mere expression of the quality of the article, not of its essential character, and notwithstanding the bulk be fairly shown or agree with the sample, yet if from adulteration or other causes not appearing by the inspection or sample, though not known to the seller, the bulk does not reasonably answer the description in a commercial sense the seller is liable." It is quite clear that the language of section 113 is modelled upon the language of the case just cited, and does not mean to lay down any rule different from that which is to be found in the English cases and which has now been embodied in greater detail in sections 14 and 15 of the Sale of Goods Act.

That being so, the facts of the present case are that the bales of yarn were imported from England bound in iron hoops; and the evidence is that one hoop was removed, when they were imported. If the other hoops had been removed, and the goods had been subjected to a detailed examination, they would have lost the character of imported goods under which they were sold. The evidence is that the outside of the bales was inspected before purchase but without removing the hoops or examining the contents. That was such examination as the case admitted of, and it would not disclose the fact that white ants had got in and had injured the yarn. Therefore, the fact that the goods were inspected before purchase is no answer. Section 113 of the Indian Contract Act says: Where goods are sold as being of a certain denomination, there is an implied warranty that they are such goods as are commercially known by that denomination, although the buyer may have bought them by sample, or after inspection of the bulk." Section 14 of the Sale of Goods Act says that "the goods shall be of merchantable quality; Provided that if the buyer has examined the goods there shall be no implied condition as regards defects which such examination ought to have revealed." The present defect is not a defect which the examination which took place ought to have revealed.

The only other point is as to whether there were sufficient grounds to justify the finding on the evidence of the learned Judge that these goods were not of a merchantable quality at the time they were delivered by the seller to the buyer.

They were delivered in Madras and despatched by rail to Calcutta and took about 15 or 16 days to arrive. They were examined on arrival and found to be very badly damaged by white ants, and in such a condition, according to the uncontradicted evidence, they were no longer merchantable as black yarn bearing Hanuman mark. Now, the question which Mr. Devadoss has argued is whether it is sufficiently shown that that damage took place before delivery in Madras. Four witnesses who are accustomed to handle yarn were examined on commission on this subject, and the 3rd and 4th witnesses, who are the brokers of large firms in Calcutta, namely, Messrs. Eving & Co. and Messrs. Finlay Muir and Co., say that the injury was not recent and that the goods were worm-eaten very long before. There is a slight discrepancy between the 3rd and 4th witnesses, because the 4th witness speaks of seeing the bodies of the dead ants whereas the 3rd witness speaks only of the stain. But this is not a difference of any great importance, as dead white ants would not leave very many traces excepting the stain to which both the witnesses speak, and they both attach great importance to the fact that there were no live white ants to be found, which they would have expected to find if the damage had been recent. White ants are such a common plague in India that there is no reason for disbelieving these gentlemen, who must have had abundant experience of goods which have been damaged by white ants. Their evidence is absolutely uncontradicted and not shaken in cross-examination, and in these circumstances it is not open to us to differ from the learned Judge who has found it to be sufficiently proved that the loss incurred was incurred before delivery by the defendant to the plaintiff.

In the result, the appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

SPENCER, J.—I agree. The only question of law argued by Mr. Deva Doss was whether there was any implied warranty of good quality in the five bales of black yarn with Hanuman mark which were sold by the defendant to the plaintiff. If the case were being tried in an English Court of Justice, I consider that the appellant's contention would be quite untenable. The words of section 14, clause (2) of the Sale of Goods Act, are very clear. It runs as follows:—"Where goods are brought by description from a seller who deals in goods of that description (whether he be the manufacturer or not), there is an implied condition that the goods shall be of merchantable quality; Provided that if the buyer has examined the goods, there shall be no implied condition as regards defects which such examination ought to have revealed." The corresponding section in the Indian Contract Act, section 113, is as follows:—"Where goods are sold as being of a certain denomination, there is an implied warranty that they are such goods as are commercially known by that denomination, although the buyer may have bought them by sample or after inspection of the bulk." I consider that the words 'after inspection of the bulk' correspond with the proviso to clause (2) of section 14, Sale of Goods Act; and I am fortified in this opinion by the commentary on the section in Cunningham and Shephard's Indian Contract Act, which says: "The section, following the English Law, requires that the goods tendered shall not only correspond to the description given but shall also be saleable or merchantable as such. It was so held in Gardiner v. Gray (1)." Now, if these bales of yarn were eaten by white ants in such a way that the goods were perforated by the channels made by the insects and were crumbling to pieces, there can be no doubt that they would not be saleable or merchantable as yarn. Mr. Deva Doss relied on section 116, Indian Contract Act, which deals with latent defects. I do not think the section applies at all to the present case. It deals with defects which are only detectable by expert examination and would not apply to the state of goods which, as here, are found, on close inspection, to be thoroughly damaged and disintegrated.

As regards the evidence, the statements of the witnesses who were called in to examine the goods on arrival in Calcutta were consistent on the point that the damage could not have been recently caused. Delivery of goods was taken on the 9th and 11th August 1916 and a telegram was sent off from Calcutta on the 26th August reporting that they were damaged. Therefore, the damage must have occurred on some date before the 26th August; and the evidence that the damage was not recent proves that it is not likely to have been caused between the 9th August and the 26th August of that month. The difference between the statements of the 3rd and 4th witnesses, examined on commission on behalf of the plaintiff as to whether dead white ants were visible on the inspection of the bales, is not material; for both of these witnesses agreed that there were no living white ants, and it is possible that one witness was more observant and made a closer examination than the other, so that he detected the bodies of the dead white ants while the other noticed only the stains left by them. In the absence of any evidence of contradiction in the 4 witnesses summoned for the plaintiff, I do not think there is any reason to reject their evidence on the point.

I, therefore, agree that the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Where a suit to enforce a security bond filed in a Privy Council appeal was dismissed, on the grounds (1) that the necessary parties had not been impleaded and (2) that the claim was barred by section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and on an application for execution to enforce the said security being made, the decree-holder was met with the plea that an order passed before the institution of the above suit in a previous execution proceeding, referring him to seek his remedy by suit, operated as a bar to a fresh application for execution:

Held, that the order passed in the suit had the effect of nullifying the previous order passed in the execution proceeding. [p. 559, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

KANHAIYA LAL, A. J. C.—The question for consideration in this appeal is whether a security bond filed by an appellant for the costs of the respondent under the provisions of section 600 of the old Code of Civil Procedure in respect of an appeal to His Majesty in Council can be enforced against the surety by the sale of the property hypothecated in the said bond, in a proceeding taken to execute the decree passed on appeal by His Majesty in Council.

It appears that Sajjad Hussain and Umrao Mirza filed a suit against Nawab Abid Hussain Khan, Saiyid Fazal Hussain and Musammât Basti Begam for a declaration that the properties comprised in three deeds of endowment were waqf properties and for possession of the same as trustees. The suit was dismissed by the Court of first instance but decreed on appeal in regard to the properties in two of the deeds. The plaintiffs appealed and a security bond for Rs. 4,000 was filed on behalf of Umrao Mirza, one of the appellants, hypothecating certain property for the payment of the costs which might be allowed to the respondents if the appeal was unsuccessful.

The Court charged with the execution of the decree disallowed her application, holding that the security bond could only be enforced by means of a separate suit. A suit was then filed by Musammât Basti Begam for the enforcement of the security bond, but it was dismissed on the grounds that a regular suit was not maintainable and that the necessary parties had not been impleaded. The decree-holder applied again to the Court charged with the execution of her decree, praying that the money due to her might be realized by the sale of the property hypothecated in security. This application was disallowed on the ground that the order disallowing her previous application for execution operated as res judicata. The Court below did not give effect to the order passed in the suit. The former was passed on the 26th June 1915 in the previous execution proceeding, directing the decree-holder to seek for remedy by a regular suit. The latter was passed on the 20th December 1915 in the regular suit filed in pursuance of that order. In the execution proceeding the judgment-debtor had objected that the decree-holder could not proceed against the property hypothecated without first obtaining a decree for sale. When a suit for sale was filed, he turned round and said that the suit was barred by section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure. When a fresh application for execution was made, he reiterated the objection that no order for the sale of the mortgaged property could be passed, until a decree for sale was obtained in the manner provided by law. He thus took up inconsistent positions, varying his defences according to the nature of the proceeding taken by the decree-holder against him. As pointed out in Mahommed Mehdi Ali Khan v. Musammât Sharf-un-nisa (1) and Abdul Qayum v. Fida Husain (2), a party who sets up a plea, to which effect has been given by a Court in a previous proceeding, should not be allowed to set up another plea inconsistent with it in a subsequent proceeding brought for the same relief. In Bindeswari Prosad Singh v. Lakpat Nath Singh (3) it was held that where a jurisdiction was usurped by a Court in passing an order against which an appeal lay, an appeal against the order could not be defeated by showing that the order was without jurisdiction. In Bhagirathi Dass v. Baleswar Bagarti (4) and Umeshananda Dut v. Mohendra Prosad (5) it was similarly held that a litigant should not be allowed to occupy inconsistent positions in Court: or in other words to approbate and reprobate, for if the parties were to be permitted to assume inconsistent positions in the trial of their causes the usefulness of Courts of Justice would in most cases be paralysed.

The later decision has had, moreover, the effect of superseding the earlier one. In Dambar Singh v. Munawar Ali Khan (6), where inconsistent orders were passed in different execution proceedings in connection with the same decree, it was held that the later decision neutralized the earlier. The decision passed in the regular suit was, therefore, binding on the parties and the Court below was as much in error in permitting a plea to be raised inconsistent with the pleading in the suit as in refusing to allow the decree-holder to enforce her decree for costs by the sale of the property hypothecated as security. The surety, in this instance, was one of the appellants himself. The security was furnished under Order XLV, rule 7, of the Code of Civil Procedure, and under section 145 of the Code, the liability of the surety could in any event be enforced to the extent to which he had rendered himself personally liable in the manner provided for the execution of decrees.

In Motilal v. Chandrasungji (7), where a bond was given as security for restitution in the event of a decree being reversed on appeal, a suit based on such a bond was held to be maintainable. In Shyam Sundar Lal v. Bajpri Jainarayan (8) the decree-holder was permitted to realize his decree money by the sale of the properties given in security without instituting a suit under section 67 of the Transfer of Property Act. But in Chandrabati v. Babu Ram (9) and Tokhan Singh v. Girwar Singh (10) a contrary view was taken, reliance being placed on old section 99 of the Transfer of Property Act, which has now been replaced in a considerably modified form by Order XXXIV, rule 14 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Where a decree for the payment of money is obtained in satisfaction of a claim arising under a mortgage, different considerations arise. Here the decree is one for costs, and it can be enforced, apart from what was held in the suit, as if it were a simple money-decree, though a suit for sale on the security bond may also be maintainable.

The learned Counsel for the judgment-debtor contends that the order passed in the regular suit was based on two grounds, the first in serial order being that all the necessary parties had not been impleaded. He argues that that finding rendered the decision of any other matter in the suit unnecessary. But the question of the competency of a Court to entertain a suit is logically the first question that a Court has to decide before it can proceed to determine the other issues. In Shib Charan Lal v. Raghu Nath (11), which was followed in Jiw Ram v. Salyan (12) and Har Sahai v. Ali Muhammad Khan (13), it was held that if there were two findings of fact, either of which would justify in law the making of a decree, that one of such two findings of fact, which should in the logical sequence of necessary issues be first found and the finding of which rendered the other of such two findings unnecessary for the making of the decree which was made, was the finding which would operate as res judicata. This difficulty arising out of the non-joinder of necessary parties was the first matter with which the judgment dealt, but it was not the first matter in the order of logical sequence, because the matter could only be taken up after the Court had decided that it had jurisdiction to hear the suit. If it came to the conclusion that the suit was barred by section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure and that the remedy of the mortgagee was to apply for the execution of her decree by the enforcement of the security, any decision dealing with the other matters raised in the suit could only be ancillary or of secondary interest. That portion of the judgment which decided that a regular suit was not maintainable has become final and operates as res judicata; and it is not now open to the judgment-debtor, who was a party to it, to go behind it and contend that the application for execution to enforce the security is not maintainable. The previous order passed in execution is superseded by the order passed in the suit.

The appeal is, therefore, allowed and the case is remanded to the Court below, with a direction to reinstate the execution proceeding and to proceed with the application for execution in the manner provided by law. The appellant will get her costs from the judgment-debtor throughout.

DANIELS, A. J. C.—I concur. To allow a party to play fast and loose with the Courts, as the respondent has been permitted to do in this case, is nothing short of a denial of justice. It is, in my opinion, unnecessary form to decide whether both the findings on which the Subordi-

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXIV, r. 6, order refusing to pass decree under, whether decree—Court-fee on appeal, calculation of—Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), Sch. I, Art. 1.

An order refusing to make a decree under Order XXXIV, rule 6 of the Civil Procedure Code, is a decree within the meaning of the definition of that term in section 2 of the Code, and an appeal against it must bear ad valorem Court-fees, calculated upon the value of the subject-matter of the appeal. [p 562, col. 1.]

FACTS appear from the following

REPORT OF THE STAMP REPORTER.—This is an appeal against the decree of the Courts below refusing to grant the decree-holder appellant's application for a personal decree under Order XXXIV, rule 6 of the Code of Civil Procedure, on the ground that it was time-barred. On the authority of the ruling of this Court to be found in Tajammul Husain Khan v. Muhammad Husain Khan (1), ad valorem Court-fee must be paid both in the lower Appellate Court and in this Court on the value of the relief sought. Accordingly a Court-fee of Rs. 295 must be paid in each Court on Rs. 5,456, the value of the appeal in each Court. A Court-fee of annas eight having been paid in the lower Appellate Court and of Rs. 2 in this Court, there is, therefore, a deficiency of Rs. 587-8-0, or Rs. 590 minus Rs. 2-8-0

Objection having been taken to the above report before the Taxing Officer, he referred the case to the Judges hearing the Appeal who made the following ORDER.—A report has been submitted by the office that the appellant was liable for additional Court-fees in the lower Appellate Court calculated upon the value of the subject-matter of the appeal. The application was for a decree under Order XXXIV, rule 6, made in the original mortgage suit. The application, of course, could be made on an S-anna stamp, but the question is what should the fee be which either side would have to pay if they were dissatisfied with the ruling of the Court to which the application was made. In the present case the Court made an order dismissing the application for a decree under Order XXXIV, rule 6. In the case of Tajammul Husain Khan v. Muhammad Husain Khan (1) Mr. Justice Tudball held that the defendant against whom a decree under Order XXXIV, rule 6, had been made was obliged to pay an ad valorem Court-fee on the decree which had been made against him. The learned Judge was of opinion that the decision appealed against was clearly a "decree" within the meaning of the Code of Civil Procedure. We think that the view taken by Mr. Justice Tudball was correct. The only difference between that case and the present is that the Court of first instance, instead of granting a decree under Order XXXIV, rule 6, refused to make such decree. We think that an order refusing to make a decree under Order XXXIV, rule 6, must be regarded as a "decree" within the meaning of the definition of that term in the Code of Civil Procedure. We think that the report of the office as to the liability of the appellant for payment of ad valorem Court-fees in the first appeal was correct and that the amount must be paid by the appellant.

Order accordingly.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXIV, r. 6—Application for personal decree, whether application in execution—Limitation, commencement of—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 181.

An application under Order XXXIV, rule 6, is an application in the original suit for a new decree and it cannot be regarded as an application in execution. Such an application should be made within three years from the time when the right to make such application accrues and the Article which governs the application is Article 181 of the Limitation Act. [p. 563, col. 1.]

Some mortgaged property was put up to sale in execution of a mortgage decree in 1911 and was purchased by the decree-holder. The proceeds of the sale being insufficient to satisfy the mortgage debt, the mortgagee made an application in 1913 under Order XXXIV, rule 6, for a personal decree. That application proved ineffectual and he made another application for a similar decree in 1915:

Held, that the application, not being an application for execution of the original mortgage decree, was barred by time and that the interim application did not save limitation. [p. 563, col. 1.]

Execution second appeal from a decree of the District Judge of Budaun.

Messrs. Iqbal Ahmad and Mukhtar Ahmad, for the Appellant.

Messrs. S. A. Haidar and Muhammad Yusuf, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of an application under Order XXXIV, rule 6. This rule applies to cases in which after the mortgaged property has been sold the mortgagee comes to Court and asks for a personal decree for the balance left due. The rule provides that "where the net proceeds of any such sale are found to be insufficient to pay the amount due to the plaintiff, if the balance is legally recoverable from the defendant otherwise than out of the property sold, the Court may pass a decree for such amount." In the present case the original mortgage decree was obtained in February 1906. The mortgaged property consisted of two villages. In the events which happened the mortgagee became entitled to the equity of redemption of one of the villages the result being that the two interests (that is, the interest of the mortgagee and the interest of the mortgagor) vested in one person. This operated to discharge the mortgage to the extent of the value of the property acquired by the mortgagee. In the year 1911 the other village was put up to sale and purchased by the decree-holder. Accordingly the mortgaged property and all rights in respect of it were exhausted in the year 1911, and it was on this basis that the application for a personal decree was made. The application was made in the year 1915, but there was another application for a similar decree in the meantime (1913). If the present application can be regarded as an application for execution of the original mortgage decree, then perhaps the application which was made in 1913 would save limitation. If, on the other hand, the present application is not an application for execution of the original mortgage decree but is an application for a fresh decree, then the application should have been made within three years from the time when the right to make such application accrued, and the Article which governs the application is Article 181 of the Limitation Act. We find it impossible to hold that an application for a decree under the provisions of Order XXXIV, rule 6, is an application for the execution of the original decree which was a decree for the sale of certain property; we think that it is an application in the original suit for a new decree and that it cannot be regarded as an application in execution. In a somewhat similar case of Behari Lal v. Bisheshar Dayal (1) Mr. Justice Chamier seems to have expressed the view that Article 181 governs an application for a decree under Order XXXIV, rule 6. In this view the order of the Court below dismissing the application was correct, although the reasons for the Court's decision may be open to question. We dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

It depends on the terms of the document whether the subject of it is to be treated as a loan. [p. 570, col. 2.]

Where the agreement is to finance a litigation against a person in possession of certain property and in favour of persons who are themselves unable to find the necessary funds, and the person financing is to get a share of the property in the event of the success of the litigation as if the full amount was paid and no provision is made for the refund of the amount in the event of failure, the transaction cannot be treated as a loan. Such a contract is champertous, but the promisee is entitled to recover what he has advanced in the event of the litigation ending successfully to the promisor. [p. 571, col. 1.]

A person cannot be charged with liability merely on the ground that he has benefited by a contract entered into by another. [p. 575, col. 1.]

An assignment of future property is not invalid in India. Section 6 of the Transfer of Property Act does not contain a total prohibition against the assignment of all future property, but must be construed as an exception to the general rule in favour of transfers of property, present and future. [p. 572, col. 2.]

The words 'of a like nature' in clause (a) of section 6 indicate that the 'possibility' referred to therein must belong to the same category as the chance of an heir-apparent or the chance of a relation obtaining a legacy. [p. 573, col. 1.]

Under section 58 of the Transfer of Property Act, a property can be specific so long as it is identifiable, though it may not be in existence on the date of the transfer. A transfer, therefore, if otherwise valid, is not rendered inoperative by reason of the subject-matter not having been in existence on the date of the agreement [p. 573, col. 1.]

Where a loan is charged on a property, a mere default of the lender to pay the full amount of the charge would not deprive him of his lien in respect of the money actually advanced. There will be a lien pro tanto. [p. 573, col. 2.]

Where a loan advanced with the object of financing a litigation is charged on an amount which may be secured by a compromise in the suit to be effected in a particular manner, and the compromise is effected in a different manner, the lien will not attach itself to the substituted property, especially where the parties put an end to the contract before the compromise. [p. 573, col. 2.]

Where there is a blend of moveable and immoveable properties in respect of which a charge is created, if the document creating the charge is not registered, it will only deprive the promisee of his right in the immoveable property and will not affect his rights in the moveable property. [p. 574, col. 1.]

Pulaka Vectil v. Thiruthipalli, 1 Ind. Cas. 1; 32 M. 410; 19 M. L. J. 584, followed.

Plaintiff's husband, agreed on 25th May 1903 to advance moneys up to a limit of Rs. 1,50,000 to defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4 with the object of financing a suit by the latter to recover a Zemindari, in consideration whereof the latter agreed to convey to plaintiff a 3/16ths share in the property in the event of their succeeding in the litigation. It was stipulated that the defendants should not compromise the suit with their adversaries without the lender's consent. This agreement was varied in 1908 by another, whereunder the lender was to advance two lakhs of rupees and get a fourth share and no compromise was to be entered into by the defendants without the consent of the lender or of his Vakil. The amount advanced was charged on the amount which might be secured under the compromise. Plaintiff's husband, after advancing about Rs. 70,000, declined to advance any further sum as there were misunderstandings between himself and his debtors. The suit by defendants was compromised, but not in the manner specified in the agreement. Plaintiff's husband having died, plaintiff sued to recover the amounts actually advanced and interest thereon and to have it charged on the amount of the compromise:

Held, (1) that plaintiff was entitled to a personal decree for refund; [p. 574, col. 2.]

(2) that the lien created on property to come into existence in future was valid; [p. 573, col. 1.]

(3) but that the lien could not be fastened on the amount of the compromise as plaintiff's husband had, prior thereto, broken the contract and the compromise effected was not in accordance with the agreement. [p. 573, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Vizagapatam, in Original Suit No. 10 of 1913.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

The Hon'ble S. Srinivasa Aiyangar (Advocate-General), for the Appellants.—The agreement between the parties was not a loan. The object of the transaction was to finance a litigation in favour of persons who had no funds and, though the arrangement is beneficial to the lender in the event of the litigation ending successfully to the borrower, there is no provision for refund of the amount advanced in case of failure. The contract was distinctly champertous and unenforceable and plaintiff is not entitled to a return of even the amount actually advanced by her husband. The transaction should be treated as a contingent contract, which could be enforced only if the contingency provided for, viz., the success of the litigation, happened: Kalka Singh v. Paras Ram (1).

Assuming that the transaction was a loan, no lien was created under the agreement on the amount of the compromise actually effected by the parties. The compromise contemplated by the parties and to which the lien was to attach was a compromise assented to by the lender or his Vakil, Mr. V. Krishnaswami Aiyar. The lien cannot fasten itself on the amount of the compromise which was different from what the parties intended.

No charge can be created on property which is not in existence on the date of the contract. In India, at any rate, future property cannot be assigned. In section 5 of the Transfer of Property Act, the comma after the word 'property' and before the words 'in present or in future' governs the word 'conveys' and not the word 'property'. Section 5 nowhere indicates that future property can be conveyed. Section 6 does not indicate it either. Clauses (a) to (i) of section 6 only illustrate the general principle that future property should not be conveyed. The present case falls under 'other mere possibility of a like nature' in clause (a) of section 6. The words 'specific immoveable property' in section 58 indicate that property not in existence cannot be the subject of transfer.

(1) 22 C. 434; 22 I. A. 68; 6 Sar. P. C. J. 545; 5 M. L. J. 14; Rafique & Jackson's P. C. No. 137; 11 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 290 (P. C.).

The lender in this case broke the contract and is not entitled to enforce the lien, if it can be validly enforced. Nor is the plaintiff entitled to a personal decree for the amounts actually advanced by her husband under section 64 of the Contract Act, as the agreement was to advance a specific amount, was one and indivisible and no apportionment could be claimed on the principle of quantum meruit.

Defendants Nos. 1, 5 and 6 were not parties to the contract and could not be made liable merely because they participated in its benefit.

Mr. K. Srinivasa Aiyangar, for the Respondent.—The transaction is a loan and the plaintiff is entitled to a refund of the amounts actually advanced by her husband. The written agreement between the parties expressly recites that the amount advanced was a loan and there is also mention of interest. Even were it champertous as a traffic in litigation, the promisee is entitled to recover sums actually advanced, in the event of its terminating in the borrower's favour.

The charge created on property to come into existence subsequently is not invalid. In Tailby v. Official Receiver (2) assignments of future property have been held to be valid. The principle is applicable to India and section 6 of the Transfer of Property Act does not derogate from its applicability. The section must be construed as an exception to the general rule in favour of transfers of property, present or future.

The words 'specific immoveable property' in section 58 of the Act refer to property that is identifiable though not actually in existence on the date of the transfer, and a transfer is not invalid merely because the property is not then in existence.

The lien, though originally agreed to be attached to a compromise brought about with the consent of his lender or his Vakil, is not wiped out because the compromise was brought about differently. The provision for the lender's or his Vakil's assent was intended to safeguard the lender's interest and there was nothing to prevent the plaintiff's husband from accepting the compromise if it was for his benefit.

The plaintiff is entitled, under section 64 of the Contract Act, to a refund of the amount actually advanced even though it was short of the stipulated amount: Chokalingam Mudaliar v. Mahomed Sheriff Saheb (3) and H. Dakin & Co v. Lee (4), and the lien can also be enforced pro tanto: Anakaran Kasmi v. Saidamadath Avulla (5), Chinnayya Rawutan v. Chidambaram Chetti (6), Tirumal Raju v. Panlla Muthial Naidu (7), Rashik Lal v. Ram Narain (8) and Munshi Bajrangi Sahai v. Udit Narain Singh (9).

The breach of contract, on the part of the plaintiff's husband, did not put an end to the contract as a whole. The contract ended only in respect of moneys to be advanced after the date of the breach: Freeth v. Burr (10) and Mersey Steel and Iron Co. v. Naylor (11).

JUDGMENT.—This is an offshoot of the suit for Vizianagaram Zemindari, namely Original Suit No. 18 of 1903, on the file of the District Court, Vizagapatam. The present defendants were the plaintiffs in that suit, and it was instituted to recover the Zemindari of Vizianagaram. That suit was dismissed by the Court of first instance in 1908. An appeal was preferred to the High Court which was disposed of by a compromise in March 1913. The present suit is by the widow of the Zemindar of Tuni, who financed that litigation on behalf of the plaintiffs (the present defendants), for a sum of nearly two lakhs of rupees. The Subordinate Judge decreed the claim.

The negotiations which led to the contract need not be gone into in any detail. Up to May 1906 the expenses of the litigation were borne by the present defendants from their own pocket. On the 22nd May 1906 the first agreement Exhibit A was executed by the 2nd defendant and his sons, the 3rd and 4th defendants, to the then Zemindar of Tuni, by which in consideration of the latter agreeing to assist the defendants with money for the expenses of the litigation, they undertook to give him a certain share in the Zemindari. Exhibit A1 was also executed on the same day to sell a share of the estate. On the 14th August 1907 Exhibits B and B1 were executed, which altered the original agreement in some material particulars. We shall have to refer to these agreements at some length later on. After arguments had begun to be addressed by the Pleaders engaged in the Vizianagaram case, the Zemindar of Tuni complained that the funds supplied by him were being mispent by the defendants. This led to angry correspondence between the parties, and ultimately the Zemindar of Tuni refused to advance any further sums. This was about the end of February 1908. The suit was proceeded with with the help of others and judgment was pronounced against the present defendants on the 25th July 1908. It is common ground that the Zemindar of Tuni did not supply any funds for the appeal filed in the High Court, nor was he asked to do so. The amount advanced by the plaintiff's husband before February 1908 amounted to about Rs. 93,000. The Zemindar of Tuni died in 1911.

The plaint in this suit, as originally framed, alleged that the defendants broke the contract and that the plaintiff was entitled to be paid out of the moneys secured under the compromise the amount of principal and interest due to her for the moneys actually lent, and that she was also entitled to a 3/32nd share in the balance of the compromise amount and in the annuities secured under the compromise.

The plaint was subsequently amended by alleging, in the alternative, that it having become impossible for the plaintiff's husband to be a party to the compromise owing to his death, and also because of the fact that Mr. V. Krishnaswami Aiyar on whose assent the compromise was to be effected died on the 22nd December 1911, the contract between the parties became void, and that under section 65 of the Indian Contract Act the plaintiff is entitled to a refund of the moneys actually advanced by her husband, although she may not be entitled to specific performance of the contract to give a share in the balance of the compromise amount and in the annuities. These new allegations are contained in paragraph 29 (a), (b) and (c) of the plaint and in prayer (e) of paragraph 33. The 2nd defendant's plea is that the plaintiff's husband broke the contract, and as the agreement was champertous she is not entitled to any relief whatsoever. He also pleads the bar of limitation. Defendants Nos. 1, 5 and 6 contend that they were not parties to the arrangement entered into by the 2nd defendant with the Zemindar of Tuni and that their share in the compromise amount is not liable for the plaintiff's claim. A large number of issues were framed by the Subordinate Judge. With most of them it is not necessary to deal in this appeal. His main conclusions are that the second agreement superseded the first; that the plaintiff's husband was justified in breaking the contract between him and the 2nd defendant; that the suit is not barred by limitation; that the share of defendants Nos. 1, 5 and 6 is also bound by the contract of the 2nd defendant. On the additional issues framed regarding section 65 of the Contract Act, his finding is that section 65 applies to the case and that the plaintiff is entitled to a refund of the amount actually advanced by her husband with interest thereon.

A number of interesting questions of law have been argued before us by the Advocate-General on one side and by Mr. K. Srinivasa Aiyangar on the other. Before dealing with the legal questions, we shall first consider the question as to who broke the contract. The Subordinate Judge's judgment is by no means full or clear. We have been obliged to deal with the facts of the case as if we were hearing the case as the Court of first instance.

The main features of the two agreements should be set out before proceeding to examine the other documents bearing on the question of the breach of contract. Under Exhibit A the arrangement was that the Zemindar of Tuni should advance Rs. 1,50,000 for the expenses of the suit, and that 3/16th of the property in suit, namely the Zemindari of Vizianagaram, should be conveyed to the lender for that consideration. The sub-paragraphs of paragraph 1 refer to the mode of application of the money to be advanced. Paragraph 2, sub-paragraphs (a) and (b), deal with the mode of conveying 3/16th share. 2 (c) says that if the lender was unwilling to take either a sale-deed or a permanent lease of the Zemindari, the debtor shall pay the amount with interest at 3 per cent. per mensem thereon on the security of the Zemindari. There is a penal provision in 2 (d) which we need not refer to. Paragraph 3 is important. It provides for the creditor advancing not less than Rs. 50,000 and that if he was unwilling to lend further sums certain modified terms should be substituted. The 3rd clause of that paragraph says: "If you should yourself give up the conduct of the above said suit in the lower Court without spending the Rs. 50,000 as abovesaid, you shall forfeit all expenses incurred till then." Clause 5 of the same paragraph says that no compromise should be entered into without the consent of the creditor. Exhibit A1 is merely an agreement to convey the 3/16th share in case the Rs. 1,50,000 was advanced by the creditor. A and A1 were in May 1906. Apparently after the suit had proceeded for some months, it was found that more money would be required than was agreed upon in Exhibit A, and apparently also the parties intended to change the terms of the contract in some particulars. As a result of further negotiations, Exhibits B and B1 were executed on the 14th August 1907. Exhibit B corresponds to Exhibit A1 and B1 to A. We are mainly concerned with Exhibit B1. The material changes introduced in the new agreement may be thus stated:—

(a) Instead of Rs. 1,50,000 the lender agreed to advance two lakhs of rupees if these were required.

(b) Instead of getting only a 3/16th share the lender secured a fourth share and also an additional property which was the summer residence of the Zemindar.

(c) The stipulation as to forfeiture was omitted.

(d) The old provision that there should be no compromise without the consent of the lender was re-inserted with a proviso that if Mr. V. Krishnaswami Aiyar advised that a compromise was beneficial, it should be agreed to.

These are the main differences between the first and the second agreements. At the time of the second agreement the plaintiff's husband had lent Rs. 66,000. In paragraph 2 of Exhibit B1 it is stated that Rs. 66,000 plus a sum of Rs. 5,500 spent by the lender himself had been advanced up to that date; and that a further sum of Rs. 16,000 would be paid almost immediately. The same paragraph says: "It is also agreed that we should be rendering accounts as stated above and you should be again giving money within a week after being asked for." There is a dispute as to whether the last portion of the 1st paragraph and the 2nd paragraph have been correctly translated. So far as the 1st paragraph is concerned, a fresh translation has been made which has been accepted by the learned Vakils as fairly accurate. As regards the 2nd paragraph the Chief Interpreter admitted that the language is so ambiguous that he is unable to say whether the parties intended to say that no further accounts regarding the Rs. 66,000 should be asked for or whether they stipulated for a fresh scrutiny of the accounts in respect of the sums already expended. Having regard to the fact that full accounts had not been furnished by this time, we are inclined to agree with the learned Vakil for the respondent, though not without some hesitation, that the parties did not understand by paragraph 2 that there should be no scrutiny of the accounts in respect of moneys already advanced. The Rs. 16,000 agreed to be lent immediately under the new agreement was given within three months of that agreement. Admittedly before the second agreement, Exhibit G was sent by the 2nd defendant to the plaintiff's husband. That accounted for an expenditure of Rs. 49,117 and gave credit to a sum of Rs. 38,000 received. It showed a balance of Rs. 1,117-10-7 as being still due. This was on the 11th January 1907. Exhibit G1 is dated the 31st August 1907. Although it covers a period before the second agreement was entered into, it is clear that this account was not in the hands of the plaintiff's husband when Exhibit B1 was signed. G2, dated 6th January 1908, gives particulars of expenditure aggregating to Rs. 36,141-10-8 and acknowledges receipt of Rs. 27,000, leaving a balance of Rs. 9,141-10-8 to be paid by the creditor. Between the date of the second agreement and January 1908 the parties seem to have been working harmoniously. On the 19th January 1908 the first note of discord appears. Exhibit F written on that date by the Diwan of the Zemindar of Tuni to the 2nd defendant complains: "Contrary to the original agreement the amount of Rs. 10,450 for the day fees of M. R. Ry. B. Venkatapatiraju Garu and Rs. 2,165 for the fees of the said Venkatapatiraju Garu's younger brother are entered therein. These items were read out to Sri Maharajahvaru. He was pleased to say that settlement was not made to pay fees to these persons and that Rs. 12,615 specified as fees payable to those persons should be recovered from them, and expended for the costs of the suit in future". At the end of the letter it is stated: "In your credit and debit accounts, particulars of some items are not written. I shall write the letter soon about them. Immediately after this credit and debit are settled, I shall send the money required". By this time Exhibit G was in the hands of the Zemindar and his Dewan. Neither at the time of the second agreement nor until this date was any complaint made that out of the moneys advanced by the Zemindar of Tuni the two Vakils referred to in Exhibit F should not have been paid. It was conceded that there is no writing to show that these two gentlemen were not to be remunerated from the funds supplied just like other Vakils engaged in the case. We are referred to some evidence regarding an oral agreement between the Zemindar of Tuni and the 2nd defendant. We have not the least hesitation in saying that we do not believe this evidence. The reply to Exhibit F is Exhibit IX. It is dated the 27th January 1908. It draws attention to the fact that accounts had been sent containing entries of payments to the two Vakils and that those entries had not been objected to at the time of the second agreement; it also contains a denial of the suggestion that the two Vakils agreed to work gratis. One statement in that letter was somewhat sharply criticised by Mr. K. Srinivasa Aiyangar. About the end of this long letter the 2nd defendant says: "Moreover, I have sold some portion out of the land I am entitled to in the Vizianagaram Samasthanam and have deposited the said sale amount with you on account of the expenses of the suit, settling that you will give the money whenever asked by me. While so you cannot raise such objections as these." It is true that this is a rather extravagant way of stating that the indebtedness is on the side of the plaintiff. But if we look at Exhibit B, the language does not appear to be altogether irrelevant. This is what Exhibit B says: "We further hereby declare to have received from you the abovesaid amount, Rs. 2,00,000, and its interest as abovesaid for the necessary suit expenses as consideration of the abovesaid sale-deed as per this second agreement, dated this day, and therefore execute to you the same." Apparently the parties agreed to regard it on paper as if one-fourth of the Zemindari was sold to the plaintiff's husband and that he was to treat himself as being in possession of the two lakhs of rupees, the consideration amount, as a depositary from whom the money for the expenses was to be drawn from time to time. Apart from this sentence no objection can be taken to the tone of the letter, Exhibit IX. We do not think the suggestion is in any way grotesque, having regard to the language of Exhibit B. After Exhibit IX was received, Exhibit F2 was sent by the plaintiff's husband to the 2nd defendant. Here again objection is taken to the payment to the two Vakils: "Besides, some of your officials have told in person that no fees need be given to them". It then proceeds to say: "As the debit and credit accounts sent by you have not been examined previously, they have now been got examined..... At the time when you first submitted credit and debit accounts we have not only said in a definite manner in the presence of many persons that fees should not be given to Sree Venkatapatiraju Garu and Sree Narasimharaju Garu, but your men also have told us from the very beginning that as they are persons connected with you they will work in connection with this suit without taking fees." The two statements are somewhat inconsistent, one statement saying that no accounts were looked into, the other that the accounts were looked into and that the defendants' men were told that these entries regarding payments to the two Vakils were objectionable. The letter winds up by saying: "If before this you spend this money (referring apparently to the money to be got back from the two Vakils), you give proper particulars for such of the items as regards which no details were given or with regard to which there are disputes, and also send receipts and vouchers for the remaining items, namely, fees for Madras Vakils, etc., we shall compare them, and if we find them correct and proper, we shall send money if any more money is still wanted for purposes of this suit." Here again for the first time we find objection is being taken to vouchers for payments made not being sent. Before considering the reply to this letter it must be mentioned that on the same day as Exhibit F2, F1 was sent in which objection was taken to the expenditure on out fees and other miscellaneous charges and also to the failure to furnish details, vouchers and receipts for sums debited. The sums objected to do not amount to any large figure. To these two letters Exhibit VIII was the reply. It is dated the 14th February 1908 and it says: "The necessary particulars and the credit and debit accounts, as well as the receipts with my signatures, were given already. There is no necessity for your asking again regarding the settled credit and debit accounts and they are not wanted. Without raising any objection at that time, you are now raising objections, keeping something in your mind. I have no objection whatever to your ascertaining the particulars hereof if you want to know them. They might have been ascertained correctly from the account sent already. When credit and debit accounts were sent with my responsibility and signature, there will be no proper grounds for the stoppage of the business". Apparently the 2nd defendant thought that some frivolous excuses were being offered to keep back the supply of money and that he was being unjustly suspected. That accounts for the tone of this letter. It is the letter of a man who felt that he was not in the wrong, and that the creditor was trying to find some excuse for breaking off the agreement. We do not understand this letter as a refusal to give the vouchers and receipts asked for in Exhibit F1. It naturally complains that the objections taken to the accounts already sent are not bona fide. The Dewan in the witness-box stated that although he was appointed at the time the second agreement was entered into, he had not looked into Exhibit G1 before writing Exhibit F. It is impossible to accept this story. It may be that Zemindars are not in the habit of examining accounts sent to them, but to ask us to believe that the Dewan of the lender did not satisfy himself that the entries in the accounts sent before the new agreement was entered into were proper, is something which we cannot agree to. To Exhibit VIII, Exhibit M was the final rejoinder. That is dated 21st February 1908. The burden of that letter is that the money paid to the two local Vakils was improperly spent. It ends by saying: "If you do not give a proper reply for this and as we consider that according to the terms of agreement without affecting our rights that the disputed terms are not properly debited under the suit costs, we shall take proceedings in the Court according to law for the recovery of the above sums from you and from those who have received the same from you." There can be no doubt that this letter was intended to finally break off the relationship between the parties. In our opinion there was no justification for such conduct on the part of the plaintiff's husband. The attempt to prove that there was no agreement to remunerate the local Vakils from the funds supplied by the lender has miserably failed. On the other hand we have the evidence of the 2nd defendant, who has deposed straightforwardly that it was part of the original agreement that the local Vakils should be remunerated from the borrowed money. We have the fact that Exhibit G was sent containing various entries relating to payments to these two Vakils; it was in the hands of the plaintiff's husband and his Dewan long before the second agreement was entered into. We totally disbelieve the suggestion that the plaintiff's husband and his Dewan did not examine these accounts before Exhibit B1 was entered into. At the time of B1 at any rate a new Dewan had taken charge of the plaintiff's husband's estate. We cannot accept his evidence that he did not examine Exhibit G before the second agreement was entered into. There is no reason for presuming that the local Vakils were expected to work gratis. Mr. Srinivasa Aiyangar referred to the fact that the two Vakils were related to the defendants, and he also made a faint suggestion that the Vakils obtained a share of the money secured by the compromise. There is absolutely no reliable evidence for this latter suggestion. The fact that these Vakils were related is not a ground for holding that they agreed to work gratis in the suit. It seems to us that the objection to the payments made to these Vakils was only a pretext for breaking off from the contract. We can only conjecture the reasons, as the parties have not adduced all the evidence on the question of the motive which led the plaintiff's husband to refuse to finance the litigation any further. But we feel no hesitation in holding that the payment to these two local Vakils was not a good ground for refusing to carry out the terms of the contract. Mr. K. Srinivasa Aiyangar commented upon the entries contained in Exhibits G and G1 and argued that they are lacking in definiteness and that the creditor would be justified in objecting to the bald entries regarding large sums of money said to have been paid to Vakils. They may have furnished good grounds for asking for particulars and for objecting to make further payments unless these particulars were furnished. But it was not on these grounds that Tuni refused to advance further sums. We are, therefore, unable to accept these post facto comments as having influenced the plaintiff's husband's conduct in the step he took. Apparently until the time of Exhibit F, the plaintiff's husband trusted to the honesty of the 2nd defendant and never doubted that any payments made by him were otherwise than honestly spent. There is no evidence that the 2nd defendant ever refused to give particulars. We must, therefore, hold that the contract was broken by the plaintiff's husband and not by the 2nd defendant.

It was argued by the learned Vakil for the respondent that it was only a term of the contract that was broken and not the contract itself. Our reading of the correspondence does not lead to this result. Exhibits F series and M leave no room for doubt in our mind that the plaintiff's husband intended to break off further connection with the 2nd defendant and that he did convey that idea to him.

This being our view on the most important question of fact in the case, we now proceed to consider whether, even though the plaintiff's husband may have broken the contract, the plaintiff is not entitled to recover the moneys actually advanced.

It is not easy to understand on what basis the Subordinate Judge has given the decree in favour of the plaintiff. Mr. K. Srinivasa Aiyangar who appeared in support of the judgment contended that the money advanced by his client's husband was a loan, and that it was a charge upon the amount of the compromise. It may be that some such idea was present to the mind of the Subordinate Judge, as in paragraphs 2, 16 and 17 there is a reference to a lien. However, we have now to examine Exhibit B1 to ascertain whether the money advanced by the plaintiff's husband was regarded as a loan and whether it was made a charge upon the sum secured by the compromise. The learned Vakil for the respondent referred us to paragraphs 1, 4, 8 and 12 in support of his contention. In the 1st paragraph in more than one place the money to be advanced by the lender is spoken of as a loan. At the same time it must be mentioned that the vernacular expression used in the document is usually rendered as 'giving' or 'to give.' This is not seriously disputed. Therefore, too much importance cannot be attached to the use of the word 'loan' by the translator. The same observation applies to paragraph 4.

PUSAPATI VENKATAPATHIRAJU GARU v. VATSAVAYA VENKATA SUBHADRAYYAMMA.

In paragraph 8 the amount advanced is spoken of as "principal and interest found due to you". Again in paragraph 12 the expression is, "the principal money advanced by you together with interest at Re. 1 per cent." If the document stood by itself, there would be great force in the contention for the respondent that the money advanced was a loan, but we have to take into account the fact that the avowed object of the transaction was to finance a litigation against a person in possession and in favour of persons who were themselves unable to find the necessary funds. There is the further fact that the document provides that, even though less than Rs. 2 lakhs was advanced for the purpose, the lender was entitled to the sale of the share as if the full amount was paid. There is the additional circumstance that no provision is made for the refund of the amount in case the suit is dismissed. As against these considerations Mr. K. Srinivasa Aiyangar pointed to the fact that the Zemindar of Tuni, though not a relation of the defendants, belonged to their caste, and that it was considered a meritorious act to help that caste in getting possession of the property which the late Raja of Vizianagaram had resolved upon giving to a person who did not belong to the family. Taking all these various elements into consideration, we are not satisfied that the object of the undertaking was to give a loan. The transaction is on the face of it champertous, although as has been laid down by the Judicial Committee, that would not prevent the promisee from recovering what he has advanced in case the litigation proved successful. The agreement between the parties partakes of the character of the contracts commented upon by the Judicial Committee in Ranee Bhobosoonduree Dossee v. Issur Ohunder Dutt (12) and Kalka Singh v. Paras Ram (1), to which our attention was drawn by the learned Advocate-General, as contingent contracts whose enforceability depended upon the happening of a particular event, namely, the success of the litigation. However, as the construction of the document is not altogether free from doubt, we do not propose to base our judgment on our surmise that the contract is not a loan.

Now we shall proceed to deal with the other arguments in the case on the basis that the plaintiff's husband advanced a loan to the 2nd defendant. The next question is whether a lien was created on the compromise amount by Exhibit B1. There was an interesting discussion by the learned Vakils on the question whether in India a charge can be created upon property which was not in existence on the date of the document. Mr. K. Srinivasa Aiyangar for the respondent relied upon the observations of Lord Watson in Tailby v. Official Receiver (2) for the proposition that an assignment of after-acquired property will be valid, provided it is identifiable. In the same case Lord Macnaghten points out:

"It was well settled that an assignment of future property for value operates in equity by way of agreement, binding the conscience of the assignor, and so binding the property from the moment when the contract becomes capable of being performed, on the principle that equity considers as done that which ought to be done, and in accordance with the maxim which Lord Thurlow said he took to be universal 'that whenever persons agree concerning any particular subject, that, in a Court of Equity, as against the party himself, and any claiming under him, voluntarily or with notice, raises a trust'" The general trend of the views enunciated by the other noble Lords who took part in the case is in favour of holding that a transfer of property to come into existence at some future time is nothing more than an agreement to convey that property when it does come into being. This and other cases were considered very recently by the Court of Appeal in Industrials Finance Syndicate Ltd. v. Lind (13). The question there was whether a mortgage of an expectant share as one of the next-of-kin of a living person was good as against the trustee in bankruptcy. Warrington, J., held that it was, Industrials Finance Syndicate Ltd. v. Lind (14). In the appeal against the learned Judge's judgment, Phillimore, L. J., states the law thus: "Assignments of property not then in existence pass, as such, nothing. 'A man cannot in equity, any more than at law, assign what has no existence.' See per Jessel, M. R., in Collyer v. Isaacs (15). The assignment does, however, operate as a contract to assign if and when the property comes into existence, and to use the words of the same great Judge, "when it has come into existence, equity, treating as done that which ought to be done, fastens upon that property and the contract to assign thus becomes a complete assignment." This is in effect what Lord Macnaghten said in Tailby v. Official Receiver (2). Swinfen Eady, L. J., says the same thing in Hardy v. Fothergill (16). Bankes, L. J., while affirming the above view, says at page 373 in Industrials Finance Syndicate Ltd. v. Lind (13): "It appears to me to be manifest from these statements of the law that equity regarded an assignment for value of future acquired property as containing an enforceable security as against the property assigned, quite independent of the personal obligation of the assignor arising out of his imported covenant to assign." It was argued that an assignment of future property does not merely amount to an agreement to convey when the property comes into existence, but it is a right in rem. There are observations in the judgment of Warrington, J., which lend support to this broader contention. But it is unnecessary to pursue this subject any further, because in either view, as pointed out by Phillimore, L. J., the right will not attach to the property if, when the property comes into existence, the contract had ceased to be enforceable. This is what the learned Lord Justice says at page 368: "I do not understand an assignment which at the time only operates as a contract, but when the property comes into possession operates without more as an actual assurance; and even if this were intelligible, I do not understand why in its chrysalis state it is not subject to the laws of a chrysalis, why, being still only a contract, it is not discharged by a discharge of contracts." The applicability of this doctrine to Indian conditions was hotly debated at the Bar. In the Transfer of Property Act, section 6 enunciates how far and to what extent properties can be transferred. (15) (1882) 19 Ch. D. 342 at p. 351; 51 L. J. Ch. 14; 45 L. T. 567; 30 W. R. 70.

ferred. In section 5 the expression "transfer of property" has been defined as "an act by which a living person conveys property, in present or in future, to one or more other living persons," etc. As pointed out by the learned Advocate-General, the existence of a comma after 'property' and before the words 'in present or in future' shows that these words 'in present or in future' govern the word 'conveys', and not the word 'property.' Therefore, there is nothing in section 5 to indicate that future property can be conveyed. The learned Advocate-General further argued that clauses (a) to (i) of section 6 are only illustrative of the general principle that future property should not be conveyed at all. There is great force in this contention. At the same time it must not be forgotten that the framers of the Indian Act were aware of the pronouncement in Tailby v. Official Receiver (2), wherein it was held that there can be a valid assignment of future property. It is more reasonable to hold that the Indian Legislature imposed restrictions upon the extent to which future property can be assigned. In other words, section 6 must be read as an exception to the rule that future property can be conveyed, and not as containing a total prohibition against all future assignments. We have in the Indian Contract Act provisions for transferring future property. As Mr. K. Srinivasa Aiyangar pointed out, the Indian Companies Act seems to contemplate the transfer of future property. Therefore, we incline to the view that section 6 must be construed as an exception to the general rule in favour of transfers of property, present and future. It is true, as the learned Advocate-General contended, the observations in Sumsuddin v. Abdul Husein (17) on this question are obiter, but having regard to the high authority of Sir Lawrence Jenkins who pronounced the judgment, and having regard to the other reasons indicated by us, we think that section 6 does not contain a total prohibition against the assignment of all future property. Nor are we prepared to agree with the contention that the words in clause (a) of section 6, "any other mere possibility of a like nature", would cover cases like the present. Apart from the general rule that portions of the same section must be construed ejusdem generis with the rest of the section, there is a clear indication in the words "of a like nature" that the possibility must belong to the same category as the chance of an heir-apparent or the chance of a relation obtaining a legacy. We are, therefore, unable to find any restriction against a transfer of the kind now in dispute in section 6 of the Transfer of Property Act. On the question whether an immediate charge was created our attention was drawn to the decision in Palaniappa v. Lakshmanan (18), which seems to lay down the proposition too broadly. Navagee v. Administrator-General of Madras (19) expresses the law more guardedly and we are inclined to agree with the latter decision.

As regards the contention that section 58 of the Transfer of Property Act in speaking of mortgages uses the expression "specific immovable property," it is enough to say that property can be specific so long as it is identifiable, though it may not be in existence on the date of the transfer. Therefore, on this part of the argument we are inclined to agree with the contention of Mr. K. Srinivasa Aiyangar that the transfer, if otherwise valid, is not rendered inefficacious by reason of the subject-matter not having been in existence on the date of the agreement.

The real difficulty arises from the use of the words "moveable and immovable properties obtained by such compromise" in clause 12 of Exhibit B1. In clause 9 a right is given to a twelfth of the property in case the whole of the expense for the litigation in the first Court is borne by the lender. The clause says: "It has been agreed that you should without fail meet all the expenses incurred in the Original Court." Then comes clause 10, which prohibits any compromise without the consent of the lender. Clause 11 stipulates for an enforceable compromise in case Mr. Krishnaswami Aiyar gave his assent to it. Then follows the expression in clause 12 which we have quoted. The words "such compromise" can only refer to a compromise to which either the plaintiff's husband consented or which was brought about on the advice of Mr. Krishnaswami Aiyar. It is not disputed that in the present case the compromise which came into existence was not due to either of these two contingencies. The argument that although a compromise may be otherwise brought about, it was open to the plaintiff's husband to have accepted such a compromise because the provision for his assent and for Mr. Krishnaswami Aiyar's advice was for his benefit, does not meet the difficulty. The lien which is claimed is in respect of a property got under a particular compromise. Whatever may be the personal rights against the debtor, treating the money advanced as a loan, in order that the lien may fasten upon the compromise amount, it must have relation to the two contingencies provided for in the agreement. The specific property or the identifiable property on which the lien is sought to be attached is not the property which the parties contemplated by the agreement. We may state at once that we are in entire agreement with the contention of the learned Vakil for the respondent that the mere fact that only Rs. 93,000 out of the contemplated Rs. 2 lakhs was advanced would not derogate from the lien if it otherwise existed. It is settled law that a mere default on the part of the lender to pay the full amount of the charge would not deprive him of his lien in respect of the money actually advanced. See Anaharan Kasmi v. Saidamadath Avulla (5), Chinnayya Rawutan v. Chidambaram Chetti (6), Tirumal Raju v. Pondla Muthial Naidu (7), Rashik Lal v. Ram Narain (8) and Munshi Bajrangi Sahai v. Udit Narain Singh (9). These cases lay down that there will be a lien pro tanto notwithstanding default on the part of the lender. That principle would be applicable to the present case where the lender has advanced a portion of the amount which was agreed to be charged upon the property. But as we pointed out, the identity of the property is wanting, as clause 12 creates a charge only on property secured by a compromise effected in one of the two ways suggested in the previous clauses. In this view our conclusion is that no lien was created over the money given by the plaintiff's husband. The theory that a lien on specific property would attach itself to the substituted property contemplates that the contract creating the original lien subsists. Granting for argument's sake that the lien on the compromise amount contemplated in clauses 10 and 11 will fasten itself upon the new compromise amount, the fact that before that compromise was effected the parties had broken off relations, would render this impossible. Vide observations of Lord Justice Phillimore already quoted. We might also say that the fact that the agreement was not registered would not affect the creation of a lien, because under the compromise it was moveable property, namely money, that was largely secured, and it is against such moveable property that the Subordinate Judge has created a charge. In our opinion, section 49 of the Registration Act leaves no room for doubt that where there is a blend of moveable and immoveable properties in respect of which a charge is created, if the document creating the charge is not registered, it would only deprive the promisee of his right in the immoveable property and would not affect his rights in the moveable property. See also Pulaka Veetil v. Thiruthipalli (20).

Mr. K. Srinivasa Aiyangar put forward an alternative argument, to the effect that the refusal on the part of the plaintiff's husband to pay money did not put an end to the contract. He referred to the language of section 55 of the Contract Act and argued that the contract was at an end only in respect of moneys to be advanced after the date of the breach. We agree, to this extent that it is not every repudiation that will entail a breach. See Chitty on Contracts, page 771. Freeth v. Burr (10) and Mersey Steel and Iron Co. v. Naylor (11), to which the learned Vakil drew our attention, relate to the performance of contracts on specified occasions. In those cases it was held that failure to perform the contract on one of the occasions would not necessarily put an end to the contract as a whole. But as we read Exhibit B1, this contract is not of that nature. It does not specify the dates or occasions on which the payments are to be made. Moreover Exhibit M finally and without reservation put an end to the contract as a whole. We do not think it is open to the plaintiff to say that the contract subsisted after the date of Exhibit M.

The next argument of the learned Vakil for the respondent is that section 64 of the Contract Act applies to the case. We think he is right in this contention. The decisions in Chokalingum Mudaliar v. Mahomed Sheriff Saheb (3) and in H. Dakin and Co. v. Lee (4) bear him out in this contention. Therefore, if the suit were in time, although the plaintiff may not be entitled to a charge upon the property, she would still be entitled to a personal decree against the defendants. The argument of the learned Advocate-General on this part of the case is that the agreement is one and indivisible and that consequently there can be no apportionment on the principle of quantum meruit. The decisions in Underwood v. Lewis (21) and Sumpter v. Hedges (22) and the citations from Leake on Contracts all relate to cases where the performance of the contract in its entirety is rendered impossible by the breach of a single condition. For example, the case of the painting of a picture or the building of a house entrusted to a person may become unenforceable if there is a breach in the course of the performance of the contract. The reference to solicitors' contracts is not in point, because, as is pointed out on page 38 of Leake on Contracts, under the English Law the solicitor can in equity claim payment for work done pro rata. In our opinion, an agreement to advance money from time to time bears no analogy to cases of painting or building contracts. Therefore, we think that under section 64 of the Contract Act the party who paid money would be entitled to a refund of it, even though he did not perform the whole of his part of the contract.

Accepting this view the difficulty is about limitation. A faint argument was put forward by Mr. K. Srinivasa Aiyangar that limitation would commence only from the date when the funds came into existence. We fail to see how the cause of action which accrued on the date of Exhibit M can be regarded as having been suspended or stopped and having started again when the compromise money was secured. We think that as soon as the contract was broken, the plaintiff had a cause of action, and if she brought a suit within three years of that breach she could have recovered the money advanced by her husband. We must, therefore, hold that her claim is barred by limitation.

As regards the liability of defendants Nos. 1, 5 and 6, there can be no doubt that the contract with the 2nd defendant is not binding on them. The learned Vakil for the respondent contended that the 2nd defendant was acting as their agent. There is no allegation about such agency in the plaint; there is no issue and there is no discussion in the lower Court's judgment on this question. Before the Subordinate Judge their liability was claimed on the ground that they benefited by the agreement of the 2nd defendant. The learned Vakil for the respondent frankly conceded before us that mere participation in the benefit will not render a party liable if he was otherwise not a party to the contract. We need only refer to Ram Tuhul Sing v. Biseswar Lall Sahoo (23), Ruabon Steamship Co. v. London Assurance (24), Halima Bee v. Roshan Bee (25) and Abdul Wahid Khan v. Shalukha Bibi (26) for the proposition that a party cannot be charged with liability merely on the ground that he has benefited by a contract entered into by another.

We must, in these circumstances, hold that the decree against defendants Nos. 1, 5 and 6 should be set aside.

If we were otherwise inclined [to give a decree to the plaintiff, we would have held that there is no substance in the argument that interest is not payable on the amount, although we would have been inclined to restrict the interest to 6 per cent. after the date of the suit. We have given anxious consideration to the case, having regard to the fact that the plaintiff's husband has advanced a large sum of money which undoubtedly has benefited the appellants. The case for the plaintiff bristles with difficulties of various kinds. We have been reluctantly forced to come to the conclusion that the plaintiff's claim is barred by limitation. Therefore, we reverse the decree of the Subordinate Judge and dismiss the suit with costs throughout.

Section 88 of the Bengal Tenancy Act does not warrant a decree in the landlord's suit for the ejectment of the purchasers of a holding on their failure to jointly and severally attorn to the landlord within a time to be fixed by the Court. [p. 577, col. 1.]

In a suit for the ejectment of the purchasers of an occupancy holding, the defendants pleaded that the suit was bad as it was instituted by the naib of the plaintiff without her knowledge:

Held, that as the plaintiff was a lady, the onus was upon the defendants to prove affirmatively that the plaintiff was ignorant of the suit and that it was not enough for them to point to a few facts which gave cause to suspect that it was the naib who instituted the suit and then to call upon the plaintiff to prove that she had authorised the institution of the suit. for the Appellants.—Division of a holding without the consent in writing of the landlord is not binding on the landlord. See section 88 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

The onus is on the person who asserts that there is a sub-division of the holding to prove that the landlord consented. Defendants are asserting that proposition, so they must show that there was a sub-division with the consent in writing of the landlord. There was in fact no consent in writing and it has not been proved that the landlord did consent. Rajani Sundari Dassi v. Hara Sundari Dassi (1) is a strong case and is in favour of the appellants.

The section is clear and the suit ought to have succeeded.

Babu Girija Prasanna Sanyal, for the Respondents.—The cause of action stated in the plaint has been decided by the Courts below. The only prayer asked for was a prayer for ejectment. Relief now claimed is for a declaration that the sub-division is not binding. Therefore the contest is on a side issue. Both the Courts below find that the sub-division was made and fully recognised. The fact of consent is established on evidence. The case reported as Rajani Sundari Dassi v. Hara Sundari Dassi (1) comes under the amended section of the Tenancy Act. Section 88 of the Bengal Tenancy Act has not been amended in Eastern Bengal and Assam and therefore the case in Rajani Sundari Dassi v. Hara Sundari Dassi (1) has no application to this case. The case reported as Pyari Mohun Mukhopadhyaya v. Gopal Paik (2) governs the present case.

Babu Ram Charan Mitra, in reply.—My friend's contention is that the suit was one in ejectment originally and therefore it could not succeed on the ground that the sub-division was not authorised. There is nothing in the written statement giving a lie to the statement in the plaint. The parties went on trial on the 7th issue as the main issue. On the question of recognition the law is clear. See section 88 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The law is the same from 1885. Amendment was made in West Bengal and the law remained the same in East Bengal.

There is no room for the contention that a landlord would be bound by his agent's granting receipts as showing that the tenancy had been sub-divided; that would not be tantamount to express consent of the landlord given in writing.

JUDGMENT.

WALMSLEY, J.—The plaintiff, now appellant, brought the suit, from which this appeal arises, to eject the defendants from a holding on the ground that the holding is an occupancy raiyyati, which cannot be transferred without the consent of the landlord, and that the defendants by their purchase from the landlord's registered tenant had acquired no title.

The defendants replied that the holding was one at a fixed rate of rent and that they had with the consent of the landlord's naib divided the holding into three equal parts, each of which bore a third of the former rent of the whole. They also asserted that the suit was brought by a dishonest naib and without the knowledge of the landlord.

The first Court found that the holding was an ordinary occupancy holding, that is, a holding which cannot be transferred without the consent of the landlord, and the defendants do not appear to have challenged this finding in the lower Appellate Court.

Both Courts found that the suit had been instituted without the knowledge of the landlord, and that finding is one of the points pressed on appeal. It appears to me that the onus of proof has been placed on the wrong shoulders; the plaintiff is a lady and the defendants ought to have proved affirmatively that the plaintiff was ignorant of the suit; it was not enough for them to point to a few facts which give cause to suspect that it was the naib who instituted the suit and then to call upon the plaintiff to prove that she did authorize the institution of the suit.

The substantial question, however, is whether the plaintiff has a right to eject the defendants. The suit as framed was clearly based on the ground that the defendants had bought the holding from the registered tenant without the landlord's consent. The plaintiff's advisers, however, allowed themselves to be led away from th main issue by the defendant's pleading, and the question which was discussed in the Courts below, and the question which forms the subject-matter of the grounds of appeal to this Court, is whether there had been a subdivision of the tenancy sanctioned by the landlord. It seems obvious to me that in allowing the seventh issue to be framed as it was, and in not asking for an issue upon the question whether the transfer required the landlord's sanction or had received the landlord's sanction, there was an implied admission that the defendants had become the plaintiff's tenants of the holding, provided it was kept entire. Be that as it may, however, the grounds of appeal do not raise the point that the transfer had not been recognised, so we cannot go into that question.

Then, if we assume that the subdivision has not been authorized, I do not see how the plaintiff can obtain a decree for ejectment. It is suggested that we should direct that if the defendants do not "jointly and severally attorn to the plaintiff" within a time to be fixed by the Court, they shall be ejected from the holding. But I cannot find in section 88 of the Tenancy Act any warrant for such a decree. Whatever view we take of the finding on the matter of the subdivision of the tenancy there cannot be an order for ejectment, and as that is the only form of relief mentioned in the plaint, we cannot pass a decree directing that the subdivision is not binding on the landlord.

The plaintiff's appeal is dismissed with costs.

Civil revision against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Mainpuri.

Mr. Baleshwari Pershad, for the Appellant.

Mr. A. E. Ryves, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—We think that the order of the Court below was clearly wrong. One Nisar Ali brought a suit and made an application to sue in forma pauperis. Eventually he was permitted to bring the suit in this way. Meanwhile he was adjudicated an insolvent. The Receiver in the insolvency wished to continue the proceedings. The learned Subordinate Judge points out that he had never given leave to the Receiver to sue in forma pauperis and that the Receiver not being personally liable either to the Government or to the defendants, he ought to pay Court-fees. He accordingly made an order that the Receiver should pay the Court-fees on the plaint and on all the applications. We think that once Nisar Ali obtained leave to sue in forma pauperis in a suit which had been commenced before his insolvency, the Receiver was entitled to continue the suit just as Nisar Ali could have done, and in this respect the order of the Court below was wrong. The Court is, of course entitled, to order the Receiver to give security for the costs as required by Order XXII, rule 8. This matter is not now expressly before us. We have only to consider the legality of the order passed by the Subordinate Judge. We allow the application, set aside the order of the Court below and remand the case to that Court, with directions to re-admit the case and deal with it according to law as pointed out by us. Costs here and heretofore will be costs in the cause.

A Hindu reversioner impeaching an alienation by a widow need not prove an actual transfer by the widow. It is enough if he proves that the widow had done an act which resulted in the transfer of the property. [p. 579, col. 1.]

Sheo Singh v. Jeoni, 19 A. 524; A. W. N. (1897) 141; 9 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 339, followed.

The withdrawal by the widow of her defence to an action on a mortgage executed by her husband would not be tantamount to an alienation by her, and if a decree is passed in the suit and the mortgaged property is sold, the Court-sale cannot be treated as a private sale by the widow, unless it is shown that it was the necessary result of some collusive arrangement made by her to use the Court as a medium of transfer, i. e., that she intended to transfer the property by means of a Court-sale and took steps to bring it about. A suit by the reversioner to set aside such a sale is governed by Article 120 and not by Article 125 of the Limitation Act. [p. 579, col. 2; p. 580, col. 2.]

One K. executed a mortgage in favour of R. R. in 1883. In a suit by K.'s widow the mortgage was recognised as valid and in another suit by a subsequent mortgagee it was held to be valid against the widow. In execution of a decree against R. R., his mortgagee interest was sold and purchased by R. A. R. A. brought a suit on the mortgage. The widow at first contested the suit but afterwards abandoned her defence. A decree was passed and the property was sold in Court auction and was purchased by 2nd defendant. In a suit by the plaintiff, the nearest reversioner to K., to set aside the sale, impleading the widow as 1st defendant:

Held, (1) that the suit was not maintainable, as under the circumstances the Court-sale could not be treated as an alienation by the widow; [p. 579, col. 2; p. 580, col. 2.]

(2) that as the suit was brought more than 6 years from the date of the sale, it was barred under Article 120 of the Limitation Act. [p. 580, col. 2.]

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Trichinopoly, in Appeal Suit No. 94 of 1916, preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Namakkal, in Original Suit No. 1157 of 1913.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. A. Krishnaswami Aiyar (with him Mr. B. Samayya), for the Appellant.—Though there has not been an actual alienation by the widow, her conduct amounted to an alienation. She did not press her defence in the suit by Rama Aiyar, who purchased the mortgage interest of her husband's mortgagee. The lower Appellate Court has found that she received Rs. 900 to confess judgment and withdrew her defence from corrupt motives. Her action was such as to contribute to the Court sale of the property and should be treated as an alienation by her, though it was effected under colour of Court process. Bandon v. Becher (1) and Sheo Singh v. Jeoni (2).

The suit is governed by Article 125 of the Limitation Act and was in time.

Mr. R. Kuppuswami Aiyar, for the Respondents.—The Court-sale cannot be treated as an alienation by the widow. She had nothing to do with the mortgage, which was effected by her husband. The mortgage was found to be valid against the widow in prior judicial proceedings. Her withdrawal of the defence in the suit to enforce the mortgage cannot be said to be fraudulent or collusive. It was unlikely that she would have succeeded if she had pressed her defence. The Sub-Judge only says that she probably received Rs. 900. There is no distinct finding on the point. Unless it is shown that the Court-sale was the result of a collusive arrangement to which the widow was a party, it cannot be treated as her alienation.

The suit is clearly barred under Article 120 of the Limitation Act. In this view of the matter, Article 125 cannot apply.

defendant, widow of one Krishna Ayyar, plaintiff being the nearest reversioner. Krishna Ayyar sold the property in 1883 to his concubine and another and they executed a hypothecation deed in favour of one Rama Rao in 1885. In a suit by the widow this mortgage was recognised as valid and in another suit by a subsequent mortgagee it was again held to be valid against the widow. A decree was obtained against Rama Rao, and in execution his mortgage-deed was sold and purchased by one Rama Ayyar, who brought a suit upon it. The widow at first contested the suit, but abandoned her defence. The mortgaged property was, therefore, brought to sale and purchased by 2nd defendant in October 1902. It is contended for the appellant that this sale in 1902 amounted to an alienation by the widow and that this suit brought in 1913 is within time. The only question that need be considered now is whether the facts of the case establish the fact that this sale amounted to an alienation by the widow. A statement by the widow (Exhibit D) admitting the claim has been found by the Subordinate Judge not to have been presented by the widow herself, but in other portions of his judgment he finds that she confessed judgment from corrupt motives. It is alleged that she received Rs. 900 as consideration for not contesting the suit, but the Subordinate Judge only finds this to be probable and does not say it was proved. It is sufficient for plaintiff's case to prove that the widow had done an act which necessarily resulted in the transfer of the property. [Vide, Sheo Singh v. Jeoni (2).] The question, therefore, for decision is whether the widow's withdrawal of her defence amounted to such an act. It must be remembered that the mortgage had already been held in judicial decisions to be valid and binding on the widow, and although the Subordinate Judge has now found that it is not valid, his decision is based on evidence given 30 years after the mortgage was executed, and his finding is merely that consideration has not been proved. Except for the allegation that the widow received Rs. 900, there is no evidence of collusion between her and the plaintiff in the suit on the mortgage-bond.

In view of the previous proceedings it was most unlikely that a defence by the widow would have been successful. That being so, the sale would, in all probability, have taken place without any act on her part and, therefore, I am unable to say that the widow's action had, as a necessary result, the transfer of the property, nor can it be said that she materially contributed by her action to the transfer. Her action in 1900, more than 12 years before suit, followed by the sale in 1902 cannot, therefore, be said to amount to an alienation. Article 125 of the Limitation Act is, therefore, inapplicable and under Article 120 the suit is barred by limitation.

A number of other questions have been argued for respondents Nos. 2 and 3, which were decided against them by the Subordinate Judge, but it is unnecessary to discuss them in view of the above finding.

The second appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

KRISHNAN, J.—The judgment of the lower Court that this suit is barred by limitation under Article 120 of the Limitation Act is, in my opinion, correct. The appellant's Vakil has contended that Article 125 applied but on the facts found the sale in question cannot, by any stretch of language, be considered as one "made" by the widow.

The sale impugned is the Court sale in 1902 in which the 2nd defendant purchased the plaint property for Rs. 3,100. Ordinarily a Court sale cannot be treated as a sale by a private individual. But the appellant's Vakil has relied on the case of Bandon v. Becher (1), to show that a Court-sale should be treated as a private sale where it is the result of a collusive suit or proceeding in Court. Assuming this argument is correct, to justify us in treating the Court-sale in this case as a private sale by the widow it must be shown that it was the necessary result of some collusive arrangement made by her to use the Court as a medium of transfer, or, in other words, that she intended to transfer the property by means of a Court-sale and took steps to bring it about. Any failure to defend on her part an action in which a decree was passed in execution of which the property was sold by the Court, is insufficient to make the Court-sale her sale, unless the decree and sale were the necessary result of her action and unless the failure to defend was itself part of the contrivance adopted by her to bring about the intended Court-sale. The evidence in the present case falls far short of these requirements. The mortgage suit in which the sale took place was in no way a collusive suit. The widow had nothing to do with the original mortgage-deed itself. All that is proved is that, though the widow set up the defence in the mortgage suit that the mortgage sued upon was not valid and was without consideration, she subsequently did not appear and press her defence and that she acted thus from some 'corrupt motive,' because the Subordinate Judge says she probably received some Rs. 900 from the plaintiff in that suit to abstain from defending. It is not shown that her defence would have succeeded and would have led to the suit being dismissed and the property being saved. It may be noted that, in a previous suit by one Peruma Goundan, she did press her present defence to a decision, but the decision was against her and in favour of the mortgagee. It is true that the Subordinate Judge now finds that it is not proved by the 2nd defendant, the auction-purchaser, that any money passed under the mortgage to Krishna Ayyar, the widow's husband and the original owner of the property. In the mortgage suit the burden was on the widow to establish that the mortgage had no consideration against the mortgagee's assignee, Rama Ayyar. It is one thing to find that an auction-purchaser, in a Court-sale, who is a stranger to the previous transactions, has failed to prove consideration in the suit and quite another thing to hold that the widow would have succeeded in establishing failure of consideration against the mortgagee's assignee, in the former suit, where the burden of proof was on her. The present finding, therefore, does not lead to any conclusion that the mortgage decree was the result of her failure to press her defence.

The plaintiff attempted to show that that decree was one passed on a confession of judgment by the widow and for the purpose he relied on a statement filed in Court, Exhibit D. But the lower Court has found that it is not proved that the widow either signed or presented it to Court. This is in accordance with what appears in the judgment in that suit, which shows that Exhibit D was neither noticed nor acted upon. In the above circumstances the lower Court was right in holding that the Court-sale could not be treated as an alienation by the widow.

The cases quoted by the learned Vakil for the appellant in Sheo Singh v. Jeoni (2) and Ram Sarup v. Ram Dei (3) are both clearly distinguishable as, in both of them, it was proved that the widow intended by the collusive proceedings, one being a decree for possession and the other an arbitration, to get her husband's property transferred to others and that she carried out her intentions by such means. In the present case the suit was not a collusive one and whatever collusion there might be in not pressing the defence, it is not shown that it was intended to, and did in fact, bring about the Court sale now sought to be avoided.

There being thus no alienation by the widow Article 125 of the Limitation Act cannot apply, and the suit being a declaratory one the only Article applicable is Article 120; and under it the suit is clearly barred, being more than 6 years from the date of sale.

The case mainly relied on by the Subordinate Judge, Tallaparagada Sundarappa v. Beorugapalli Sreeramulu (4), is not in point, as there was no alienation at all in that case as the property had only been attached and not sold, as appears from the statement of facts in the report. But apart from this his view of the law is correct and I accept it. He has discussed various other questions and given findings on them; and though the learned Vakil for the respondents has attacked those findings, it is quite unnecessary to consider them as the suit fails on the ground of limitation.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 91, applicability of—Suit to recover possession of property sold during minority—Limitation.

Article 91 of Schedule I of the Limitation Act does not apply to a suit for possession, where the plaintiff alleges and proves that a sale-deed is void because it was executed by him while a minor, but does not claim expressly to have it cancelled or set aside. [p. 588, col. 1, p. 589, col. 1.]

Appeal from the decision of the District Judge, Satara, in Appeal No. 72 of 1915, confirming the decree passed by the Subordinate Judge, Tasgaon, in Civil Suit No. 286 of 1911.

The appeal was heard by Beaman and Marten, JJ., on the 18th December 1917, when their Lordships referred some questions to a Full Bench by the following

JUDGMENT.

BEAMAN, J.—The plaintiff-respondent in these two appeals sued to recover the plaintiff lands. The defendants relied principally upon two sale-deeds of the year 1903 executed to them by the plaintiff. These deeds were executed in March, while the plaintiff has since proved that he only attained majority the following June. But in the deeds themselves he is described as a man of twenty years of age.

The Court of first appeal has found as a fact that the defendants were not deceived by the false representation in the deeds, and that disposes of the issue of estoppel.

The principal question we have to answer is: whether, since the plaintiff admittedly did not sue to have the deeds of 1903 set aside or cancelled within three years, he can succeed in these ejectment suits, and so indirectly deprive these deeds of all legal effect?

It is clear that unless he could disprove the apparent rectitude of his own deeds, his suits would necessarily be defeated by their mere production. It is also quite clear that the onus of proving that he was a minor in March 1903 was upon the plaintiff. It is admitted that he was well aware of the grounds upon which he has, in effect, got these deeds cancelled or treated as void, from the date on which he attained his majority, the 10th June 1903. He brought these suits in 1911.

The first material proposition necessary to the success of the defendants' contention is that where the law of limitation compels a person to obtain the cancellation or setting aside of a deed within a certain time, and he fails to do so, he cannot, after the expiration of that time, challenge the deed. He must either show that it is void or voidable within three years or admit it to be valid in all respects. If that proposition is unsound, there is nothing left to argue about. It also becomes hard to discover any practical reason why Article 91 should not be wiped out.

If it be argued that while the affirmative right to have a deed set aside or cancelled is gone if not exercised within the prescribed period, that does not preclude a person, against whom the deed is set up by way of defence, from proving after the expiration of the former period that he might have got the deed cancelled, the answer is that, for all purposes of scientific theory and exact reasoning, no distinction can be drawn between cases of deeds under Article 91 and cases of adoption under Articles 118, 119.

The policy of the Statute is quite clear and the same in both cases.

If a man wishes to avoid his own deed (and I doubt whether Article 91 will apply to any but a man's own deed) as void ab initio, or voidable for any reason, the law declares that he must prove all facts necessary to be proved before the deed is seen to be void or voidable, within three years.

If a man wishes to prove that an adoption never took place, or was invalid (here is a pretty close correspondence between void and voidable deeds under Article 91), he must do so within six years. If questions of that sort are to be left open for twelve, or, may be, sixty years, proof might be very difficult to get, and very unsatisfactory.

The second proposition which the defendants must establish is that Article 91 applies to void as much as to voidable deeds. If it does not, then, again, there is nothing left to argue about. No reason, theoretical or practical, for so restricting the operation of the Article occurs to me. If the need of the Article is to be sought in the expediency of adducing proof of these matters within a comparatively short time, it must be felt just as much where a man seeks to show that his deed was void ab initio as where he seeks to show that it has since become voidable, or was in its nature voidable from the first. Where upon the face of it a deed purports to have been made by a major, and he desires to prove that he was not a major at the time, the issue is as much one of fact, as much in need of proof, as an issue of fraud or undue influence.

This case is as good as any other for practical illustration.

It is everybody's case that the defendants were in possession of the land as mortgagees in 1901. In 1903, the plaintiff sold them the lands by registered deeds, in which he describes himself as being twenty years of age. Let us suppose that fifty-nine years after the date of the mortgage the plaintiff were to sue to redeem. The defendants would, of course, rely upon the sale-deeds of 1903. On any other view than that to which I incline it follows that the plaintiff might, fifty-six years after having executed these sale-deeds, go into the question of his minority at the time.

If we turn to section 39 of the Specific Relief Act, we find that the same relief is given against void and voidable deeds. I do not know that it has ever yet been suggested that Article 91 of the Limitation Schedule was not framed with special reference to all cases of the kind provided for in section 39 of the Specific Relief Act. Where proof must be given before a Court can know whether an instrument is void or not, then, regard being had to the object of Article 91, I do not think any valid reason can be given for saying that that Article was not intended to cover void instruments. There may be many void instruments which one, if not both parties to them, intended to be operative. Benami deeds are on a different footing, for the parties to them, ex hypothesi, never intended at any time that they should be operative inter se. So it was held in Petherpormal Chetty v. Muniandy Servai (1).

Neglecting exceptions of that kind and confining myself to deeds which would have to be proved to be void or voidable by one injuriously affected by them, it seems to me that the true principle governing all cases of the kind, no matter upon what facts they may arise, has been laid down in Jagadamba Chaudhrani v. Dakhina Mohun Roy Chaudhri (2) and for this High Court finally settled and most clearly stated by Jenkins, C. J., in the Full Bench case of Shrinivas Murar v. Hanmant (3).

That case arose upon Articles 118, 119, but "deed" might be substituted for "adoption" throughout the judgment without affecting the cogency of the reasoning, or the applicability of the principle in the slightest degree. As to earlier cases of this High Court, such as Nabab Mir Sayad Alamkhan v. Yasinkhan (4), the dictum of Sir Charles Sargent upon which the plaintiff relies was obiter. The reason given for it has no relevancy at all to the principle I am discussing. For all purposes of Article 91 it cannot make the slightest difference whether possession were taken under deed, later impugned, or independently of it, so long as, if valid, that deed would confirm the possession and make it unassailable.

In many of the judgments to which we have been referred, I find a confusion of reasoning arising out of assuming that Article 91 has some theoretical connection with Articles 142 and 144. It is only where those Articles will not help, that recourse must be had to Article 91. I give this example. A takes possession of B's land as a trespasser. Two years later, B sells his land to A. Five years later B sues in ejectment. A could get no help from his adverse possession, which began before the sale-deed. But if my view of Article 91 be right, B's suit would necessarily fail. He could not challenge the sale-deed, and as long as it stood unchallenged it is a complete answer to B's suit. Probably no deed falling within the contemplation and intention of Article 91 would be found which, if it related to immoveable property, did not confer title, as from its date, and as soon as that is clearly realized all the confusion to which I have been alluding must disappear.

Where one principle is equally applicable to several groups of facts the establishment, of that principle upon one of those groups of facts must, by implication, if not expressly, overrule a decision upon another of those groups of facts, which rests upon a different and irreconcilable principle. Thus in my opinion even were it more than an obiter dictum, so much of Sir Charles Sargent's decision in Nabab Mir Sayad Alamkhan v. Yasinkhan (4) as the plaintiff relies on was overruled by the Full Bench decision in Shrinivas Murar v. Hanmant (3),

If we substitute "deed" for "adoption" in the first of the three questions in the answers to which Jenkins, C. J., thought that the principles deducible from Jagadamba's case (2) were best expressed, and I can discover no good reason why this substitution should not be made, the whole of the close and powerful reasoning of that judgment will apply totidem verbis to the case before us. Prior to that decision in 1899 there had been some conflict of judicial authority in this High Court, and there still is between the Bombay and other High Courts. But as a Bench of this Court we are, of course, bound by the decision of the Full Bench in Shrinivas' case (3), unless it can be distinguished. I do not think it either can, or ought to be. In my opinion, and speaking with all respect, the reasoning both of that and Jagadamba's case (2) is unanswerable. Nor do I think it prudent to strain ingenuity to find fine distinctions and so sow a crop of exceptions, impairing what would otherwise be a very simple, easily intelligible, and uniformly applicable principle to every case of the kind. I mention before concluding a certain amount of argument arising out of non est factum cases. A moment's reflection will show that they are utterly irrelevant, and I do not think any useful purpose will be served by examining that set of arguments. If the plaintiff cannot impeach his deeds of 1903 in these suits because he did not do so within three years, it is plain that he must fail. It is as plain that he cannot obtain the relief he asks in these ejectment suits without disturbing those deeds. In my opinion nothing, from the theoretical standpoint, turns upon the deeds which a plaintiff, situated as this plaintiff is, has to get rid of, being void or only voidable. The point, and the only point, is within what time can he be allowed to prove that his deeds are either void or voidable?

I would, therefore, hold that these suits are time-barred and must be dismissed with all costs. But since there might be a reasonable doubt whether such a decision does not conflict with Nabab Mir Sayad Alamkhan v. Yasinkhan (4) and further whether assuming that it does, the latter decision was not by necessary implication overruled by the Full Bench in Shrinivas Murar v. Hanmant (3) and, lastly, since the point is one of far-reaching importance, we would submit the following question to a Full Bench:—

"If a plaintiff in ejectment has executed a deed or deeds which, if legal, valid and in all respects binding upon him as upon their face they purport to be, would defeat the title upon which he sues in ejectment, the burden of proving that they are void or voidable being upon him, would such ejectment suit be governed by Article 91 or by Article 142 or 144 of the First Schedule of the Limitation Act?"

MARTEN, J.—In this second appeal the real point depends on Article 91 of the Indian Limitation Act. Does Article 91 apply to a suit for possession, where the plaintiff alleges and proves that a sale deed is void because it was executed by him whilst a minor, but does not claim expressly to have it cancelled or set aside?

The plaintiff was born on the 10th June 1885. Whilst a minor he executed, or purported to execute, a sale-deed dated the 16th March 1903 in favour of the defendant. He filed the present suit on the 28th July 1911. The plaint merely prays for possession and ancillary relief. It pleads the void sale-deed, and the plaintiff's then infancy, but ignores a mortgage of 30th August 1901 executed by the plaintiff's guardian in favour of the defendant. The defendant appears to have taken possession under that mortgage.

In the Courts below, the case almost entirely turned on whether the plaintiff was estopped by a statement in the sale-deed that he was then twenty. Both Courts found that there was no estoppel, because the defendant was well aware of the true facts and was in no way deceived by the false statement. The estoppel point was again argued before us, but it is clear that on the facts as found in the Courts below the defendant must fail on that point. I will only add that if it was necessary to go into the facts, they are such as to arouse the greatest suspicion in a Court of Equity in considering the dealings between the infant and the defendant with whom he was living. The Court of first instance described the defendant as a perfectly unscrupulous man (see page 13, line 59) and the lower Appellate Court considered his conduct to be verging on fraud (see page 3, line 41). The Court of first instance treated the suit as in effect a redemption suit, and decreed possession on payment of Rs. 199. The lower Appellate Court held nothing remained due on the mortgage and decreed possession only. We must, I think, accept this finding of fact by the lower Appellate Court. So too I think that, in the absence of objection made in the Court below, it is not now open to the defendant to contend that the suit cannot be regarded as a redemption suit and must, therefore, fail. So far as mere recovery of possession, is concerned, the suit would appear to be one for recovery of possession whether regarded as an ejectment or a redemption suit: see Hunt v. Worsfold (5).

This leaves us then with the bare point of law under Article 91, a point which was practically taken for granted in favour of the plaintiff in the Courts below when once he had succeeded on the estoppel point. It is now settled by the Privy Council that in India a mortgage by a minor is void ab initio: see Mohori Bibee v. Dharmodas Ghose (6). On the other hand, a mere plea of non est factum appears to be insufficient in England, for, according to Simpson on Infants, page 4, the infancy must be pleaded specifically. The appellant says, however, this is because in England some minors' contracts are voidable only, and that in India a plea of non est factum would suffice. Assuming, however, that infancy ought to be pleaded, does such a plea involve in effect a claim to cancel or set aside the sale-deed under Article 91?

In Petherpermal Chetty v. Muniandy Serrai (1) the Privy Council held that Article 91 only applied to suits in which the document sought to be set aside was intended to be operative against the plaintiff and would remain operative if not set aside. They further held that Article 91 did not apply to a benami deed, if I may properly use that expression. This decision has since been applied in Jagdeo Singh v. Phuljhari (7). The Calcutta Courts appear to consider that a void deed, as opposed to a voidable deed, does not require to be set aside or cancelled and consequently is not within Article 91 [see Sham Lal Mitra v. Amarendro Nath Bose (8), Banku Behari Shaha v. Krishto Gobindo Joardar (9) and Harihar Ojha v. Dasarathi Misra (10).] In this Court a similar view appears to have been taken in Abdul Rahim v. Kirparam Daji (11) by Birdwood and Parsons, JJ. Another distinction was taken by Sir Charles Sargent and Mr. Justice Candy in Nabab Mir Sayad Alamkhan v. Yasin Khan (4) viz., that where a defendant did not get possession under the sale-deed but only used it to defend his title, Article 91 did not apply. That case followed Bhagvant Govind v. Kondi (12), a decision of Sir Charles Sargent and Mr. Justice Bayley. Standing alone these two latter cases would appear to govern the present case, for defendant's Counsel did not dispute that his client took possession originally under the mortgage and not under the sale-deed.

The cases above cited appear, however, to have been decided on a different line of reasoning to that which eventually prevailed in the adoption cases of Jagadamba Chaudhrani v. Dakhina Mohun Roy Chaudhri (2) and Shrinivas Murar v. Hanmant (3), the former being a decision of the Privy Council and the latter of a Full Bench of this Court. The force of that reasoning in the adoption cases is apparent. Its reconciliation with the other line of cases, viz., the deed cases, is not so apparent. Curiously enough the above authorities in the deed cases do not appear to have been cited in the adoption cases. As regards other cases under the Act, a suit to set aside a deed on the ground of undue influence must be brought within three years [see Janki Kunwar v. Ajit Singh (13)] as must a suit to set aside a bond for fraud: see Bakatram Nanuram v. Kharsetji (14). Even in forgery cases or in suits by a ward to set aside a transfer of property by his guardian the period of limitation appears in general to be three years: see Articles 92, 93 and 44. If then Article 91 does not apply in the present case, the plaintiff would have twelve years under Article 144 if the suit be regarded as an ejectment suit, or alternatively sixty years under Article 148 if the suit be regarded as a redemption suit.

The defendants further relied on section 39 of the Specific Relief Act, but as at present advised, I doubt whether that section carries the matter much further. It is a permissive and not an obligatory section.

Under the above circumstances I am of opinion that the case is one which by reason of its general importance and of the conflict of authority requires consideration by a Full Bench.

The questions to be submitted to the Full Bench should, I think, be as follows, viz.:—

1. Whether Article 91 of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, applies to a suit for possession, where the plaintiff alleges and proves that a sale-deed is void because it was executed by him whilst a minor, but does not claim expressly to have it cancelled or set aside.

2. Whether in such a case as that mentioned in the last question, it makes any difference that the defendant originally obtained possession of the property under some instrument other than the void sale-deed?

Mr. R. S. Navalkar, for the Appellant.

Mr. R. N. Koyajee, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT OF THE FULL BENCH.

BACHELOR, AG. C. J.—In this reference the facts are these: The suit, which was filed in September 1911, was brought to obtain possession of lands. The plaintiff attained majority on 10th June 1903: on the 16th March 1903, and consequently while he was still an infant, he executed a deed of sale in favour of the defendant. The defendant had obtained possession under a mortgage of 1901, executed by the plaintiff's guardian in his favour. In the plaint the sale-deed of 16th March 1903 is mentioned, and it is pleaded that the deed is void by reason of the plaintiff's then infancy: there is no prayer that the deed should be set aside or cancelled.

The question we have to decide is whether the suit is governed by Article 91 of the Indian Limitation Act of 1908.

if it is so governed, then it is barred; otherwise it is in time.

The sale-deed of March 1903 was, and is, void and inoperative by reason of the plaintiff's infancy. That being so, it is contended for the plaintiff that he was under no obligation to sue to get it set aside or cancelled, and that his omission to bring such a suit does not expose his present suit for possession to the bar created by Article 91 of the Indian Limitation Act.

I think that this contention should succeed, and, in my opinion, the question is in substance answered by decisions of the Privy Council. In Bijoy Gopal Mukerji v. Krishna Mahishi Debi (15) the heirs of a Hindu sued, first, for a declaration that an Ijara granted by the deceased widow had become inoperative against the plaintiffs after her death, and, secondly, for khas possession of the properties. Their Lordships held that the suit was substantially one for possession, and was governed by Article 141, not by Article 91. In delivering the judgment of the Board, Lord Davey said, speaking of the Hindu widow:—"Her alienation is not, therefore, absolutely void, but it is prima facie voidable at the election of the reversionary heir. He may think fit to affirm it, or he may at his pleasure treat it as a nullity without the intervention of any Court, and he shows his election to do the latter by commencing an action to recover possession of the property. There is, in fact, nothing for the Court either to set aside or cancel as a condition precedent to the right of action of the reversionary heir." Now if that is true even of a voidable transaction, subsequently avoided by the election of the party interested, it seems to me that it must a fortiori be true of a transaction which, as here, was void ab initio: in that case there was a real obstacle, which at least had temporary operation: here there never was at any time any real obstacle at all, but the thing which seemed to constitute an obstacle was in the eye of the law no reality at all. Petherpermal Chetty v. Muniandy Serai (1) is, I think, even more directly in point.

(15) 34 L. A. 87; 9 Bom. L. R. 602 at p. 604; 11 C. W. N. 424; 5 C. L. J. 334; 2 M. L. T. 133; 17 M. L. J. 154; 4 A. L. J. 329; 34 C. 329 (P. C.).

There in a suit for the possession of land it appeared that the plaintiff's predecessor-in-title had, six years prior to the institution of the suit, executed a benami deed of sale of the land collusively and in order to defeat the claim of a prior equitable mortgagee. Counsel for the defendant contended—I quote the report—that "before he (the plaintiff) could recover the land, he must first set aside the conveyance, and a suit for that purpose was barred by Act XV of 1877, Schedule II, Article 91." Upon this argument a specific question was raised by Lord Atkinson, who answered it in these words, which I set out because they seem to me decisive of the point now under consideration:—"As to the point raised on the Indian Limitation Act, 1877, their Lordships are of opinion that the conveyance ...being an inoperative instrument, as, in effect, it has been found to be, does not bar the plaintiff's right to recover possession of his land, and that it is unnecessary for him to have it set aside as a preliminary to his obtaining the relief he claims. The 141st and not the 91st Article in the Second Schedule to the Act is, therefore, that which applies to the case, and the suit has consequently been instituted in time." It is important to observe that Article 91 was excluded, not in terms because the conveyance was benami, but because it was, as found in the suit, inoperative. So here, the deed of sale by the infant was inoperative and, consistently with these decisions, I think we are bound to hold that the present suit is not barred by Article 91. The same conclusion is suggested by Beni Pershad Koeri v. Dudhnath Roy (16), where a suit was brought in 1893 to recover possession of the village. The plaintiff's ancestors had parted with possession in 1836, when a grant for life had been made to another person. In 1849 the grantee executed a permanent pottah of it to one Ram Golam and in 1855 the grantee surrendered the village to the plaintiff's predecessor, who allowed Ram Golam to remain in possession paying rent as stipulated in the pottah. It was found that the pottah was void against the grantor. The question remained whether the plaintiffs were entitled to eject the defendant, who claimed title under Ram Golam. It was contended that the suit was barred because the plaintiff's predecessors might and ought to have sued for a declaration of their right to possession on Ram Golam's death under section 39 of the Specific Relief Act, and that such a suit was barred under Article 91. But Lord Davey said: "It is sufficient answer to this argument to say that, though such an action might have been brought, the Maharajah was not bound to bring it, and there was no necessity for him to do so. According to their Lordships' view the pottah (whatever its construction) had become a spent instrument, and had no longer any vitality as a grant of the property." In our case the deed of sale can be in no better position, for it never had any vitality as a conveyance of the property. On the same principle the Indian High Courts, especially here and in Calcutta, have held that it is not necessary in the case of a void deed to sue to have it set aside or cancelled.

These decisions seem to me to require a conclusion in the plaintiff's favour. I need not refer to other decisions of the Judicial Committee which have been cited for the defendant, for in none of them was the Court concerned with a deed such as we have here. The only case where the facts bear a superficial resemblance to the present facts and where the decision went the other way is Janki Kunwar v. Arit Singh (13). There the deed involved was a grant of land, alleged to have been obtained by fraud and undue influence from one of the plaintiffs. It was decided that the suit was governed by Article 91. But then their Lordships held that the suit was a suit, not to obtain possession but to set aside the grant, and—what seems to me of greater significance—it was never found that the deed was liable to be set aside: on the contrary, the Judicial Commissioner found no proof of undue influence or fraud, and their Lordships saw "no ground for thinking that on that matter he came to a wrong conclusion." The deed, therefore, was never ascertained to be even voidable.

If I am right in thinking that the point before us is concluded by the decisions of the Privy Council, it becomes unnecessary to consider whether the rulings of our own Court are consistent with the conclusion. This I say merely in order to explain the present judgment, and not with any desire to cast doubt upon these rulings. That most canvassed for the defendant was Shrinivas Murar v. Hanmant (3), a Full Bench decision where the leading judgment was delivered by Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C. J. As I have said, I am not concerned to reconcile this decision with the cited decisions of the Privy Council, but I may say that for my own part I can see no inconsistency. In Shrinivas' case (3) an essential part of the suit was a prayer for a declaration that an adoption was invalid. It was held that, this part of the claim being exposed to the bar of Article 118 of the Schedule, the whole claim was time-barred; but nothing was decided as to the applicability of Article 91, as it was nobody's case that that Article entered into the controversy. I need not say that I am very sensible of the weight of my learned brother Beaman's arguments that it would have tended to logical symmetry and simplicity of principle if the Legislature had treated adoptions and deeds on the same footing. But they have not done so, and separate Articles of the Limitation Act are provided for these separate cases. It is of course not for us to assign reasons for this action of the Legislature, but presumably it was thought that a substantial distinction existed between adoptions and deeds. Among possible grounds for such a distinction would be the greater publicity and the change of status consequent on an apparent adoption. This, however, is merely conjecture; whatever the reason for it may be, the difference of treatment is there and in a well-known passage in Quinn v. Leathem (17) the Earl of Halsbury, L. C., has warned us against the danger of applying rigorously logical tests to propositions of law: "A case", his Lordship there says, "is only an authority for what it actually decides. I entirely deny that it can be quoted for a proposition that may seem to follow logically from it. Such a mode of reasoning assumes that the law is necessarily a logical Code, whereas every lawyer must acknowledge that the law is not always logical at all."

On these grounds, and with sincere respect for the contrary view of Beaman, J., I conclude that the first of Marten, J.'s two questions should be answered in the negative. That is sufficient for present purposes, and I do not think we should decide more than that.

SHAH, J.—I agree.

KAMP, J.—The facts out of which this reference arises are few and simple in their inception. The plaintiff, who attained his majority on 10th June 1903, purported, on 16th March 1903, to execute a sale-deed of some of his lands in favour of this defendant, who was already in possession of those and other lands of the plaintiff by virtue of a mortgage of 30th August 1901 executed in his favour by plaintiff's guardian. The plaintiff filed this suit on 8th September 1911 for the lands, alleging that on the date of the sale-deed he was a minor. The matter comes before us on a reference from Beaman and Marten, JJ., who held divergent views on the question as to whether Article 91 of the Indian Limitation Act applied to plaintiff's suit. Both learned Judges have framed questions for decision by this Full Bench. With great respect to Beaman, J., I think the question framed by him is in too general terms. It proceeds on the assumption that there is no difference between a minor's deed and other deeds of the description mentioned in the question, and I take it he framed his question for decision in this form on the argument by way of the analogy of the principles governing adoption cases, which he considered applicable and which he applied to the facts of the present case. With great respect I am not prepared to adopt that line of reasoning, and I, therefore, personally must decline to answer the question in the wide terms in which it is framed.

The questions framed by Marten, J., appear to me to cover more appropriately the point for determination and I, therefore, confine myself to a discussion of the precise point raised by them. The question in short is: Whether Article 91 of the Indian Limitation Act, IX of 1908, applies to the plaintiff's suit?

Now, I may preface my remarks with the general view which I take of the scope of Article 91. In my opinion, it applies to suits the main object of which is to cancel or set aside an instrument not otherwise provided for by the Act. If there be any other substantial relief prayed for and the cancellation of the instrument be not actually necessary or merely auxiliary to the granting of such relief, Article 91 does not apply. It would be otherwise if the prayer for possession in a suit be merely consequential.

The further question, therefore, arises whether the plaintiff can escape the application of Article 91 by filing his suit for possession in this case.

The determination of this question may be considered from the point of view of all deeds or instruments which, like a minor's deed, are void at their inception, or it may be considered from the point of view of the peculiar position of a minor in the eye of the law, i. e., by a consideration of arguments applicable to a minor's deed in particular. The adoption of this latter method is another reason for declining to answer the question in the form propounded by Beaman, J.

Now, as to the sale-deed in this case, regarded in common with other instruments which are declared by law to be void at their inception, I am entirely in accord with the judgment of my Lord as to the distinction pointed out by him between such instruments and adoptions and as to the result arrived at by him that Article 91 does not apply to such void instruments. I think the point is really concluded by authority: see the decisions of the Privy Council in Bijoy Gopal Mukerji v. Krishna Mahishi Debi (15) and Petherpermal Chetty v. Muniandy Servai (1).

I respectfully deprecate the application to other instruments of arguments based on the analogy of the principles in decided cases in adoptions. Analogy, like parity of reasoning may be a useful servant to invoke in the determination of complex questions of law but must be handled cautiously, and where legal problems can be solved by the application of straightforward principles of law, I fail to see any place for the application of any arguments based on analogy.

But a minor's deed stands on a particular footing by itself. It has been decided by the highest tribunal that a minor's contract is null and void "ab initio": Mohori Bibee v. Dharmodas Ghose (6). The law protects minors and the disability of infancy goes no further than is necessary for the protection of the infant: Burnaby v. Equitable Reversionary Interest Society (18) per Pearson, J. at p. 424.

Unlike the law in England which, in certain cases, gives a binding effect after majority to a contract entered into by an infant during infancy, the law here declares the minor's contract void and incapable of ratification.

That being so, it can scarcely have been intended to impose an obligation on the minor, after attaining majority, to set aside a transaction entered into during minority and which it has expressly declared to be void and incapable of ratification. If that were its intention, the attitude of the law would be inconsistent and it would be inflicting an obligation upon the minor in consequence of an attempted contractual obligation entered into by him during minority. I think this is a sufficient answer to the defendant on this point.

Section 39 of the Specific Relief Act is permissive, not obligatory. There is, therefore, no obligation on the minor to sue under that section and if he does not need to sue under that section, it cannot be said by not suing he loses the right which he in common with every other person possesses to the period of limitation for a suit for land.

I, therefore, think that the answer to the first question asked by Marten, J., should be in the negative.

In the second question propounded by Marten, J., another consideration is introduced, viz., the legal effect of the mortgage of 30th August 1901 executed by the minor's guardian. The determination of that question depends on whether the present suit can be treated as a suit by the plaintiff for redemption of the mortgage. The lower Courts have so treated it and the referring Bench apparently inclined to the same view. Apparently the plaintiff does not object to this and the mortgage must, therefore, be taken as established and binding on him. This question does not, therefore, to my mind arise for decision by us.

Appeal dismissed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. VIII, r. 5, scope of—Minor, suit against—Omission to deny allegation of fact in plaint, effect of—Issues, framing of—Duty of Court.

The scope of Order VIII, rule 5, is only this that the omission to deny an allegation of fact in the plaint is not to be taken as an admission in the case of minor defendants, and the rule has nothing to do with the conduct of the suit afterwards. For instance, if at the framing of issues or at the trial the person representing a minor defendant admits certain allegations of fact, it cannot be said that rule 5 in any way affects such admission. What the Legislature apparently contemplated by rule 5 was that if, for instance, the guardian of a minor defendant allowed a case to proceed ex parte, then the plaintiff must prove those facts alleged in the plaint which were not expressly denied in the written statement filed on behalf of the minor defendant. [p. 590, cols. 1 & 2.]

Courts are not bound to raise issues on questions of fact of their own motion where parties do not ask for them. The omission to raise such issues implies an abandonment of such questions by the party interested. Where, however, the question is one purely of law, such as limitation or jurisdiction, it is incumbent on the Court to frame proper issues on such question. [p. 590, col. 2.]

NAGAPPA v. SIDBALINGAPPA.

This second appeal coming on for hearing on the 16th and 17th August 1917, upon perusing the grounds of appeal, the judgments and decrees of the lower Appellate Court and the Court of first instance, and the material papers in the suit and upon hearing the arguments of Mr. L. Venkataraghava Aiyar for the Appellants and of Mr. S. Desikachari for the 1st Respondent, and the other respondents not appearing in person or by Pleader, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—The suit was instituted by the 1st respondent in this appeal in order to recover a certain sum of money under a mortgage deed against the appellants, who are minors and who were represented in the suit by their guardian. The first question argued before us is that there was no proof as to the proper execution of the mortgage deed and its attestation according to law. But the defendants appeared by a Pleader throughout the proceedings, the written statement did not raise any question as to the execution of the mortgage, there was no issue framed with reference to this point, and so far as we can gather from the record, no objection on that score was taken at the time of the trial. The learned Pleader for the appellants contends that, inasmuch as Order VIII, rule 5 of the Civil Procedure Code, says: "Every allegation of fact in the plaint, if not denied specifically or by necessary implication, or stated to be not admitted in the pleading of the defendant, shall be taken to be admitted except as against a person under disability," it made it incumbent upon the Court to require proof of the execution of the mortgage before there could be any decree given against the minors. But the scope of Order VIII, rule 5, is only this, that the omission to deny an allegation of fact in the plaint is not to be taken as an admission in the case of minor defendants, and the rule has nothing to do with the conduct of the suit afterwards. For instance, if at the framing of issues or at the trial the person representing a minor defendant admits certain allegations of fact, it cannot be said that rule 5 in any way affects such admission. What the Legislature apparently contemplated by rule 5 was that if, for instance, the guardian of a minor defendant allowed a case to proceed ex parte, then the plaintiff must prove those facts alleged in the plaint which were not expressly denied in the written statement filed on behalf of the minor defendant. In the case of a defendant who is a major, an ex parte decree could be based not only on facts expressly admitted in the written statement but also on those allegations of fact in the plaint which are not denied in the written statement. Here what happened was, the Pleader appearing for the defendant stated that he did not want to adduce oral evidence in the case; so also did the Pleader for the plaintiff. Then certain documents relevant to the issues raised were filed and apparently no objection was taken as to their admissibility and they were marked as Exhibits, we may take it, by consent. The issues that were raised relate to questions of limitation and res judicata and those were the points apparently argued at the trial. We think that we should be perfectly justified in this case in saying that any question as to the execution of the document was waived at the time of the framing of issues and the trial of the suit.

Our attention has been drawn to certain rulings, notably to one of the Bombay High Court reported as Ganoo v. Shri Dev Sidheswar (1), where Mr. Justice Fulton at page 362 lays down that it is the duty of the Court under the Civil Procedure Code to see that proper issues necessary for the decision of the case are framed. But there the question was as to whether the notice served by the landlord on the tenant in a suit for ejectment was a proper one, and as proper notice was a part of the cause of action it was held to be the duty of the Court to see whether in the plaint the cause of action was properly stated and that it was proved at the trial. The proposition, however, as to the duty of the Court to raise proper issues is laid down in broad terms. But we do not think that it was intended to lay down that upon questions of fact it is the duty of the Court, even though the party in whose interest it is to raise the necessary issue does not choose to do so, to frame such issues of its own motion. Any general proposition of that character would, in our opinion, be subversive of proper conduct of cases and we are unable to assume that the learned Judges of the Bombay High Court intended to lay down any such rule. On the other hand, we agree with the ruling of this Court reported as Ponnusami Pillai v. Pasupathi Mudaliar (2), where it is laid down that an omission to raise an issue on a question of fact implies an abandonment of that question by the party interested. No doubt, where the question is one purely of law, such as limitation or jurisdiction, it is incumbent on the Court to frame proper issues on such questions, but it would not be safe to extend any such rule to issues of fact. We, therefore, overrule this objection raised by the appellants' Pleader.

The next contention in the appeal relates to the admissibility of Exhibit D which is a deposition of the present guardian of the appellants in a former suit. The defendants' Pleader apparently consented to Exhibit D being admitted in evidence and the statement contained therein which amounts to an admission saving limitation that could have been proved if the guardian had been called. It was open to the Pleader for the defendants to dispense with any such proof. We, therefore, do not think that there is any force in this objection either.

On the next question as regards the amount of interest which has been allowed in the decree, that is, at the rate of Rs. 75 a year, it is difficult to ascertain from the records upon what material this sum was arrived at, and it would be necessary to call for a further finding on this point, allowing the parties to adduce evidence with respect thereto. But the learned Pleader for the appellants wants time to consider whether it would be desirable in the interest of his clients that a finding on this point should be called for. We, therefore, allow the case to stand over for two weeks.

This second appeal coming on for further hearing on the 3rd October 1917, upon perusing the grounds of appeal, the judgments and decrees of the lower

Appellate Court and the Court of first instance and the material papers in the suit and upon hearing the arguments of the Counsel for the appellants and of 1st respondent, and the other respondents not appearing in person or by Pleader, the Court made the following ORDER.—The lower Court will submit a finding as to how much is payable on account of interest according to the terms of the bond Exhibit A. Fresh evidence may be taken. The finding will be submitted in 8 weeks and the parties will be at liberty to file objections to the same within 10 days after notice of return of the same shall have been posted up in this Court.

In compliance with the order contained in the above judgment, the District Judge of Bellary submitted the following FINDING.—The High Court has called for a finding as to how much is payable on account of interest under the bond Exhibit A.

2. Under the mortgage bond Exhibit A one-fourth share of the grain produced on the mortgaged land was to be given by way of interest on the amount of the mortgage loan.

3. The amount of interest originally allowed is Rs. 300, at the rate of Rs. 75 per year for each of four years from 1908 to 1912.

4. The only evidence on the subject is given on the side of the plaintiff and this has all been given after the remand. It is the plaintiff's case that the lands mortgaged under Exhibit A form part of the lands since sold to him under Exhibit B. The extent sold under Exhibit B is 21.65 acres, while the extent of land mortgaged under Exhibit A is 5.16 acres (plus a small fraction), and so the yield on the mortgaged lands will be something under a fourth of the yield on the whole extent of the land sold. The calculation has to be made this way, as both plaintiff and P. W. No. 2 give the yield for the entire extent of the land sold under Exhibit B, while it is not made quite clear to what P. W. No. 3 refers; but it is not a very satisfactory way of making it, as according to the plaintiff.

DALIPA V. LABHU RAM.

iff's evidence 3 acres of the whole extent are wet and the rest dry, the lands hypothecated being well-fed. The plaintiff's evidence as P. W. No. 1 shows that two crops of grain were being raised on the whole land and that each crop would yield 24 to 20 Pallas, while he also says that he was getting 20 or 25 Pallas for his half share. This statement would make out that the produce yielded about 50 Pallas of paddy a year, and the plaintiff would be entitled to a fourth share or rather less than $\frac{1}{4}$ th of this—that is, to only about 3 Pallas. P. W. No. 2 says that the plaintiff's $\frac{1}{4}$ th share was about 6 Tooms ($=4\frac{4}{5}$ th Pallas) from each of the crops, and this is clearly with reference to the full extent of land sold, and so according to this witness plaintiff's fourth share on the mortgaged lands would be hardly $2\frac{1}{2}$ Pallas. P. W. No. 3 says that plaintiff was getting 6 or 7 Tooms for each of two crops per year from the hypotheca, and by the hypotheca I take it that he means the whole extent of lands sold and not merely the lands mortgaged, as otherwise his reckoning would be very much at variance with what is spoken to by P. Ws. Nos. 1 and 2. I would hold on this evidence that plaintiff for his fourth share of the mortgaged property is only entitled to $2\frac{1}{2}$ Pallas of grain per year.

5. As to the value of this grain, plaintiff says now that it is worth Rs. 6 or Rs. 6.8.0 a Palla; while P. W. No. 2 says that it fetches Rs. 5 or Rs. 5.8.0 a Toom, which comes to much the same thing. In a deposition (Exhibit D) in a previous suit, however, when speaking, as I understand, of the year 1907, he has said that the price per Palla was at that time Rs. 3.8.0. He has not been cross-examined as to this statement, and prices no doubt vary and tend to go up, but I do not think that they can have varied so much as to have nearly doubled since the date of Exhibit D. On the other hand, it has to be remembered that the defendants (appellants) have set up no counter-evidence to that put forward by the plaintiff. On the whole I think that it may be taken that the price per Palla for the four years has been on an average Rs. 5, and at this rate I find that the plaintiff is entitled to interest of Rs. $12\frac{1}{2}$ a year, representing $2\frac{1}{2}$ Pallas per year at Rs. 5 per Palla. He is, therefore, entitled to Rs. 50 in all for the four years.

This second appeal coming on for final hearing after the return of the finding of the lower Appellate Court upon the issue referred by this Court for trial, the Court delivered the following JUDGMENT.—The decree will be varied by allowing interest at Rs. 12-8-0 per annum on Rs. 200 from March 1908 till the time fixed for payment. Time for redemption will be extended to 18th August. In other respects the decree will be confirmed. There will be proportionate costs.

RESPONDENT.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 10, Sch. I, Arts. 60, 145, applicability of—Suit to recover money deposited with defendant—Limitation applicable.

Where money is sent by the plaintiff to the defendant to keep, on the understanding that it is to be returned when demanded, a suit to recover the money is governed by Article 60 of Schedule I of the Limitation Act. Section 10 of the Limitation Act has no application to such a suit [p. 593, col. 2.]

Article 145 of Schedule I of the Limitation Act does not apply to a deposit of money, except in the case of coins which are ear-marked and where it is the intention of the parties that the identical shall be returned to the depositor. [p. 593, col. 2.]

Second appeal from the order of the District Judge, Jullundur, dated the 20th August 1917, reversing that of the Munsif, 1st Class, Jullundur, dated the 20th February 1917, dismissing the claim and remanding the case for re decision.

DALIPA v. LABHU RAM.

Lala Jagan Nath, for the Appellant.

Lala Faqir Chand, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—According to the allegations in the plaint, plaintiff, Labhu Ram, from time to time in 1907, 1908 and 1909, sent from America to his father-in-law, Bhupa, sums of money aggregating to a total of 226 dollars or Rs. 694-15 0 with the request that the money should be kept for plaintiff by way of deposit (amanat) until required by him. It is alleged that plaintiff returned from America about six years or so before suit and shortly after his return demanded the money from Bhupa. Bhupa is said to have died a year or two before suit and in 1916 plaintiff preferred the present claim against Dalipa, defendant, as the adopted son of Bhupa, for recovery of the said amount of Rs. 694-15 0. As a preliminary objection defendant urged that the claim was time-barred. The Munsif was of opinion that Article 60 of the Indian Limitation Act applied to the case and that the suit was, therefore, barred by time, having been instituted more than 3 years from the date of demand. The District Judge on appeal held that section 10 of the Act was not applicable and that the suit was not barred and remanded the case under Order XLI, rule 23, for disposal on the merits. Defendant has preferred a further appeal to this Court and I have heard Mr. Jagan Nath on his behalf and Mr. Faqir Chand on behalf of the respondent.

It appears to me that the decision of the Division Bench reported as H. H. Raja of Faridkote v. Sardar Gurdial Singh (1) is in point upon the question of law involved and that upon its authority I must hold that section 10 of the Indian Limitation Act has no application to the present suit. In that case the Division Bench expressly dissented from the proposition that the words in section 10, "in trust for a specific purpose," cover cases where money is held for the benefit of the creator of a so-called trust. "The effect of such construction (the learned Judges observe) would be that any person who entrusted money to another for his own uses could, after the lapse of any time, bring a money suit against him or his representative."

"This would, in our opinion, be opposed to the principles on which the law of limitation is based. It would render a large number of the Articles of Schedule II of the Limitation Act meaningless (e.g., Articles 60, 62, 89, 90, 98, 100, 105, 133, 134, 145) as under the section so construed suits under these Articles would not be barred by any length of time."

This authority, though opposed to the rulings of the Bombay High Court cited by the District Judge, has the support of many decisions of the other High Courts and is of course binding upon me as a single Bench. Mr. Faqir Chand argued that in any event Article 145 of the Limitation Act was applicable to the present claim and cited in support of his argument Gangahari Chakrabarti v. Nabin Chandra Banikya (2) and Lala Gobind Prasad v. Chairman of Patna Municipality (3). With every respect, I cannot agree that this Article can be applied to a deposit of money, except in the case of coins which are earmarked and where it is the intention of the parties that the identical coins shall be returned to the depositor, and I prefer to follow the decision of Wallis, J., in Balakrishnudu v. Narayanasawmy Chetty (4).

In my opinion Article 60 of the Limitation Act (which is not one of the Articles included in the Schedule to the Punjab Loans Limitation Act of 1904) covers the facts of the present case. The money was sent by plaintiff and accepted by Bhupa by way of deposit and was repayable on demand. According to the plaint it was on these terms and conditions that the money was sent and as Bhupa accepted the money on those terms and conditions, he must be taken to have impliedly agreed to keep it in deposit and to repay it when required to do so. It follows that the present claim is time barred and the suit must be dismissed.

I accordingly accept the appeal and setting aside the order of the District Judge, I dismiss the suit, but under the circumstances of the case I leave the parties to bear their own costs throughout.

Appeal accepted.

—“Tank-beds,” meaning of.

In using the expression “tank-beds” in section 3 (16) of Madras Act I of 1908 the Legislature was alluding to such class of tank-beds as are cultivable, i.e., as are capable of being cultivated when the tank has become dry or when there is no water in the tank in certain years.

Where tank-beds are capable of being cultivated or used in any such manner, the rights of the landholders over them are not affected by the enactment of section 20 of the Act.

Appeal against the order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Kistna at Ellore, in Miscellaneous Appeal No. 61 of 1915, preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Tanuku, in Original Suit No. 990 of 1912.

Mr. Narayanamurthi, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—The Subordinate Judge in his judgment says: “The land involved in this appeal is admittedly cultivable tank-bed land and even at present admittedly the land is liable to submersion.” The question is whether the land is a ryoti land within the meaning of section 3 (16) of the Estates Land Act, 1908. That clause says: “Ryoti land means cultivable land in an estate other than private land but does not include (a) tank-beds; (b) threshing floors, cattle-stands, village-sites, etc., etc.” So far as tank-beds are concerned, what the Legislature was alluding to was such class of tank-beds as are cultivable, that is to say, as are capable of being cultivated when the tank has become dry or when there is no water in the tank in certain years. Mr. Narayanamurthi for the appellants contends that what the Legislature meant was the bed of a tank which is full of water. It is difficult, however, to assume that the Legislature was dealing with land that could not be cultivated at all.

Section 20 of the Act was also referred to by the learned Pleader. That section lays down: “Threshing floors, cattle-stands, village sites and other lands situated in any estate which are set apart for the common use of the villagers shall not be assigned or used for any other purpose without the written order of the District Collector,” but with reference to tank-beds the section says: “Nothing in this section shall apply to tank-beds in any estate or affect the rights of the landholders over them.” That seems to be a quite clear provision that so far as tank beds are capable of being cultivated or used in any such manner, the rights of the land-holders over them are not affected by the enactment of section 20.

Then Mr. Narayanamurthi seemed to argue that since this class of land does not come within the definition of “private land” we must take it as ryoti land, but there is no warrant or authority for that proposition. In fact, the definition of “ryoti land” contemplates the existence of non-ryoti lands which are not private lands. If the land in suit is not ryoti the defendant is liable to be ejected, unless he could make out that all lands which are not private lands are to be treated on this same footing as ryoti lands. Such a presumption as we have said is clearly negatived by the wording of clause 16, section 3. We, therefore, hold that the decision of the Subordinate Judge is right, and the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Revenue Courts—Suit for possession—Pleadings—Examination of parties by Court—Defendants claiming occupancy rights.

In an ejectment suit the plaintiffs asserted in the plaint that the defendants were mere trespassers and the defendants in their written statement contended that the plaintiffs had no rights whatsoever in the land, but on examination by Court the plaintiffs urged that the defendants were their tenants-at-will and the defendants pleaded that they were occupancy tenants of the settlers of the village:

Held, that under the proviso added by Punjab Act III of 1912 to section 77 of the Punjab Tenancy Act the plaint must be returned for presentation to the Revenue Court.

Petition for revision of the order of the District Judge, Amritsar, dated the 14th May 1917, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge, 1st Class, Amritsar, dated the 26th January 1917, returning the plaint for presentation to the Collector.

Khwaja Zia-ud-Din, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Nand Lal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The order in this case will dispose also of the petitions for revision Nos. 709, 710 and 711 of 1917. The Courts below have held that they have no jurisdiction under section 77 (3) of the Punjab Tenancy Act to entertain defendants' plea that they have occupancy rights in the land in dispute and have consequently returned the plaint to the plaintiff to be presented to the competent Revenue Court. The facts are fully stated in the judgment of the District Judge and it is unnecessary for me to repeat them. In the plaint and in the written statement filed by the defendants, no allegation is made that the defendants are the tenants of the plaintiffs, on the contrary the plaintiffs in their plaint assert that the defendants are mere trespassers and the defendants in their written statement contend that plaintiffs have no right whatsoever in the land. In the circumstances, I should have been prepared to hold that section 77 of the Punjab Tenancy Act was inapplicable to the case, inasmuch as this could not, upon the written pleadings, be regarded as a suit between a landlord and a tenant. It appears, however, that plaintiffs' next friend and the defendants were examined by the Court upon their pleadings and that plaintiffs then urged that the defendants were their tenants-at-will, and the defendants pleaded that they were the occupancy tenants of Muhammad Bakhsh and the other settlers of the village.

It is clear, therefore, that the plaintiffs, at all events, have not abandoned the position that the defendants are their tenants. It is urged on behalf of the plaintiffs that the Revenue Courts have already found in the previous case between the parties that the relationship of landlord and tenant does not exist between the parties and that it is consequently futile to refer the case again to the Revenue Courts. On the other hand, it is impossible for the Civil Courts in a case of this kind to ignore the plea put forward by the defendants, and the only course open to them is to act under the proviso which was appended to section 77 of the Punjab Tenancy Act by the Punjab Act III of 1912. The whole case will thus be triable by the Revenue Courts, and it will be for them to decide how they ought to deal with the defendants' plea regarding the acquisition of occupancy rights. In my opinion, there is no ground for interference in any of these cases, and I accordingly reject these petitions with costs.

Petition rejected.

JUDGMENT.

BAKEWELL, J.—The question argued before us is, whether the plaintiff is debarred from bringing his suit by reason of the omission of some of the co-owners of the property in his previous suit for redemption in contravention of the provisions of Order XXXIV, rule 1.

The plaint states expressly that the previous suit was against the 1st defendant in his personal capacity and this also appears from the order dismissing the 4th defendant from that suit; there is, accordingly, no question of the members of the 1st defendant's Tarwad other than the 4th defendant being bound by the previous decree.

The plaint does not allege that the plaintiff was ignorant of the claims of those persons to the Kanom right, and I think that there was sufficient evidence to support the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge that he had notice of that claim when he brought the previous suit.

It is obvious that if a mortgagor were at liberty to bring separate suits for redemption against several co-mortgagees under the same mortgage, in which separate accounts would have to be taken, there would be an unnecessary multiplicity of proceedings and great confusion might arise: see Nilakant Banerji v. Suresh Chandra Mullick (1), and such a course is in contravention of Order II, rule 2.

The plaintiff's claim is against all the co-owners that they shall jointly deliver up possession of the mortgaged property and is based on the Kanom deed, and I think that this constitutes "the whole of the claim" which he was entitled to make in the previous suit within the meaning of Order II, rule 2, and that this rule prohibits another suit against the other co-owners.

For these reasons I would dismiss this appeal with costs.

PHILLIPS, J.—The finding of the Subordinate Judge must be accepted that plaintiff had knowledge of the fact that the 1st defendant's Tarwad had a Kanom right in the property in respect of which 1st defendant the Karnavan executed the Marupat, Exhibit B. The case, however, appears to be somewhat similar to the case of Govinda v. Mana Vikraman (2). It is contended that, in that case, the first suit was for rent while the second suit was on the mortgage, but the second suit also included a claim for the rent decreed in the first suit, and it was held that the claim was neither res judicata nor barred under section 43 of the Civil Procedure Code corresponding to Order II, rule 2 of the present Code. That case is, however, distinguishable from the present case, on the ground that in the second suit the basis for the claim for rent was the mortgage, whereas in the first case the claim was based on a lease. In the present case, the second suit is based on the same cause of action as the first. In the first suit plaintiff, knowing that the Tarwad had a right in the Kanom, sued the Karnavan alone in his personal capacity, and omitted to sue in respect of his claim against the Tarwad. I, therefore, agree that the present suit is barred under Order II, rule 2.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XVII, rr. 2, 3—Dismissal for default—Procedure where both rules applicable.

MAMIDI APPAYYA v. YEDAN VENKATASWAMI.

Where a default takes place within the meaning of both rule 2 and rule 3 of Order XVII of the Civil Procedure Code and there is not enough material on the record to enable the Court to proceed to judgment, the Court should proceed under rule 2.

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Amritsar, dated the 28th April 1915, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge, 1st Class, Amritsar, dated the 19th December 1913, dismissing the suit with costs.

Dr. Nand Lal, for the Appellant.

Mr. Santanam, for Nand Singh, defendant No. 2, Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The summons of plaintiff's witnesses had been returned unserved for want of correct addresses and on the 16th November the first Court directed plaintiff to give correct addresses within three days. It is apparent that these correct addresses were not given as ordered although the exact facts are impossible to verify, the necessary papers having been destroyed. From the grounds of appeal to the District Judge which are silent on this subject and from his decision, there can be no doubt that they were not furnished as ordered. An adjournment was granted for the 19th December, on which date plaintiff and his Pleader failed to appear and the suit was dismissed under rule 3 of Order XVII. The lower Appellate Court has also held that rule 3 is applicable to the case and against this decision the plaintiff has preferred this second appeal.

It is clear to us that a default took place within the meaning of both rule 2 and rule 3 of Order XVII; and the only question for decision is under which rule the suit should have been dismissed. Although there is a conflict of authority among the High Courts whether rule 2 or 3 should be applied where there is material on the record to enable the Court to pronounce judgment, there is no such conflict where such material does not exist, as was the case in the present suit. The Calcutta High Court judgments published as Marianissa v. Ramkalpa Gorain (1), Kader Khan v. Juggeswar Prasad Singh (2) and Enatulla v. Jiban Mohan Roy (3) are sufficient authorities that, where there is no sufficient material on the record to enable the Court to proceed to judgment, rule 2 should be applied. The same appears to be the view of the only published authority of this Court, Ramrattan v. Hyat Muhammad (4). We hold, therefore, that the suit should have been dismissed under rule 2 of Order VII.

We, therefore, accept the appeal and set aside the decision of the lower Appellate Court and remand the case for trial on its merits. As, however, the plaintiff appears to have been guilty of dilatory tactics so as to defeat the claim of Nand Singh, defendant, we order that plaintiff shall pay the costs incurred by Nand Singh up to date.

Appeal accepted.

The period of ten days' limitation for applying to set aside an award prescribed under Article 158 of the Limitation Act is not applicable to proceedings under para. 12 or para. 14 of Schedule II of the Civil Procedure Code, and there is no limitation for making an application to remit an award for reconsideration of the arbitrators owing to some illegality being apparent on the face of it. The fact that when an award is presented, it bears the signature of some only of the arbitrators is an illegality on the face of the award which should lead the Court to remit it for re-consideration of the arbitrators. [p. 599, col. 1.]

Petitions, under section 115 of Act V of 1908 and section 107 of the Government of India Act, praying the High Court to revise the order, dated 24th July 1916, of the Court of the Principal District Munsif, Bezawada, in Civil Miscellaneous Petition No. 1918 of 1916, in Original Suit No. 574 of 1914, and the decree dated 4th February 1916 of the said Court in the said Original Suit No. 574 of 1914 respectively.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. T. Ramachandra Row, for the Petitioners.—The award is invalid because all the arbitrators were not present at all the meetings. It is an indispensable requisite that all the arbitrators should consult together and the award should be the outcome of their joint deliberations.

The award was signed by only two out of the three arbitrators. That is an illegality on the face of the award which should, therefore, have been remitted for re-consideration.

The lower Court was wrong in thinking that Article 158 of the Limitation Act applied and that objections should have been taken within 10 days from the submission. The Article does not apply to Schedule II, Civil Procedure Code.

Mr. V. Ramadoss, for the Respondents.—The award was signed by the majority and was valid. No objection was taken by the petitioners within 10 days of the submission, after which date the award became final.

JUDGMENT.—These civil revision petitions arise out of a suit in which there was a reference made by consent of the parties to three arbitrators and a decree was passed by the Court on the award of two of them.

The parties agreed to abide by the decision of the majority, but the petitioners seek to impugn the legality of the award which two out of the three arbitrators have signed because the arbitrators did not all meet together and deliberate upon the matter submitted to them, as appears from the 3rd arbitrator's separate award or report and from the 2nd defendant's affidavit. It is a well established principle in regard to arbitration that for the final award to be valid, it is essential that all the arbitrators should be present at all the meetings including the last, that witnesses should be examined in the presence of all, and that all should consult together as to the form that their award should take [vide Nand Ram v. Fakir Chand (1), Thammiraju v. Bapiraju (2) and Abu Hamid Zahir Ala v. Golam Sarwar (3) Also Banerji's Law of Arbitration in India, 2nd edition, page 225]

After the District Munsif had passed a decree in the terms of the award of the majority of the arbitrators, the defendants Nos. 2, 4 and 5 presented a review petition which was rejected without going into the question of the legality of the award, mainly for the reason that the review petition was put in nearly three months after the decree had been passed, while Article 158 of the Limitation Act allows only ten days' time to apply to set aside an award from the date of its submission to the Court.

The respondents support the District Munsif's order declining to review his own judgment on the ground of limitation, and further raise the same objection against the High Court's entertaining the present petition and quote Ghulam Khan v. Muhammad Hossain (4) in support of their contention.

It has, however, been held in this Court that the period of ten days' limitation for applying to set aside an award prescribed under Article 158 of the Limitation Act is not applicable to proceedings under section 12 or 14 of Schedule II of the present Civil Procedure Code and that there is no limitation of time for making applications to remit an award for re-consideration of the arbitrators owing to some objection to the legality of the award being apparent on the face of it [see Hyder Sahib v. Giria Chettiar (5)].

BALWANT SINGH v. JOTI PRASAD.

I think that the fact that the award, when presented, bore the signatures of only two out of the three arbitrators was an illegality on the face of the award [see Ramesh Chandra Dhur v. Karunamoyi Dutt (6)] and that this omission should have attracted the attention of the Court and should have led to consideration whether the award should not be remitted under section 14, clause (c), of Schedule II of the Civil Procedure Code for re-consideration by the arbitrators.

The Pleader for defendants Nos. 2, 4 and 5 filed an affidavit in which he explained that he did not file objections to the award of the two arbitrators, as he thought that the award of the third arbitrator, which was favourable to his clients, was the only award on the record. The District Munsif observes that the latter cannot strictly be termed an award and that the Pleader had no good reason for being misled and was negligent. He should have lost no time in filing objections and he should have been present at the hearing on February 3rd, 1916, when he would have known about the award of the two arbitrators dated 9th January and filed on January 12th. He has not scrupled to suggest that this award was subsequently written and ante-dated, although the Court stamp shows it to have been filed in Court on the 12th. But the mention in the Court's B diary of the receipt of only one award without an entry being made when the 3rd arbitrator's report was received on the 17th has given occasion for the Pleader to say that he only knew of one award and he has thus taken advantage of the Court's omission to mention both awards. It would, in my opinion, have been unfair to the defendants to put them on terms owing to their Pleader's neglect to look into the award and to give them another chance of objecting to the award which was unfavourable to them, on condition of their paying the plaintiff's costs for the hearing on February 3rd and 4th.

Accordingly I set aside the order and decree of the lower Court and direct that, if the petitioners pay into Court such costs as the District Munsif may allow to the plaintiff for the hearings of February 3rd and 4th and if within ten days of the receipt of this order in that Court the defendants file objections to the award filed on January 12th, the District Munsif will consider those objections and if he finds them to be true and substantial objections to the legality of the award, will remit the award for re-consideration of the same three arbitrators. In case the arbitrators refuse to consider it, it will then be time for the lower Court to determine whether it will set aside the award under section 15 of Schedule II of the Civil Procedure Code and decide the case itself.

Costs of Civil Revision Petition No. 1394 of 1916 will be costs in the cause and will abide and follow the result.

These civil revision petitions having been posted to be spoken to this day, the Court delivered the following further JUDGMENT. In the event of the petitioner^s failing to file objections and to deposit the plaintiff's costs, as above mentioned, within the time allowed, these petitions will stand dismissed with costs of Civil Revision Petition No. 1394 of 1916 as from that date.

Hindu Law—Adoption by widow—Widow allowed to remain in possession of estate—Adopted son, position of—Transfer of interest, validity of—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 6 (a).

Where on an adoption being made by a Hindu widow it is agreed between the widow and the natural father of the adopted son, acting on the latter's behalf, that the widow should remain in possession of her husband's estate till her death, a vested right in the estate is created in favour of the adopted son and merely his right of enjoyment and possession is postponed till after the death of the widow. A transfer of such vested right by the adopted son during the widow's lifetime is unaffected by section 6 (a) of the Transfer of Property Act. [p. 605, col. 1.]

Execution first appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Saharanpur.

Mr. Nehal Chand, for the Appellant.

Messrs. B. E. O'Connor and Lakshmi Narain, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of an execution proceeding under two decrees, dated (1) the 22nd of June 1917 and (2) the 15th of December 1917, both of which were passed in one and the same suit No. 63 of 1915, (1) Rai Bahadur Lala Joti Prasad, (2) Lala Raghunath Singh and (3) Lala Beni Prasad, plaintiffs versus (1) Choudhri Balwant Singh, (2) Rana Indar Singh defendants. The application for execution was made on the 17th of December 1917, and the prayer made was that possession over Talluqa Naogawn, entered in the list annexed to the application, be delivered to the decree-holders against the judgment-debtors Nos. 1 and 2. A further prayer was that the Collector of Saharanpur, who was in possession of the property as a Receiver, be asked by a Rubkar to deliver possession of the said property to the decree-holders and to hand over to them such sums of money as may be with him in deposit, on account of the profits of the said property. Objections were raised by Balwant Singh, judgment-debtor, to the execution of the decree. Those objections have been disallowed by the learned Subordinate Judge of Saharanpur by his judgment, dated the 5th of April 1918. Choudhri Balwant Singh, judgment-debtor, has appealed and in the memorandum of appeal has raised pleas embracing almost all the objections which he had raised in the Court below. In order to appreciate the pleas raised and the argument addressed to the Court on behalf of the appellant it is necessary to state shortly the previous history of the litigation.

One Raja Raghubir Singh was the owner of a considerable property known as the Landhaura Estate. He died in the year 1868, leaving Rani Dharamkuar, who was pregnant at the time, as his widow. It is an admitted fact that before his death he permitted and authorized his widow to adopt a son for him, in case the child born of the widow died in its infancy. He further gave permission to adopt another son in case the one adopted was to die in his childhood, in her life time.

A child was born after the death of Raghubir Singh, but he having died, Rani Dharamkuar adopted one Indar Singh, in 1877. The latter having died, she adopted one Rambadan Singh in 1883, who also having died in 1885, one Bharat Singh was selected in 1893 for adoption, but before his adoption had taken place, he died in 1896. Eventually, Choudhri Balwant Singh, the appellant in this appeal, was adopted on the 13th of January 1899 and a deed of adoption was executed on that date and was formally registered. The material portions of the said deed having a bearing upon the questions in dispute in this appeal are these:—

In paragraph 3, it is stated that on the death of the Raja, Rani Dharamkuar entered into proprietary possession of all kinds of property (Har qism matrukah ki malik o mustahiqq o qabiz hui) and that she was in possession of all the property belonging to the Reyasat of the said Raja Sahab at the time of the execution of the document. In paragraph 4, it is stated that being the owner of a considerable property, the Raja in his lifetime, owing to religious needs and other requirements, was anxious to have a son born who may fulfil the religious needs and who may be the owner of the Reyasat. In paragraph 5, it is stated that as the lady, at the time of his last illness, was pregnant, he did not adopt a son himself in his lifetime. In paragraph 6, it is stated that during his last illness, having suddenly become hopeless of his life, he, by way of precaution, directed the lady, "That in case a daughter is born or if a boy having born dies, I enjoin upon you and order you that you should adopt a boy for me, so that he may keep our name alive and after your death may be the absolute owner and possessor of my entire estate and if perchance, the son adopted, according to this permission, dies in your lifetime then you will continue to have the power of urther adoption" In paragraph 10, it is stated that she in June 1898 selected Choudhri Balwant Singh, son of Choudhri Ramnawaz, for the purpose of adoption and from that date the said Balwant Singh came under her protection and was brought up by her. In paragraph 11, it is stated that the executant adopted Choudhri Balwant Singh on the 13th of January 1899. In paragraph 12, it is stated that "The said Balwant Singh will be considered the adopted son of Raja Raghubir Singh and of the executant and he will perform all the religious duties towards the said Raja Sahab and the executant after the death of the executant, and after her death he will be the absolute owner of the property of the Reyasat Landhaura." The most important provision is contained in paragraph 13, which runs thus:

"That during her lifetime the executant will continue to have all the rights over all the properties of the Reyasat of Landhaura left by Raja Raghubir Singh which a Hindu widow has over her husband's estate according to the Hindu Law and that she will continue to be the owner and in possession as before, that the said Balwant Singh, my adopted son, will have no right to interfere with my rights of ownership and with the management and supervision of the Reyasat during my life. But the said adopted boy will be maintained according to his position and status and he will be properly brought up and that she has adopted Balwant Singh on these conditions and Choudhri Ramnawaz, the father of Balwant Singh, has given him in adoption on these very conditions and this was in accordance with the wish and permission of the Raja Sahab....." On the same date Choudhri Ramnawaz Singh executed an igrarnama in which, after mentioning that he had willingly given his son Choudhri Balwant Singh, aged 16 years, in adoption, to Rani Dharamkuar, he stated "that from this date the son ceases to have any connection with his natural family and that the said son will, from to-day, acquire all the rights which an adopted son has under the law in all the property left (matrukah) by Raja Raghubir Singh deceased and which are in the possession of the Rani Saheba. But it has been agreed between me and Rani Saheba that according to the wish and permission of Raja Raghubir Singh the Rani Saheba will continue to be malik aur kabiz (owner and in possession) of the entire Reyasat during her life....."

Disputes having arisen between Choudhri Balwant Singh and his adoptive mother, Rani Dharamkuar, the latter instituted a suit against him in 1905 with the object of getting rid of him. It is unnecessary to give the details of that litigation; it is enough to state that the suit was dismissed and Choudhri Balwant Singh was successful. His position as the adopted son of Raja Raghubir Singh was made secure.

In 1911 Choudhri Balwant Singh filed a suit No. 1 of 1911 against Rani Dharamkuar for possession of the properties of the Reyasat Landhaura, but the defendant having died during the course of the suit, in the month of November 1912, the further prosecution of the suit became unnecessary.

During the course of the litigation with Rani Dharamkuar, Balwant Singh had to mortgage and sell portions of the property of the Reyasat in order to procure funds to carry on the fight with his adoptive mother. The property, the subject-matter of the present dispute, viz., Mauza Ahmadpur Nao-gawn, was sold to the present respondents, (1) Lala Joti Prasad, (2) Lala Raghunath Singh and (3) Lala Beni Prasad, sons of Lala Bansi Lal, under a sale deed, dated the 3rd of March 1911.

After selling the property in dispute to the respondents, Balwant Singh leased the property by a deed of lease, dated the 2nd of August 1913, to Rana Dharam Singh, the father of Indar Singh, the judgment-debtor No. 2.

In 1914, Choudhri Balwant Singh filed a suit No. 61 of 1914 against the present decree-holders, in which he assailed the sale-deed, dated the 3rd of March 1911, in favour of the respondents on the ground of fraud, want of consideration, etc., and prayed that it be set aside. That suit was referred to arbitration on the 17th of September 1914, and when the award was filed in Court certain objections were taken to its validity but eventually a decree was passed on the award on the 3rd of February 1915 against Balwant Singh, whose suit was dismissed on that date. In pursuance of the decree passed on the award, the present respondents decree holders deposited Rs. 65,000 in Court to be paid to Balwant Singh. Against this decree, Choudhri Balwant Singh filed an appeal in the High Court which was registered as First Appeal No. 121 of 1915. In the meantime the present respondents filed a suit No. 63 of 1915 in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Saharanpur against Choudhri Balwant Singh in which they impleaded Rana Dharam Singh, the lessee of the property in dispute, under the lease, dated the 2nd of August 1913. Subsequently, the name of Rana Indar Singh, his minor son, was added to the array of defendants, under the guardianship of Musammât Sukhdevi, the grandmother of Rana Indar Singh.

The reliefs claimed in the plaint were (a) that the lease, dated the 2nd of August 1913, be declared invalid and possession be delivered to the plaintiffs as against the defendants Nos. 1 and 2, (b) that mesne profits be awarded against the defendants, (c) that a sum of money by way of damages for the price of trees cut down by the defendants be awarded against them.

Thus in addition to First Appeal No. 121 of 1915, Choudhri Balwant Singh appellant versus Rai Bahadur Lala Joti Prasad and others, two other matters between the parties were pending in the High Court, viz., First Appeal No. 123 of 1915, Civil Revision No. 2 of 1917, and as mentioned above the Original Suit No. 63 of 1915, Rai Bahadur Joti Prasad and others plaintiffs versus Choudhri Balwant Singh and Rana Indar Singh defendants, was pending in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Saharanpur. The respondents in this case and Choudhri Balwant Singh filed a compromise in the High Court by which they settled all their disputes. Two paragraphs of this compromise, which have a material bearing upon the present proceedings were these:—

"(1) That if Balwant Singh pay, on or before 19th September 1917, in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Saharanpur for payment to Rai Joti Prasad and others aforesaid the following sums viz.,

(a) Rs. 2,50,000 with simple interest thereon at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum from 18th January 1915 up to the date of payment.

(b) Rs. 65,000 with simple interest thereon at 6 per cent. per annum from 17th March 1915 up to the date of payment.

(c) The amount due under decree No. 51 of 1915 with interest as provided in the said decree up to the date of payment, the said Rai Bahadur Lala Joti Prasad, Lala Raghunath Singh and Lala Beni Prasad shall and do hereby abandon all claim and interest under the sale of March 1911 and their suit for possession of the Taluqa Naogawn shall stand dismissed, parties bearing their own costs throughout the litigation, and the Collector of Saharanpur as the Receiver of the property shall deliver Naogawn to Choudhri Balwant Singh together with all profits in his hands.

(2) That if the said Choudhri Balwant Singh does not pay into Court the amount aforesaid in terms of the preceding clause on or before the 19th of September 1917, his suit and First Appeal No. 121 of 1915, First Appeal from Order No. 123 and Civil Revision No. 2 of 1917 shall stand dismissed, both parties paying their own costs, and the Original Suit No. 63 of 1915 shall stand decreed with costs and the Collector of Saharanpur, who is in possession of Naogawn as Receiver appointed by the Court, shall deliver possession of the said Taluqa together with profits thereof in his hands to Rai Bahadur Lala Joti Prasad and others plaintiffs in that case." It was further stated in the compromise that "This compromise is filed in the three cases pending in this Hon'ble Court and the parties will file a copy of this compromise in Suit No. 63 of 1915 within one week from this date, and apply to the said Court to decree the claim in accordance therewith." It appears that a copy of this compromise was filed in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Saharanpur in which the Suit No. 63 of 1915 was pending and the learned Subordinate Judge was requested to pass a decree in the suit in accordance with the terms of the compromise. No objection was raised on behalf of Balwant Singh but Rana Indar Singh objected that, as he was not a party to the compromise, a decree could not be passed as against him on the compromise and that as separate decrees could not be passed against the two defendants no decree should be passed even against Balwant Singh. The learned Subordinate Judge, however, overruled the objections of Indar Singh and passed a decree against Balwant Singh on the basis of the compromise on the 22nd of June 1917, ordering that a copy of the above-mentioned compromise be attached to the decree.

Subsequently a compromise was also effected between the plaintiffs Rai Bahadur Lala Joti Prasad, etc., and Rana Indar Singh, under the guardianship of Rani Sukhdevi, his grandmother, and under the terms of the compromise a decree was passed by the Additional Subordinate Judge of Saharanpur in the suit against defendant No. 2 also on the 15th of December 1917. Choudhri Balwant Singh did not deposit the amount which he was required to do, on or before the 19th of September 1917, under the compromise. The necessary result of which was that the suit of Balwant Singh No. 61 of 1914 stood dismissed, and Suit No. 63 of 1915 of the plaintiffs against Balwant Singh and Indar Singh stood decreed. Hence this application for execution of the two decrees passed in the Suit No. 63 of 1915 was made and the Court was asked to deliver possession to the plaintiffs, decree-holders, over Taluqa Naogawn. The judgment debtor No. 1 objected to the execution of the decree on the grounds :—

(1) That at the time of the execution of the sale-deed, on the basis of which the decree under execution had been obtained the objector had merely a chance of succession after the death of Rani Dharamkuar which could not be transferred under the law and having regard to the provisions of section 6 (a) of the Transfer of Property Act, no right vested in the transferees under the sale.

(2) That the transfer being contrary to law, the compromise between the parties and the subsequent decree passed on the compromise could not validate the transfer.

(3) That the compromise ought not to have been accepted and a decree ought not to have been passed on its basis, under Order XXIII, rule 3 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

(4) That as the compromise was not filed in Court within a week, as provided by the compromise, a decree ought not to have been passed on it.

On behalf of the decree-holders it was urged that the provision of section 6 (a) of the Transfer of Property Act was not applicable to the facts of this case.

That the decree passed in the Suits Nos. 61 of 1914 and 63 of 1915 operated as res judicata.

That the judgment-debtor, in his Suit No. 61 of 1914 himself, had accepted the award inspite of an objection by the decree-holders and that he had benefited under the award by receiving Rs. 65,000 under it and that he was now estopped from objecting to the award and the compromise.

The learned Subordinate Judge of Saharanpur decided that the case of an adopted son, where the adoption was made by a widow on the condition that the adopted son would have no right during her life to the ownership or possession of the property, was distinguishable from the case of a mere Hindu reversioner who is to succeed after the death of a widow. In his opinion inspite of a condition postponing the rights of an adopted son, till after the death of the widow, the adopted son would have a vested interest in the property left by the deceased owner. In this view, apparently, he did not think it necessary to deal with the question of estoppel and res judicata raised in the pleadings. He was of opinion that the interest acquired by Balwant Singh, being of a higher character than the mere contingent reversionary interest of a collateral to succeed to property on the death of a Hindu widow, he was capable of dealing with it effectively, though the operation of the transfer made by him may be postponed till after the death of the widow. He based his judgment on the general principles of the Hindu Law and disallowed the objections raised by the judgment debtor. Towards the end of his judgment, there is an indication that he was also of opinion that the objection now raised by the judgment-debtor ought to have been raised by him at the time the compromise was filed and before a decree was passed on it. The pleas raised in the memorandum of appeal presented to this Court raise two main questions:—

(1) Whether the transfer made by Balwant Singh was ineffective as being opposed to the provisions of section 6 (a) of the Transfer of Property Act? and

(2) Whether the subsequent compromise effected in the Suits Nos. 61 of 1914 and 63 of 1915 had the effect of removing any defect existing in the sale? Only these questions were argued before us.

In order to determine the first question, we think it necessary first to examine the provisions of the deed of adoption together with those of the agreement executed by the natural father of Balwant Singh. In doing this we ought to keep in mind the general rules of the Hindu Law, as applicable to an adoption. The adopted son on his adoption leaves his father's gotra and cannot take his estate nor does he offer pindas to him. As soon as the adoption is made, he is transferred to the family of the adoptive father. He stands exactly in the same position as if he had been born to his adoptive father. He divests the estate of any person in possession of the property of the adoptive father. If a widow happens to be in possession of the estate the result of the adoption is that her limited estate at once ceases. He becomes the full owner of the property and the widow's rights are reduced to a mere claim of maintenance. Such being the law, it lies upon the judgment-debtor to establish beyond doubt that the deed of adoption contained such valid conditions as to prevent the operation of the law. He will have, in the first instance, to show that there was an intention to prevent the vesting of the right to property in the adopted son and that intention was given effect to by some legal and valid provision in the deed of adoption. On a consideration of the terms of that deed we find that there is nothing in it which would prevent the vesting of the right in the adopted son. It is provided in the deed that the son would leave the family of his natural father and would live with his adoptive mother. He would be brought up under her guardianship and would be supported and maintained according to his position and status, morlabā aur hasiyat ke muwafiq. This would show that Balwant Singh was to be treated as an adopted son and his position and status was to be maintained as such. In this view, the condition reserving to the widow the right of ownership and possession during her lifetime would simply mean that though Balwant Singh was to be the rightful owner as an adopted son, the widow was to remain in possession during her life, exercising all the powers of ownership as an ordinary Hindu widow. This construction, to a large extent, derives support from the clear wordings of the agreement executed by Ramnawaz Singh, the natural father of Balwant Singh:—

"Tarikh imroza se pīsr-i-mastur ka apne khandan se kuchh taluq nahin raha hai aur pīsr mazkur ko woh haquq jo qanunan pīsr-i-mutabanna ko hasil hote hain aī ki tarikh se kul jaidad wa matruka Raja Raghubir Singh Sahib marhum wa maqbuza junabah Rani Sahiba masufah men hasil honge, lekin yih shart mabain manmoqir aur junabah Rani Sahiba masufah hasab mansha wasiyat-o-ijazat Raja Raghubir Singh Sahib marhum qarar pai hai keh junabah Rani Sahiba masufah apni zindgi tak badastur malik aur qabiz kul reyasat rahiingi." viz., "From this date the son ceases to have any connection with his natural family and that the said son will, from to-day, acquire all the rights which an adopted son has under the law in all the property left (matrukah) by Raja Raghubir Singh deceased, and which are in the possession of Rani Sahiba. But it has been agreed between me and Rani Sahiba that according to the wish and permission of Raja Raghubir Singh, the Rani Sahiba will continue to be malik aur qabiz (owner and in possession) of the entire Reyasat during her life."

In this view of the construction of the deed of adoption it becomes unnecessary to consider the question whether it is lawful for a Hindu widow to make a conditional adoption so as to prevent the adopted son from taking possession of, and enjoying rights of ownership over, the property of the adoptive father during her life and whether such a condition creates an interest in favour of an adopted son, of the nature which is contemplated by clause (a), section 6 of the Transfer of Property Act.

It has been held in several cases that an agreement depriving an adopted son of his right to take possession of the property of the adoptive father is not prohibited by the law and such an agreement has been given effect to. See for example Kali Das v. Bijai Shankar (1) and Visalakshi Ammal v. Sivaramien (2). But we have not been referred to any case in which it has been held that the interest of an adopted son under such a conditional adoption is exactly similar to the interest of a contingent collateral Hindu reversioner. The latter kind of interest has been held to be a mere chance of an heir-apparent succeeding to an estate, and as such has been held to be non-transferable. Irrespective of the construction which we have put on the terms of the deed of adoption, we are of opinion that it has not been shown that the interest created in favour of Choudhri Balwant Singh under the conditional adoption in question was a mere possibility of succession to the Landhaura Estate after the death of Rani Dharamkuar. In our opinion both according to the interpretation of the deed of adoption and the law, a vested right was created in his favour, and merely his right of enjoyment and possession was postponed till after the death of the lady. Such being the case, we are of opinion that the transfer of Taluqa Naogawn in favour of the decree-holders under the sale-deed, dated the 3rd of March 1911, was unaffected by the provisions of section 6 (a) of the Transfer of Property Act.

We agree with the lower Court that on this finding alone the objections of the judgment-debtor were bound to fail, but we are also of opinion that the subsequent compromise and the decrees passed thereon left no room for any contention on the point. Rani Dharamkuar having died in November 1912, the property vested in Choudhri Balwant Singh. He was at the time a married man 29 years old and could deal with it as he liked. Under the compromise he entered into a new agreement, according to which the property sold was to vest in the decree-holders in the event of his failing to pay to them certain sums of money before the 19th of September 1917. The parties understood their positions fully and by a lawful agreement completed a binding contract. A decree was passed on the compromise which put an end to all disputes between the parties. It is too late now to try to go behind the compromise and the decree. It has, however, been argued on behalf of the appellant that if it was a mere expectancy that was transferred by the sale-deed in question it was open to him to impugn both the compromise and the decree when possession was claimed in execution. In support of his contention the learned Counsel for the appellant relied upon the case of Ramasami Naik v. Ramasami Chetti (3). That was a case relating to an impartible and inalienable zemindari. The nature of the interest which was transferred in that case by mortgage and the circumstances under which the consent decree had been obtained are stated at page 261* of the report in these words:—

"We now come to the most serious objection urged by the appellant. It is said that by the suit mortgage and the consent decree the 2nd to the 5th defendants purport to transfer only their chance of succeeding to the zemindari, and that such a chance or mere possibility is incapable of transfer in India by virtue of section 6 (a) of the Transfer of Property Act. As pointed out by Muttusami Ayyar, J. [Sivasubramania Naicker v. Krishnammal (4)], in the case of this zemindari the interest to which each zemindar succeeds is his separate property and consists of his right to the income of the zemindari as beneficial owner for life. This is the interest which defendants Nos. 2 to 5 have sought to transfer by the mortgage and the consent decree. At the dates of mortgage and decree they had a mere chance of succeeding to this interest dependent in the case of each on his surviving all the male members of the family older than himself so as to make him for the time being the oldest member."

At the bottom of page 262* the learned Judges who decided the case remarked:—

"It is further urged that the defendants cannot go behind the decree. If, however, the mortgage did not operate as a transfer of interests of defendants Nos. 2 to 5, neither could the consent decree in the circumstances of the present case."

Now, what were the circumstances to which the learned Judges referred? The circumstances were these:—

The only interest which the defendants Nos. 2 to 5 in that case had, was a mere chance of succeeding to a life-interest on the happening of a certain event as described at page 261* above mentioned. In that case there can be no doubt that the interest transferred was of a kind contemplated by section 6, clause (a) of the Transfer of Property Act. The mortgage was made of such interest and at the time the consent decree was passed it was still a mere chance. In the present case irrespective of the nature of interest which Choudhri Balwant Singh possessed at the time of the sale-deed, he had a full and complete interest which had come into existence before the compromise and the consent decree. If the widow had been alive at the date of the consent decree, in that case the ruling might have had a bearing on this question. No case has been cited having a direct bearing upon the facts of the present case. In our opinion it is not open to the judgment-debtor to go behind the compromise and consent decree in this case.

Over and above all that we have mentioned above there is the fact that what Choudhri Balwant Singh purported to transfer both by the deed of sale and the compromise was not a mere expectancy but the full right of ownership; even assuming that he had no vested interest at the date of sale he subsequently became the full owner and was such at the date of the compromise. He had received the sale consideration and the respondents had also paid a further sum of Rs. 65,000 and they are entitled to the estate which subsequently became vested in the minor after the death of the Rani. At the date of the sale Choudhri Balwant Singh claimed to be the full owner and was actually suing the Rani for possession and he purported to transfer the full right. We think that the decision of the Court below is right and the appeal should be and is hereby dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL REPRESENTED BY THE COLLECTOR, GUNTUR—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Grant, construction of—Water rights—Grant of land bounded by non-navigable river—Ownership of bed of river—Presumption—Burden of proof.

Where a grant is made of land which is bounded on one side by a non-navigable river, the onus of showing that the grant did not cover the bed of the river ad medium filum aque is on the grantor. The presumption may be strong or weak according to the circumstances of the particular case, and the amount of evidence required to rebut it will vary accordingly. [p. 610, col. 1.]

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Guntur, in Appeal Suit No. 187 of 1915, preferred against the decree of the Court of the Additional District Munsif, Bapatla, in Original Suit No. 10 of 1913.

This second appeal coming on for hearing on the 10th December 1917, upon perusing the grounds of appeal, the judgments and decrees of the lower Appellate Court and the Court of first instance and the material papers in the suit and upon hearing the arguments of Messrs. of the Respondent and the case having stood over for consideration till 13th December 1917, the Court (Seshagiri Aiyar and Napier, JJ.) made the following ORDER OF REFERENCE TO A FULL BENCH.

This is a suit by the trustee of a temple for a declaration that the lands belong to him and that the Secretary of State is not entitled to put up the grass thereon to auction or to interfere in any manner with the rights of the plaintiff. The plaint, as originally instituted, contained the statement that the Inam granted to the temple comprised lands on both sides of the Tungabhadra river and that consequently the entire bed of the river belonged to the temple. It has been found by the Subordinate Judge, and we see no reason for not accepting that finding, that the boundary of the Inam village is the river itself and that no lands on the other side of the river were granted to the temple. On this finding it has been argued before us that the plaint temple is entitled to half the bed of the river. The learned Government Pleader took exception to this change of case on the part of the plaintiff; but we think that in the circumstances of the case the plaintiff should not be refused relief because he put his case too high.

The point for consideration, therefore, is where a grant is made fixing one of the boundaries of the lands granted as a river, whether the grantee is entitled to half the bed of that river. The decisions of the English Courts seem to be uniform in this respect. Lord v. Commissioners for the City of Sydney (1) and Maclaren v. Attorney-General for Quebec (2) and other cases referred to in these two decisions have accepted the principle that where the lands are bounded by a river, the grantee is entitled to lands ad medium filum aque. In City of London Land Tax Commissioners v. Central London Railway (3) the House of Lords applied this principle to the case of highways. All the learned Lords who took part in the decision affirm that it is an established principle of law that the "ownership of frontages on either side of the street extended ad medium filum viæ, just as, had the division or boundary between two subjects been a stream, the ownership of the riparian proprietors would have extended ad medium filum fluminis". In Whitmores (Edenbridge) Lim. v. Stanford (4) this rule was extended to artificial channels. In this country, Balbir Singh v. Secretary of State for India in Council (5) accepts the principle of the English decisions. Powell v. Powell (6) is to the same effect. In Secretary of State v. Kadirikutti (7), the learned Judges say that the rule that riparian proprietors are entitled to the bed of the river ad medium filum is not applicable to navigable rivers. That is an indication that if it is a non-navigable river, the principle of English Law would be applied in this country. In Sundaram Ayyar v. Municipal Council of Madura (8), Justice Bashyam Aiyangar extended the doctrine to highways. The matter was recently discussed by three Judges of this Court in Secretary of State v. Janakiramayya (9). Mr Justice Oldfield seems to doubt whether the principle referred to is applicable to India. Mr. Justice Sadasiva Aiyar on the other hand apparently sees no objection to the applicability of that doctrine to India. Mr. Justice Bakewell expressed no opinion on that question. The learned Government Pleader referred us to two cases decided by the Judicial Committee as throwing some doubt upon the applicability of a similar principle to Indian conditions. In Sri Balusu Ramalakshamma v. Collector of the Godavari District (10), the decision turned upon the fact that the ownership of the bed of the river was not the question raised for decision in the Courts below. In rejecting the contention which was put forward for the first time before the Board, Lord Hobhouse made use of these observations: "The result is that their Lordships, having grave doubts whether the presumption applicable to little English rivers applies to great rivers such as the Godavari, would require to know much more about the river in question and the mode in which it has been dealt with, before deciding as to the presumption or its rebuttal." In a more recent case reported as Raja Sri-nath Roy v. Dinabandhu Sen (11), in which the question related to the right of fishery possessed by a riparian proprietor, Lord Sumner in delivering the judgment of the Judicial Committee says at page 531* after reviewing at considerable length the English and American Law on the subject: "In proposing to apply the juristic rules of a distant time or country to the conditions of a particular place at the present day, regard must be had to the physical, social and historical conditions to which that rule is to be adapted."

Having regard to the observations of the Judicial Committee and to the difference in opinion between two learned Judges of this Court, we do not think it desirable that we should finally dispose of this matter. The question is of very great importance to the Government as well as to private proprietors, and we think it desirable that the opinion of the Full Bench should be invited on the subject. We, therefore, propose the following questions for the opinion of the Full Bench:—

Whether, when Government makes a grant in India of a village which is described as bounded by a non-navigable river, the right of the grantee extends to half the bed of the river, and

Whether the onus of proving that the grant did not cover the bed of the river is on the grantee or on the grantor.

This last question has become necessary having regard to the observations of Lord Hobhouse in Sri Balusu Ramalakshamma v. Collector of the Godavari District (10), wherein he says the question of presumption or its rebuttal in a country like India would depend upon considerations different from those which obtain in England.

This appeal came on for hearing before the Full Bench on the 8th and 9th April 1918.

Mr. T. V. Venkatrama Aiyar, for the Appellant.—The English rule that a grant of land bounded by a non-navigable river gives the ownership in the bed to the grantee applies to India, in the absence of a statutory provision to the contrary. The rule which had its origin in the theory of convenience has become settled law. It is only in the case of navigable rivers that the bed vests in the Crown and does not pass to the grantee. This rule is unaffected by the rights of the Crown to regulate the distribution of water supply.

The soil of the river belongs to riparian owners ad medium filum. That is the common law of India. Reference was made to Bengal Regulation XI of 1825. The rule of construction is also the same. Mr. V. Ramesam (Government Pleader), for the Crown.—The English rule is an artificial rule of conveyancing. It should not be applied to India, especially where the grant was made long before the rule became settled. The question is one of intention and the fact that the grant was of a small strip of land in a ryotwari village has to be taken into consideration. The Crown could not be presumed to have parted with what was useful for it, river beds being valuable property which could be used for grazing. The intention of the parties has to be taken into account.

Bengal Regulation XI of 1825 affords no parallel. The rule might hold good in the case of zemindaries and large inam villages. The common law of India, which has been recognised in Madras Act III of 1905, is that the bed of a natural stream vests in Government and the onus is on the persons disputing it. The contrary theory is inconsistent with the rights of the Crown to regulate and distribute the supply of water in rivers. A distinction must be made between the rivers in Bengal which are full and the rivers in Madras where the river-beds are cultivated and yield good returns.

OPINION OF THE FULL BENCH.

In Bengal Regulation XI of 1825, the Legislature, acting, as recited in the preamble, on reports from the law officers as to the provisions of the Muhammadan and Hindu Laws and on a consideration of the decisions of the Sudder Adalat, proceeded in section 4 to make a distinction as to the ownership of Churs in navigable and non-navigable rivers, which, in the opinion of Sir M. R. Westropp, C. J., in Baban Mayacha v. Nagu Shrivacha (16) raised an inference, though not conclusive, that the beds of non-navigable rivers are generally private property. The observation of the Judicial Committee in John Doe v. East India Company (17) appears to proceed upon the same view. The law was laid down in the same way in Rajah Neelanund Sing v. Rajah Teknarain Singh (14) and by the Calcutta High Court in Hunooman Doss v. Shamchurn Bhutta (12) and Bhageeruttee Dabea v. Greesh Chunder Chowdhry (13), where the Court held that "by the common law of this country the right to the soil of the bed of a river, when flowing within the estates of different proprietors, belongs to the riparian owners, ad medium filum aquæ."

In this Presidency the decisions of the Sudder Court in Sree Rajah Ooppalapaty Jogee Jaganadheruze v. Sub-Collector of Rajahmundry (21) and of the High Court in Subbaya v. (21) S. D. A. (1838) 150.

Varlagaadu (22) were to the same effect. It is only in the case of navigable rivers that the presumption has been laid down the other way by the Judicial Committee in Eckowri Sing v. Heeralall Seal (23), Felix Lopez v. Muddun Mohun Thakoor (24) and Nogender Chunder Ghose v. Mahamed Esoff (25), while in Forbes v. Meer Mahomed Hossein (26), it appears to be assumed that in the case of non-navigable rivers the ownership of the bed is in the riparian owners. The decision of the Judicial Committee in Kali Kissen Tagore v. Jodoo Lal Mullick (27) and Khugendra Narain Chowdhry v. Matangini Debi (15) appears to proceed on the same basis. In Sri Balusu Ramalakshamma v. Collector of the Godavari District (10), where the appellant before them sought to base her title to the Lanka in question on the presumption arising from the fact that she was the owner of both banks of the river, their Lordships observed that such a claim was not made by the pleadings or by the issues, and was one about which much evidence might and probably would have been given if it had been raised; and they accordingly declined to discuss the question because it was not relevant to the case made by the plaintiff, and merely observed that, having grave doubts whether the presumption applicable to little English rivers applies to great rivers such as the Godavari, they would require to know much more about the rivers in question before deciding as to the presumption or its rebuttal. This reservation, in a case in which the question in their Lordships' opinion did not arise and in which the authorities above referred to were apparently not cited, cannot be taken as a ruling that the presumption is generally inapplicable in the case of non-navigable rivers in this part of India. Certain dicta as to the ownership of river-beds were also cited from recent cases in this Court, but they are far from uniform and in none of these cases was the present question considered in the light of the authorities. We, therefore, consider it unnecessary to refer to them. The result of the authorities in our opinion is that, as regards a grant of land in India described as bounded by a non-navigable river, the onus of showing that the grant did not cover the bed ad medium filum aque is on the grantor. The presumption may be strong or weak according to the circumstances of the particular case, and the amount of evidence required to rebut it will vary accordingly. We do not think it desirable to attempt to lay down any more definite rule. Reference has been made to The Madras Land Encroachment Act, Act III of 1905, but that Act cannot affect the pre-existing rights, if any, of the grantee in this case.

Provincial Small Causes Courts Act (IX of 1887), s. 25—Jurisdiction, question of, decision of—Revision, whether lies.

A suit for compensation for breach of contract having been brought in the Court of Small Causes at Agra, a preliminary objection was raised that the alleged breach having taken place at Allahabad, the Court at Agra had no jurisdiction. The Court, after taking evidence, held that it had jurisdiction:

Held, that no revision lay against the order, inasmuch as the case had not been decided on the merits nor had it been 'disposed of' within the meaning of section 25 of the Provincial Small Causes Courts Act. [p. 611, col. 1.]

Civil revision from an order of the Judge of the Court of Small Causes, Agra.

Mr. Damodar Das, for the Appellant.

Mr. Narain Prasad Asthana, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—A preliminary objection is raised on behalf of the opposite party to the hearing of this application. The facts of the case are these:—The plaintiff brought a suit in the Court of Small Causes at Agra, claiming compensation for an alleged breach of contract by the defendant. The suit was contested by the defendant on two grounds, namely, (1) that the suit was not cognizable by the Small Cause Court at Agra as the alleged breach of contract had taken place at Allahabad; (2) that there was no breach on the part of the defendant and that the suit was not maintainable against him. As regards the first point the learned Judge of the Court below took evidence and came to the conclusion that the suit was rightly instituted in the Court of Small Causes at Agra. It appears that the parties had requested the Court to decide the first point at that stage before taking up the question raised on the second plea in defence. The defendant has filed this application for revision against the decision of the Court below on the question of jurisdiction. Mr. Narain Prasad argues that under section 25 of the Provincial Small Causes Courts Act in order to entitle a party to come up in revision it is necessary that the case must have been decided by the Court below. That section runs thus:—

"The High Court, for the purpose of satisfying itself that a decree or order made in any case decided by a Court of Small Causes was according to law, may call for the case and pass such order with respect thereto as it thinks fit." The learned Vakil who appears for the applicant replies that there has been a decision in the case by the Court below within the meaning of section 25, and he relies upon two cases, namely Ramanathan Chetty v. Maruthappa Kone (1) and Umesh Chandra v. Rakhal Chandra (2). The particulars of the latter case are clearly distinguishable from the facts of the present case. In that case what happened was that in a suit filed in a Court of Small Causes a question of title arose on the allegation contained in the plaint and the Court was of opinion with reference to the provisions of section 23 of Act IX of 1887 that the suit should be tried by a Civil Court on the regular side. The plaint was, therefore, returned for presentation to a regular Civil Court.

(2) 10 Ind. Cas. 8; 15 C. W. N. 666; 14 C.L. J. 118.

MUTHUKRISHNA NAICKEN v. RAMACHANDRA NAICKEN.

It was against the order returning the plaint under section 23 of the aforesaid Act that a revision was applied for and it was argued by the opposite party that as the case had not been decided on the merits, the High Court had no power under section 25 of the Act to revise the order. It was held by the Calcutta High Court that it was not contemplated by the word "decided" that the case should have been decided on the merits. The learned Judges observed in their judgment as follows:—"We are not prepared as at present advised to put this narrow construction upon the terms of section 25 nor to adopt the view suggested by the learned Vakil, for the opposite party, that the term 'decided' in section 25 means 'to adjudicate finally on the merits.' Besides in so far as the Small Cause Court is concerned the case has been decided."

In the case of Ramanathan Chetty v. Maruthappa Kone (1), the learned Judge who decided the case observed:—"Mr. Seshagiri Shastri raises a preliminary objection before me that this petition does not lie under section 25 of the Small Causes Courts Act because there is no 'case decided' by the Subordinate Judge sitting on the Small Cause side, and he quoted Subal Ram Dutt v. Jagadananda Majumdar (3) for the position that unless there has been a decision on the merits section 25 has no application. With all respect I am unable to follow this decision. The word 'decided' in section 25 means 'disposed of.' It does not mean that there must be a decision upon the merits." In the present instance the case has neither been decided on the merits nor has it been disposed of in any other manner. It is still on the file of the Court awaiting decision. Merely a preliminary issue as to jurisdiction has been decided and the application for revision is made against this decision of the preliminary issue. None of the cases cited are, therefore, applicable. The preliminary objection must prevail and the application must be rejected. Over and above this, having regard to the circumstances of this case, I do not think that this is a proper case for revision. I accordingly dismiss the application with costs. The stay order is hereby discharged. The record of the case will be sent back to the Court below.

Application dismissed.

One A. a Hindu, left a Will appointing his brother's son as his vars "to conduct charities Tiruvédanthai, Tirukkadalimalai and Tirupathi with the help of my properties." The mode of conducting the charity was specified to be the giving of thaligais in the temples on the Tirunakshatram day, but no special allotments were made for the purpose. At the registration of the Will in his house the testator declared before the Registrar that he intended by the Will to bequeath properties to charities. It also transpired that, in a suit against the testator for a declaration that part of the properties in dispute and some other properties did not belong to him solely, the testator had filed a written statement stating that he acquired the properties for charity and intended to make a testamentary disposition in that behalf. A Court should not sanction a compromise of a suit under section 92, Civil Procedure Code, under which any portion of the trust properties is given to any of the parties. [p. 614, col. 2.]

Per Abdul Rahim, J.—The rule as to cy pres is quite in harmony with the teachings of Hindu Sastras and has been applied in many cases relating to charitable gifts by Hindus. [p. 614, col. 1.]

Per Seshagiri Aiyar, J.—The principal consideration where the object mentioned does not exhaust the corpus of the fund, is to find out whether there was a general testamentary intention or purpose. Even though the object may be specified and the bequest otherwise definite, if the law will not allow the application of the fund for the purpose, it may be that the Courts are not at liberty to infer a general testamentary intention in favour of charity in general and to direct the application of the property to other purposes of a charitable kind. [p. 616, col. 2.]

The primary rule is to ascertain whether the object aimed at by the testator could be carried out without making a new Will for him. Although there may be vagueness in the selection of the places or in the allocation of the funds, so long as it is ascertainable that the testator had a particular object in view and that he intended that the funds left by him should be appropriated to that object, Courts are bound to see that the persons appointed by the testator do not misappropriate the funds. [p. 617, col. 1.]

If the Court can ascertain that there was a general charitable intention, the fact that the particular object for which the charity was intended did not exist or that the fund intended for that charity could not exhaust the whole income, will not be any reason for holding that the bequest failed in whole or in part. If it appears that the donor intended that, in any event, the fund should be devoted to charity and that a particular institution was named merely as the channel by which that intention was to be effected, the whole fund will be regarded as having been dedicated to charity and the Court will proceed to carry out the intention of the testator on the principle of cy pres. [p. 617, cols. 1 & 2.]

The rule of English Law that even answers to interrogatories may be regarded either as a codicil or a Will may not apply to testamentary dispositions in India. Under the Hindu Wills Act and the Indian Succession Act it is doubtful whether such informal declarations could be regarded as testamentary. [p. 617, col. 2.]

There is nothing in the religion of the Hindus, in their traditions and in the consciousness of the people, which will compel Courts to respect prejudices which sap at the root of religion and which pervert and not advance its precepts. Therefore, whenever grants made to religious institutions are not ear-marked or, if ear-marked, are not intended to exhaust the recurring income, and whenever they are made as a general thanksoffering, it is proper and legitimate to direct their application to the promotion of knowledge. [p. 621, col. 2.]

Indian Courts have ample powers to give directions towards the application of the trust income, even though the trustee may not himself be competent similarly to apply it. The doctrine of cy pres should receive as extended an application as possible so as to give effect to the true intent and aim of the donor. His lapses, his ignorance and his failure to understand the situation should not fetter the Courts so long as the purposes specified by him are not violated. [p. 622, col. 1.]

Under section 92, Civil Procedure Code, the Court can sanction a scheme on a cy pres application of a charitable trust. [p. 623, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Chingleput, in Original Suit No. 13 of 1916.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

The Hon'ble Mr. T. Rangachariar, for the Appellant.—The suit is not maintainable under section 92, Civil Procedure Code. The 1st defendant was appointed the testator's vars under the Will. The term vars is a well-known Hindu expression and connotes that 1st defendant became the owner of the properties and was the sole beneficiary under the Will. The devise was burdened with an obligation to perform the charities. The language of the Will 'in order that the charity to these places' made it clear. There was no direction as to the utilisation of the properties comprised in the Will.

The dedication was vague and indefinite and the bequest for charity was, therefore, void. It followed that either the entire property comprised in the Will or the unspent balance after meeting the objects of the charity should be treated as the un-disposed of residue. The direction as to the doing of thaligais in the temples could not be understood as meaning that the consecrated food should be distributed to the poor. The food is offered to the deity and generally returned afterwards to persons giving the thaligai. That is the popular acceptance of thaligai. Reference was made to Runchordas Vandravandas v. Parvatibai (1) and Parthasarathi Pillai v. Thiruvengada Pillai (2).

The statement made by the testator before the Registrar and his written statement in the previous suit are inadmissible.

The trust was a private and not a public trust. The thaligai was only intended for 1st defendant's benefit. The bequest was to an individual who was directed to do certain religious acts. Sathappayyar v. Periasami (3), Trimbak v. Lakshman (4) and Sriranga Chariar v. Pranatharthihara Chariar (5).

The doctrine of cy pres cannot be applied to this particular Will. The testator's intention is specific and, that is, to do thaligais in temples. The Court has no jurisdiction to restrict the fund for that purpose and misapply the income for purposes not indicated by the testator.

Mr. T. R. Ramachandra Aiyar, for the Respondents.—The trust is public, not private. The charities are distinctly specified. There is no ambiguity or vagueness in the dedication. The testator was a religious man and a sanyasi and he directs that the charities he was conducting should be continued after his death by the person appointed by him. The intention of the testator was clear. The use of the word 'vars' should not be taken as implying that the 1st defendant was to have absolute control of the properties. Vars means successor, and the 1st defendant is only appointed trustee.

There are expressions in the Will negating the conferring of absolute rights on 1st defendant. The testator says that his brother's son 'has no share or right'. The object of the charity, the places and the occasion for its performance are all definitely indicated.

The testator's statement before the Registrar may be treated as a Will or codicil. Answers to interrogatories are regarded as Wills. Jarman on Wills, page 35.

As to utilization of the funds for religious instruction, the direction by Court should not be understood as proceeding on the consent of parties.

JUDGMENT.

ABDUR RAHIM, J.—I agree in the conclusions arrived at by my learned brother in his learned and exhaustive judgment which I had the advantage of reading. On the question of the interpretation of the Will of Alavandar, there can be little doubt that he intended to devote all his properties to charity and did not desire to make a gift of them to the appellant. It will be superfluous on my part to add anything to the reasons given in my learned brother's judgment on this point. Nor can I usefully add anything to what he has said on the question whether the provisions of the Will constitute such a definite and certain gift to religious and charitable objects as the Courts could give effect to. The testator was a religious minded and charitable person and was particularly attached to certain temples at Mahabalipuram and Tirupathi; and, reading the Will in connection with the other relevant evidence in the case and in the light of the history of Alavandar's life, it seems to me that his intention was clearly to further the interests of Hindu religion by endowing certain forms of worship in connection with those temples.

The third question relating to the scheme and the application of the doctrine of cy pres has, I must admit, given me some difficulty. This is not a case of an ancient foundation where, owing to changes in the circumstances since the date of the foundation, surplus income has become available that was not in the contemplation of the founder and about which he has given no specific directions. The suit has been instituted immediately after the death of the founder and the question is whether he intended that the entire income of the property should be devoted to the performance of Thalikai in the temples mentioned in the Will or not. My learned brother has described in his judgment what a Thalikai consists in. But there is nothing clearly to show either that Alavandar himself devoted all the income of the property merely to offerings of food to the deity or that he intended that the entire income should be devoted to that purpose alone. My learned brother is of opinion that Alavandar could not have intended that the income of the property, however much it might increase in course of time, should be spent in Thalikais alone, and having regard to his intimate knowledge of these matters I should not be justified in suggesting any doubt as to the soundness of this conclusion. I accept his conclusion that the mention of Thalikai was, to use his own language, meant to be illustrative and not exhaustive, and I have no hesitation in holding that a general charitable intention is apparent from Alavandar's Will. In that view of the intentions of the donor, the application of the surplus income in the way outlined in my learned brother's judgment would be substantially carrying out the testator's intentions. As to the law on the question of the doctrine of cypres, whether the ancient texts of Hindu Law clearly enunciate such a doctrine in so many words or not, I am persuaded that the rule is quite in harmony with the teachings of Hindu Sastras and has been applied in many cases relating to charitable gifts by Hindus. I, therefore, agree in the decree proposed.

SESHAGIRI AIVAR, J.—One Alavandar left a Will appointing his divided brother's son, the 1st defendant herein, as his vars. The Will is dated the 22nd June 1914. The testator died on the 8th August of the same year. The present suit was brought under section 92 of the Civil Procedure Code in December 1914, alleging that the property left by Alavandar was dedicated to charity, that the 1st defendant had misappropriated the funds, that therefore he should be removed from the trusteeship of the charity, and that a scheme should be framed for its management. The 1st defendant contended that the dedication was incomplete and ineffective and that consequently he was entitled to the property left by the Will. The Subordinate Judge came to the conclusion that the property was dedicated to certain charities and that the 1st defendant was guilty of acts of malversation. In the result he held that it was not necessary to remove the 1st defendant from his position as trustee, but that a co-trustee should be appointed with him and that a scheme should be framed for the management of the trust properties. The 1st defendant has appealed. It may be stated at the outset that the plaintiffs, who obtained the sanction of the Advocate-General for instituting the suit, presented a compromise along with the 1st defendant in this Court. As, in our opinion, the compromise was aimed at giving a portion of the trust property to the 1st defendant, we refused to accept it and directed the case to be argued on the merits.

The main question relates to the construction of the Will. In that document the testator says that he left the family while he was young and became a Sanyasi. The evidence shows that all the properties were his self-acquisition. It is unnecessary to consider whether he was really a Sanyasi as mentioned by him. The Will states: "As I am now infirm and weak in body, I, in order that charities may be continued after my life (with) the undermentioned immoveable and moveable properties to the following places, viz., Tiruvedanthai, Tirukkadalmai and Tirupathi, have by this Will appointed my younger brother Veerasami Naicken's son Muthukrishna Naicken who has no share or claim as my "vars," and have given him all affairs after my life." Mr. Rangachariar first contended that under the Will his client, the 1st defendant, became the owner of the properties, subject to the carrying out of the directions relating to the charity. I am unable to agree with him. The learned Vakil argued that the language of the Will was ambiguous. He referred to the expression "in order that the charity to these places." There can be no doubt that what the testator meant was that the charity should be performed in those places. The next suggestion was that there was no direction as to the utilization of the properties mentioned in the Will, because there is no participle governing the words "under-mentioned properties". The word 'with' has been added by the translator. We asked the Bench Clerk to translate it, and he agreed with the previous translation. From my knowledge of Tamil I feel no doubt that these two translators are right in introducing the word "with" before the words "under-mentioned properties." Alavandar was an illiterate man, and in construing the Will of persons of that class, we must put ourselves in their position.

The next contention was based on the use of the word "vars" in the Will. The contention of the appellant's Vakil was that the 1st defendant was instituted heir to the whole property, the suggestion being that the term "vars" was used in its technical sense. I do not think that this contention is well founded. The word "vars" in the context only means "successor." The testator says in the previous portion that he himself has been conducting the charities. In the very next sentence the testator takes care to say that this brother's son "has no share or right", this indicates that it is not a beneficial interest in or ownership of the property that Alavandar was giving to his brother's son, but only the privilege of conducting the charities which he had been performing during his lifetime. He further says that the patta should remain in his name notwithstanding that his brother's son was to be his successor. The expression "I give him all power" does not mean that rights of disposition over the property are given, but only rights of managing the property as trustee. I feel no doubt that the property was dedicated to charity and that the 1st defendant was appointed as the first trustee. Mr. Rangachariar referred to two cases to explain the meaning of the term 'vars', Chunilal v. Baimuli (6) and Suraj Mani v. Rabi Nath Cjha (7). If we accepted the contention of the learned Vakil, we would be making a Will for Alavandar from the language employed under very different circumstances by a testator in Bombay and by another living on the banks of the Ganges, a procedure not only repugnant to all ideas of construction but to the decision of the Privy Council in Venkata Narasimha Appa Row v. Parthasarathy Appa Row (8). In the expressive language of Lord Moulton in that case, what the Court has to do is "to put itself into the testator's arm-chair, to look to the surrounding circumstances consistent with his race and religious opinions" but not to add under any circumstances to the testamentary disposition. The following sentence is peculiarly applicable to the present case: "That native testators should be ignorant of the legal phrases proper to express their intentions, or of the legal steps necessary to carry them into effect is one of the most important of the 'surrounding circumstances' which the Court must bear in mind, and it is justified in refusing to allow defects in expression in these matters to prevent the carrying out of the testator's true intentions, but those intentions must be ascertained by the proper construction of the words he uses, and once ascertained they must not be departed from." Applying this test I agree with the opinion of the Subordinate Judge that the bequest was to the charity and not to the 1st defendant subject to the performance of certain charities.

The next point argued by the learned Vakil was that the dedication was vague and indefinite, and that consequently either the whole of the property or such portion of it as would remain unspent after meeting the special purpose mentioned in the Will should be regarded as undisposed of residue. Before dealing with the cases quoted in this connection, I might refer to the language itself in which the bequest is clothed. I have already mentioned the fact that the testator referred to the circumstance that he himself was performing the charities in the three shrines already referred to. At the end of the Will he says: "after my lifetime Thaligai shall be given in Swami Kovil at the Tirunakshatram every month". The contention for the appellant was that Thaligai referred to was not intended for distribution to the poor or in the temple. I am to a certain extent conversant with observances in Vishnu temples. I am aware that when a rich man speaks of giving a Thaligai in a temple, he very often stipulates that the food should be offered to the deity, and that after deducting certain Swatantrams, the rest of it should be returned to him for use in his house. But ordinarily when a devotee establishes a fund for Thaligai in a temple, it means that the consecrated food is to be distributed among the 'Desantries', as they are called, or the worshippers who might assemble at the time of the Aradhanam. The ordinary significance of making Thaligai is the latter and not the former one. I must, therefore, refuse to accept the contention that the Thaligai was intended to be offered by the 1st defendant in order to be utilised by him in any way he liked later on. There is force, however, in the contention of the learned Vakil about the way in which the subordinate Judge has read the sentence referred to above. The Subordinate Judge seems to think that the word Swami Koil only refers to Mahabalipuram or Tirukkadalimalai. I think he is wrong here. The testator meant to refer to all the three temples mentioned by him and not to one alone. I am also satisfied that the Subordinate Judge is wrong in thinking that the Tirunakshatram referred to was the birth-star of the deceased testator. I cannot accept the view that the testator was speaking of his birth star as Tirunakshatram. Tirunakshatram in the chief Vishnu temples is the birth star of the deity. Every month that Nakshatram falls on a particular day, and that is generally a day in which the god is taken out in procession, or some special ceremonies are conducted. Therefore the Tirunakshatram referred to by the testator is the birth-star of the deities in the three temples. Subject to these corrections in the view taken by the Subordinate Judge, I agree with him that there is no vagueness in the dedication. The three places in which the charities are to be performed are mentioned; a particular form of charity is indicated, and the particular occasion in which such a charity is to be performed is also mentioned. I see nothing vague in such a disposition.

Now I shall examine the cases quoted by the learned Vakil for the appellant. In Runchordas Vandravandas v. Parvatibai (1) there was no specification of the charity or of the locality in which the charity was to be performed. In that case the Judicial Committee quoting Morice v. Bishop of Durham (9) stated: "Unless the subject and the objects can be ascertained, upon principles, familiar in other cases, it must be decided that the Court can neither reform mal-administration nor direct a due administration." That defect does not exist in the present case. Here the subject and the objects are both ascertained and specified. In the other case, Parthasarathi Pillai v. Thiruvengoda Pillai (2), Subramania Aiyar, J., in a very learned judgment, pointed out that a bequest for Dharmam would not by itself be invalid, but felt bound, by reason of the decision of the Judicial Committee in Runchordas Vandravandas v. Parvatibai (1), to hold that the bequest in that particular case was void for uncertainty. In this Madras case beyond saying that the executors shall utilise the properties for Dharmam no place and no mode of charity were indicated. On the other hand the decision in Suria Kunwari v. Pande Har Narain Ram (10) shows that dispositions like the present are enforceable.

The principal consideration where the object mentioned does not exhaust the corpus of the fund is to find out whether there was a general testamentary intention or purpose. Even though the object may be specified and the bequest otherwise definite, if the law will not allow the application of the fund for the purpose, it may be that the Courts are not at liberty to infer a general testamentary intention in favour of charity in general and to direct the application of the property to other purposes of a charitable kind. That was in effect the decision in Doraiswamy Pillai v. Sandanatham- mal (11) to which the learned Vakil drew our attention. In that case the properties were endowed for a Chatram which the testator intended to build. Before his death the Chatram was not built. The learned Chief Justice and Coutts Trotter, J., came to the conclusion that as the object for which the endowment was made had failed, the property lapsed into the residue. But here, as I pointed out already, the places wherein the charities are to be performed are in existence.

In recent years the English Courts have viewed with less disfavour similar bequests to charities. In Wordie's Trustees v. Wordie (12) it was held that "a bequest to such charitable institutions or societies which existed for the benefit of women and children requiring aid or assistance of whatever nature but the said institutions and societies to be under the management of Protestants" was not void for uncertainty. Again in Cameron's Trustees v. Mackenzie (13) "a bequest of residue to trustees to distribute the same among such charitable institutions, persons, or objects as they might think desirable" was held enforceable. And in Bannerman's Trustees v. Bannerman (14) "a power in favour either of religious or charitable institutions, one or more, conducted according to Protestant principles" was held good. The primary rule is to ascertain whether the object aimed at by the testator could be carried out without making a new Will for him. Although there may be vagueness in the selection of the places or in the allocation of the funds, so long as it is ascertainable that the testator had a particular object in view and that he intended the funds left by him should be appropriated to that object, Courts are bound to see that the persons appointed by the testator do not misappropriate the funds. The Incorporated Society v. Price (15), Bunting v. Marriott (16), Biscoe v. Jackson (17) and Attorney-General v. Lawes (18) all show that if the Court can ascertain that there was a general charitable intention, the fact that the particular object for which the charity was intended did not exist or that the fund intended for that charity could not exhaust the whole income will not be any reason for holding that the bequest failed either wholly or in part. As was pointed out in Ioscombe v. Wintringham (19), if it appears that the donor intended that in any event the fund should be devoted to charity and that a particular institution was named merely as the channel by which that intention was to be effected, the whole fund will be regarded as having been dedicated to charity and the Court will proceed to carry out the intention of the testator on the principle of cy pres. The decision in Abdul Kader v. Bai Safiabu (20) is to the same effect. My conclusion on this part of the case is that there is a general charitable intention in the Will of Alavandar that the property left by him should be appropriated for the performance of charities in the three temples already mentioned, and, therefore, no part of the bequest fails for want of definiteness.

There is also another consideration which induces me to hold that the bequest is valid. Exhibits A (1) and B, two statements made by the testator, show that he intended to make a Will like the present one and that he intended by that Will to bequeath properties to the charities. Mr. Rangachariar objected to receiving these two documents in evidence. I think both the documents were properly admitted by the lower Court. It may be that the suggestion of Mr. T. R. Ramachandra Aiyar that Exhibit A (1) should be regarded as a codicil is somewhat far-fetched. The citation from Jarman on Wills, volume I, page 35, that even answers to interrogatories may be regarded either as a codicil or Will may not apply to testamentary dispositions in this country. Under the Hindu Wills Act and the Indian Succession Act it is doubtful whether such informal declarations could be regarded as testamentary. But I think Exhibit A (1) is admissible in evidence under section 32, clause 7) of the Evidence Act. It is a statement taken by the Sub-Registrar in the house of the testator before registering the Will, and it was made two days after Exhibit A. I think the language of clause 7 of section 32 covers this case. I also think that this statement is part of the res gestæ and as such receivable in evidence under section 6 of the Evidence Act. As regards Exhibit B it was a written statement filed by Alavandar in a suit brought against him to declare that part of the properties in dispute and some other properties did not solely belong to him. In his written statement he said that he had acquired the properties for the purposes of a charity and that he intended to make a testamentary disposition in that behalf. This is certainly a statement which was opposed to the pecuniary interest of the person making it and as such is covered by section 32 (3) of the Evidence Act. Reading Exhibits A (1) and B along with Exhibit A, I am of opinion that the testator had a clear testamentary intention in favour of charity.

The next point for consideration is whether the trusts declared by the testator are public trusts or only private trusts as contended for by Mr. Rangachariar. I have already pointed out that the use of the word "thaligai" should not mislead us. The charities were intended to be performed in three public religious institutions. One of the objects was to feed the devotees. I fail to see how this can be regarded as a private trust. The decision in Sathappayyar v. Periasami (3), which related to a gift by the then Zemindar of Sivaganga to his own religious preceptor with a view to the property being utilised for a special purpose, has no bearing upon this question. In that case it was held that the gift was primarily to the preceptor and that there was only a direction or a suggestion that the property should be appropriated in a particular manner, and that consequently the beneficial interest vested in the preceptor. Nor has Trimbak v. Lakshman (4) any bearing on the present question. In Sriranga Chariar v. Pranatharthihara Chariar (5) the grant was to a person and an object was specified. It was held that it was not a public trust. These authorities are not applicable to cases where there is no bequest to any individual but only to charity.

Before dealing with the question as to how the funds should be appropriated, I might deal with the contention of Mr. Rangachariar that his client should be the sole trustee. It is true that the suit was instituted within six months of the death of the testator. Nonetheless the evidence in this case shows that the personal habits of the 1st defendant are of such a nature as would justify co-adjutors being appointed along with him. Moreover, I cannot shut my eyes to the fact that the 1st defendant claimed in this suit that no part of the property should go to the trust. At the same time I am in agreement with Mr. Rangachariar that the 1st defendant should not be wholly removed. The best course will be to appoint two more trustees, of whom one at least should be a non-Brahmin, to co-operate with him in the management of these properties. It is desirable also that the 1st defendant should be given a salary to see that the charities are properly conducted. The details of the scheme will be left to the lower Court.

This brings me to the last question, whether it is open to us to direct the application of the income to objects other than the performance of Thaligai in the temples. I do not at present propose to do anything more than indicate in the general way the objects on which the fund may be spent. On a rough calculation the income which is likely to be derived is about Rs. 8,000 a year. After paying the expenses of the management and the remuneration of the trustee, there may be a balance of about Rs. 6,000. In my opinion one-fourth of it, namely, Rs. 1,500 should be spent in the three temples, Rs. 500 in each, for the purpose of feeding people and conducting Utsavams. The balance should be utilised for giving religious instruction. Mr. T. R. Ramachandra Aiyar, without seriously objecting to the allocation, of any portion of the income to education, made us understand that such a provision in the scheme must not be taken to have been made by consent of the parties. As the question regarding the application of surplus income comes up before the Courts very often, I propose to deal with the jurisdiction of the Court in such matters.

Although the extent of jurisdiction over temples exercised by the ancient kings of the land is not traceable in any of the writings handed down to us, there can be no manner of doubt that the affairs of religious institutions were directly under the control of the sovereigns. The Muzerai Department of Mysore, and the conduct of temple affairs in Travancore and Cochin all point to the conclusion that the administration of Devasthanams has been and is a department of the State. Even Mutts are subject to Governmental supervision. The Mutt properties in Mysore often pass into the hands of the Government with a view to their more efficient management. There is no reason for presuming that a different state of affairs prevailed in ancient India. Regulation VII of 1817 states in the preamble that "it is the duty of the Government to provide that all such endowments be applied according to the real intent and Will of the grantor." It is not unreasonable to assume that such a duty was inherited from the ancient sovereigns of the land, although the notion that the sovereign is bound to administer ecclesiastical affairs properly is an English idea as well. In Koutilya's Arthashastra, in the chapter headed "Replenishment of the treasury," some Machiavellian advice is tendered to the king regarding the appropriation of the temple income. The minister, like those that served some of the English Kings, seems to have been concerned only with aiding the king in securing money for temporal purposes without reference to the morality or legality of the attempts. I have referred to Chanakya's disingenuous advice to the sovereign only for the purpose of showing that the revenues from the temples were indented, upon rare occasions, for the general administration of the land. There is evidence that in the days of the East India Company the surplus income from the temple properties was appropriated to general purposes. Controversies are still carried on by individual institutions claiming a refund of such income. In more recent years, the Legislature has enacted a law (vide the Tirupati Devasthanam Act) authorising the utilisation of a portion of the temple income for the purposes of advancing secular education. Courts have sanctioned expenditure for imparting instruction in Sanskrit and Tamil (vide the scheme for the Rameswaram Devastanam). I see no reason for holding that these instances have been considered by religious devotees as amounting to a misapplication of the temple income. A remarkable letter by the Rajah Sarabhoji of Tanjore, dated the 28th January 1801, addressed to the then British Resident shows in what spirit and with what intents religious charities were gifted and administered. After referring to the fact that persons from all over India travel by foot to Rameswaram where Chatrams have been built, the letter says: "For the accommodation of these travellers principally, the Chatrams have been established and to each of them a pagoda, choultries and schools are annexed." Then the nature of the charities is explained. Then follow these sentences: "In each Chatram, a teacher to teach the four Vedams is appointed and a school master and doctors skilful in the cure of diseases, swellings and the poison of reptiles. All the orphans of strangers who may come to the Chatram are placed under the care of the school-master. They are also fed three times a day and once in four days they are anointed with oil. They receive medicine when they require it. Clothes also are given to them and the utmost attention paid to them. They are instructed in the sciences to which they may express a preference and after having obtained a competent knowledge of them the expenses of their marriage are defrayed." The above extract explains with what eye ancient kings looked upon the dispensation of charities.

I have been at pains to find out whether the Hindu Shastras countenance the distinction between religious and charitable purposes. My research shows that in India religious purposes have been considered only as a branch of the charitable purpose. Jaimini in his Sutras says "" "Dharma or charity is that which is ordained" K. L. Sarkar in his Mimamsa Rules of Interpretation rightly points out that this ordaining is not from the Vedas alone, it may be from the Smritis and some of the accepted Itihasas and Puranas as well. When the Tanjore Rajah in providing for the safe conduct and comforts of the pilgrims considered that education is a form of charity which would enable the donor to attain salvation, he interpret ed truly the Shastraic injunctions in this behalf. Vaidyanatha Dikshitar, who has in his monumental work prescribed the duties of house-holders, discusses at some length the form and nature of charity best calculated to lead a man to Heaven. He first quotes a very well-known text from Taittiriya Upanishad on the excellence of Dharma:—

“* * * * *

Then he quotes a few very apt slokas from Manu:—

“* * * * *

In the matter of Danam the Veda says:
“All beings praise Danam. * * *

“Everything rests on Danam. Therefore, it is said that Danam (gift) is the noblest and the supreme.”

Manu says:—“There are three classes of the highest gifts: namely, the gift of cows, land and saraswathi, viz., (learning). Gift of learning is more praiseworthy than giving of food. In learning, Para Vidya (knowledge relating to the Para Brahman)—is considered to be superior. And, therefore, Swarga (Heaven) and Moksha (salvation) are vouchsafed to the donor of such knowledge. He who imparts knowledge to the ignorant or constructs rest houses, attains the same merit as a person who has gifted land.”

From the above extract it will be seen that among all the commendable gifts the gift of a cow, of a piece of land and of education are considered to be the noblest. Of these three, the gift of education is more praiseworthy than the other two. In education, “that which imparts to the donee a knowledge of the Supreme is to be preferred.” It is clear from the above Smriti text that Manu regarded vidya dharmam or gift of education of any kind as conducive to salvation. His preference of Para Vidya, education relating to a knowledge of Para Brahman, shows that in his opinion every endeavour to remove ignorance and to infuse light is acceptable to God. In the face of such a pronouncement, it would be absurd to argue that a general gift by a devotee intended as a propitiatory offering to God would be misspent if a portion of it is utilised for giving secular education. The final scheme approved by the District Board of Tanjore for the utilisation of the surplus funds shows that they carried out the letter and spirit of the instructions given by Rajah Saraboji in the letter already referred to. What the District Board and the Legislature have done is not beyond the competence of Courts which act as the sovereign's delegated authority in conserving and properly administering charitable gifts.

The difficulties we are experiencing are traceable to the constitution of committees under Act XX of 1863. The supervision of the sovereign power ceased, and with it the power to apply the surplus income to purposes most conducive to the general welfare and comforts of the devotees. The first committees applied their minds to conserving the income and to spending it on rituals and ceremonials which the common people most desired. They were not given the powers which the sovereign exercised. The Act was so drawn up as to leave most essential matters unprovided for. The earlier trustees owed their appointments, in not a few cases, to the accident of being temporarily in charge of the affairs of an institution. The result has been disastrous. When an ineffective law is administered by a person anxious to be maintained as trustee, and who feels that he is responsible to no one, there is bound to be peculation and mismanagement. The multiplication of Utsavams is due more to a desire to find channels of expenditure which might give a profit to the spender than to serve the legitimate wishes of the devotees. Moneys have been recklessly allotted for these tamashes, not in a few instances, to the detriment of the more legitimate ceremonials in the temple. I am glad that it has been recently ruled that money borrowed for fireworks is not chargeable on the trust. See Adiraja Arsu v. Sheik Budan Sahib (21). I do not believe that sane men would seriously advance the theory that it is more pleasing to God that moneys should be spent in fireworks and in engaging dancing girls than in imparting education to the sons of the devotees. There can be no manner of doubt as to the wishes of the people on such matters. But we have unfortunately a machinery for the administration of religious institutions which gives scope for abuses of a serious kind on the part of those entrusted with the management of such institutions.

(21) 44 Ind. Cas. 815; 23 M. L. T. 278; 34 M. L. J. 358; (1918) M. W. N. 331.

The Hindu Shastras, as I pointed out, attach great importance to the imparting of knowledge. True religiousness, according to Hindu notions, is possible only to those who are learned. I fail to see why the application of temple income to the promotion of knowledge, which in the main must lead a man aright, should be considered improper. No doubt when a devotee ear-marks the offering for a particular purpose, it is not open to the authorities to divert it to other purposes. Even here, when the purpose is legitimately satisfied by the application of a portion of the income, the balance can be devoted to the promotion of useful knowledge. But in the vast majority of cases where the offerings are contributed without any set purpose, the management will be justified in applying them to purposes connected with the diffusion of knowledge. A sufficient portion of the income may be spent on spectacular demonstrations which attract and please the ordinary worshipper. He often desires that the deity should have such accompaniments to festivals and ceremonies as would please the eye and give an air of magnificence and of sumptuousness. But pandering to such cravings should have limits. I do not say that a Puritanic standard of religiousness should be imposed. But it is not the function of the managers to encourage observances which have no connection with the fundamentals of religious worship. In very many instances, expenditure on tamashes produces the opposite effect. The worship of the deity is lost sight of, in the desire to witness the amusements; and not infrequently, vice is encouraged and spread by these practices. I have no hesitation in saying that the modern developments regarding processions lead the people far away from the paths of religion and are calculated to bring it into disrepute. I think there is nothing in the religion of the Hindus, in their traditions and in the consciousness of the people, which will compel Courts to respect prejudices which sap at the root of religion and which pervert and not advance its precepts. Therefore, whenever the grants made to religious institutions are not ear-marked or, if ear-marked, are not intended to exhaust the recurring income, and whenever they are made as a general thanks-offering, it is proper and legitimate to direct their application to the promotion of knowledge.

There is one other aspect of the question. The donations made to a deity often take the strictly legal aspect of charity as understood by English lawyers. Grants for feeding the devotees, for giving them shelter, for giving them water are made in connection with religious institutions. Grants are frequently made to reward persons who chant the Vedas or the Prabhandam when the Utsavams are in progress. I cite these instances to show that in the eyes of a donor, the feeding of the poor and the encouragement of educated men are regarded as purposes gratifying to the deity? If that is so, how can a management be charged with misapplication, if it uses the surplus funds to enable young men to gain knowledge or to give them food while reading in schools and colleges? In England it has been held that the advancement and propagation of education and learning are charitable purposes. See Whicker v. Hume (22). I think this principle is applicable with greater force to Indian conditions. In Thompson v. Thompson (23) it was held that where the gift is general and indirect, its application to provide a fund for unsuccessful literary men would be valid. Where the relief of poverty is the object of the donor, it has been held that the object can be effectuated by the apprenticing of poor children or by giving pensions to destitute men. See Attorney-General v. Minshull (24) and Attorney-General (22) (1858) 7 H. L. C. 124; 23 L. J. Ch. 336; 4 Jur. (N. S.) 933; 11 E. R. 50; 31 L. T. (O. S.) 319; 115 R. L. 70.
(24) (1793) 4 Ves. Jun. 11; 31 E. R. 6.

v. Wansay (25). In Estlin, In re; Pritchard v. Thomas (26), appropriation of such funds for founding homes for lady teachers was upheld. In Hall v. Derby Sanitary Authority (27) the establishment of orphanages from such funds was held to be proper.

Further, as pointed out by Mr. Ganapathi Aiyar in his Hindu and Muhammadan Endowments, page 58, the Hindu Shastras do not draw a sharp line of distinction between religious and charitable grants. The word "Poorta" which signifies pious acts open to all classes of society connotes both religious and charitable acts. See also West and Buhler, pages 205 and 207. It would, therefore, be idle to impute to Hindu devotees an intention that in making offerings or donations they contemplated purely religious purposes as opposed to charitable purposes.

I have thus far endeavoured to show that the trustees of a temple would be acting well within their powers in using temple income to promote knowledge. As regards the functions of the Court in such matters, there can be no doubt. I pointed out in Sitharam Chetty v. Subramania Aiyer (28) that the Courts in this country have inherited the jurisdiction of the Chancery Courts in England. In a Tinnevely case, Chidambaranatha Thambiran v. Nallasia Mudaliar (29), which I decided sitting with the learned Chief Justice, I held that just as a Court of Chancery would not allow a trust to die for want of a trustee, so also the Indian Courts have ample powers to give directions towards the application of the trust income even though the trustee may not himself be competent similarly to apply it. The doctrine of cy pres should receive as extended an application as possible so as to give effect to the true intent and aim of the donor. His lapses, his ignorance and his failure to understand the situation should not fetter the Courts so long as the purposes specified by him are not violated.

It was pointed out in Attorney-General v. Lawes (18) the jurisdiction of the Courts of Chancery should be exercised with a view to prevent the failure of the donation altogether. Courts in this country should act on the same principle.

In the present case I have held that there is a general charitable intention. The mode of carrying it into effect is not provided for with any certainty. It would be absurd to suggest that the Rs. 6,000 should be wholly spent in Thaligais. The truth is that the donor intended that his earnings should be spent in the temples without taking care to provide how they should be spent. His mention of Thaligai was meant to be illustrative and not exhaustive. The evidence to which Mr. Ramachandra Aiyar drew our attention shows that in his lifetime, Alavandar spent monies for other religious purposes than giving Thaligais. Very likely the testator did not expect such a large income from the properties. He was not educated enough to give the necessary directions in his Will for the proper allocation of the income. That duty can be performed by the Court. As was pointed out in Ommanney v. Butcher (30), Courts have often to supply defects of this nature in a trust bequest. As I pointed out before, when the mode indicated by the donor cannot reasonably exhaust the income, the doctrine of cy pres can be invoked.

In England, the appropriate mode of effectuating a charitable trust is by sanctioning a scheme. The case-law on the point is thus summarised in 4 Halsbury, paragraph 316. As this judgment has already become lengthy I shall content myself by extracting the passage here: "A scheme is generally necessary on any cy pres application of a charitable trust unless the trust is altered merely in detail.

"Schemes are also required where the trusts of the instrument of foundation are ambiguous or insufficient and no particular objects are defined, or where there are no trustees, or the trustees are dead or refuse to act or where there has been an increase in the revenue of the charity, or the persons managing the charity have misapplied its property, or where for any other reason it is thought expedient to regulate the administration of the charity."

In my opinion section 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure gives Indian Courts similar powers. In the present case, the scheme should be of such a nature as to give effect to the expressed intention of the testator and to apply the surplus income for educational purposes. Without unduly fettering the discretion of the lower Court, I may indicate the main lines on which the scheme should be framed:—

(a) An establishment for collecting the income should be sanctioned, not exceeding Rs. 500 a year.

(b) The 1st defendant should be paid Rs. 40 a month for superintending the charities.

(c) With him should be associated two more trustees of whom one at least should be a non-Brahmin.

(d) Rs. 1,500 out of the net income should be spent in Thaligais and Utsavams; Rs. 500 in Tiruvédanthai and Mahabalipuram to be spent on the Tirunakshatram day; and Rs. 500 to be utilised for purchasing Prasadam in Tirupati during Brahmotsavam to feed non-Brahmin worshippers.

(e) The balance should be spent for giving religious education in Tamil Prabadam.

With these suggestions, the appeal is dismissed. Costs of both parties in both Courts will come out of the trust fund.

In dealing with claims for arrears of maintenance made by Hindu widows Courts possess a large discretion to grant or withhold those arrears with special reference to the urgent needs and necessities of the widow. [p. 623, col. 2.]

As soon as the widow satisfies the Court that she was in want at the time at which she was entitled to maintenance, provided that time is within the period of limitation, the Court might in any given case award her arrears to that extent, and that would be quite independent of any demand on her part. In other words, while a demand is allowed to be prima facie evidence of need on the widow's part, it is not in a demand that the right to obtain arrears of maintenance is rooted. Nor is any demand necessary. [p. 623, col. 2.]

Mr. Nilkanth Atmaram, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—On the point of arrears of maintenance the case-law, to which we have been referred, yields, as far I can see, no definite principle upon which all cases of the kind can be decided. The most that can be said of it, I think, is that the highest authority sanctions a very large discretion in Courts dealing with claims for arrears of maintenance to grant or withhold those arrears with special reference to the urgent need and necessities of the widow, and this amounts virtually to saying that every such case must be decided upon its own facts. It is very clear that as soon as the widow satisfies the Court that she was in want at the time at which she was entitled to maintenance, provided that time is within the period of limitation, the Court might in any given case award her arrears to that extent, and that would be quite independent of any demand on her part. In other words, while a demand is allowed to be prima facie evidence of need on the widow's part, it is not in a demand that the right to obtain arrears of maintenance is rooted. Nor indeed is any demand necessary.

In the facts before us, therefore, we have no guide in the authorities to any principle which could be uniformly used in deciding whether arrears of maintenance ought or ought not to be granted. Here, the plaintiff has asked for six years' arrears and the lower Court has awarded them, though at a lower rate than the maintenance it has decreed to her in future. We are in some doubt, however, whether the facts warrant this liberality. It must always be a factor in dealing with the merits of a particular case that the plaintiff has postponed making her claim. If during a period of six years she has been living in her father's house, while it would not be safe to conclude that she was not in want and forced by want to continue to depend upon her father's bounty, it may be the ground of a reasonable inference that she was not driven by absolute necessity to enforce her rights of maintenance against her husband's family. Then, again, in cases of this kind the criterion cannot be that the woman had found a shelter somewhere and bare subsistence. For that would not be incompatible with her having been in real want, and, as far as I can see, no very adequate ground for transferring the responsibility for her maintenance from her husband to her natural family. But one would suppose that if the pinch of want was being very severely felt a Hindu widow would insist upon her rights, particularly if her husband's family were well-to-do, while her father's family were extremely poor, long before six years had elapsed. It can only be upon the most general ground and a balance of the most general and shifting considerations of this kind that we can come to what must be called rather a commonsense than any other conclusion upon the point before us. Treating the case in that manner, we have decided that justice does not require that the widow here should have more than three years' maintenance, and to that extent we amend the decree of the Court below.

As regards the quantum of her maintenance in the future, where we find a Hindu Subordinate Judge treating a Hindu widow with so much liberality as in the present case, we should be very reluctant indeed to interfere and so suggest that we generally agree with the extremely harsh and rigorous attitude of the Hindu mind towards women so unfortunately situated as Hindu widows often are. We have heard all the arguments that could be addressed to us upon the somewhat meagre evidence recorded, and while on that evidence the scale of maintenance might appear to be unduly liberal, one cannot say that the learned Judge is wrong in conjecturing that the defendant has managed to conceal his true means, which are very likely much more ample than is revealed in the evidence.

We do not, therefore, think it right to interfere upon that part of the case, and we would, with the slight variation suggested above, confirm the decree of the lower Court and dismiss this appeal with all costs.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), ss. 4, 14, scope of—Limitation, expiry of, on holiday—Plaint, presentation of, on succeeding day, in wrong Court, effect of—Institution in wrong Court for prompt realisation of debt—Good faith—Return of plaint for presentation to proper Court—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 20.

Section 4 of the Limitation Act is a particular statutory provision, not for the purpose of computing the period of limitation prescribed as in section 14, but allowing in certain circumstances the filing of suits after the period has expired. [p. 625, col. 2.]

The section can be availed of only if the suit, appeal or application is filed in the proper Court when the time for doing so has expired on a holiday. [p. 625, col. 2.]

Mira Mohideen v. Nallaperumal, 12 Ind. Cas. 58; 36 M. L. J. 131; 21 M. L. J. 1000; 10 M. L. T. 234; (1911) 2 M. W. N. 221, followed.

Section 14 of the Limitation Act only prescribes a certain rule to be observed in computing the period of limitation prescribed for a suit, appeal or application, i. e., in reckoning the number of days if time has expired, the period allowed by the section may be deducted from the period that has actually expired. [p. 625, col. 2.]

Where a plaintiff instituted a suit on the day after the last day of limitation, the last day being a holiday in a Court within whose jurisdiction one only of the defendants resided and the Court declining to give leave under section 20 (b), Civil Procedure Code, returned the plaint for presentation to the proper Court, which was subsequently done:

Held, that the plaint not having been presented to a proper Court on the day after the last day of limitation, the suit was barred.

The institution of a proceeding in a Court with a view to prompt realisation of the claim from the defendant, who is an officer of that Court, is not a proceeding lacking in good faith within the meaning of section 14.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court, Tinnevely, in Appeal Suit No. 618 of 1915, preferred against the decree of the Court of the Additional District Munsif, Tinnevely, in Original Suit No. 360 of 914.

FACTS.—The plaintiff presented his plaint in the Court of the District Munsif, Ambasamudram,¹ as the first executant of the bond resided there. The other executants resided in different jurisdictions. The District Munsif acting under section 20, clause (b) of the Civil Procedure Code, declined to give leave for the institution of the suit in that Court, in consequence of which the suit was subsequently filed in the Court of the District Munsif of Tinnevely.

The District Munsif of Ambasamudram gave the following reasons for returning the plaint in his order returning it:—"The plaintiff is living in Tinnevely. The bond was executed in Tinnevely".....[This latter statement is not quite correct as it was executed in a different place.] The defendants Nos. 2 to 4 are nearer Tinnevely than Ambasamudram. The only reason alleged for filing the plaint in my Court is that the 1st defendant is here. I think that the balance of convenience is in favour of the plaint being presented to the District Munsif exercising jurisdiction in Tinnevely town. I decline to give permission for suit being filed here." The suit was then filed in the Tinnevely Munsif's Court. The 1st defendant was Head Clerk of the Ambasamudram Munsif's Court.

Mr. K. B. Gurusawmi Aiyar, for the Appellants.

Mr. B. Sitaram Row, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

NAPIER, J. (after stating facts as above)—With regard to the question whether the suit was bona fide filed in the Court of the District Munsif of Ambasamudram, I do not think that the fact that he thought he would be more likely to get his money paid by the 1st defendant if he sued him in the Court of which he was an officer shows want of bona fides. A man has a perfect right to endeavour to get the payment of his money, and I see nothing improper in suing his debtor where he thought he would be more willing to discharge the debt. But the real difficulty in the way of the plaintiff seems to me to lie, in the language of the section, as follows:—"In computing the period of limitation prescribed for any suit," that is to say, in reckoning the number of days to see if time has expired, you may deduct from the period that has actually expired the period allowed by section 14, namely, "the time during which the plaintiff has been prosecuting with due diligence another Civil proceeding" in a Court which is unable to entertain the suit. But the right by which the plaintiff can file his suit the day after a holiday is given by section 4, which is "where the period of limitation prescribed for any suit, appeal or application expires on a day when the Court is closed, the suit, appeal or application may be instituted, preferred or made on the day that the Court re-opens," that is to say, although the period of limitation has expired a suit may be filed after the expiration of the period of limitation. That is how I read the section. It is a particular statutory provision, not for the purpose of computing the period of limitation, but allowing, in certain circumstances, the filing of suits after the period has expired. If that is so, then section 14 will not help the plaintiff because, as I have pointed out, it begins with the phrase: "In computing the period of limitation prescribed for any suit," prescribed, of course, having reference to the Articles. If this plaint had been presented in a proper Court on the day after that on which the limitation expired, that day having been a holiday, then the plaintiff would have been able to take advantage of the specific provision in section 4; but as he has not done so, in my opinion, he is not entitled to take advantage of that provision. That seems to me to be the view taken by Mr. Justice Spencer in Mira Mohideen v. Nallaperumal (1) and I agree with him in that Plaintiffs and defendants were joint owners of an estate and were recorded in the revenue papers as such. It appeared, however, that the defendants alone had been in possession of the joint estate. In 1890 the revenue records were the subject of challenge, but the defendants took no steps to get them rectified, with the result that the plaintiffs continued to be recorded as owners of their joint share.

Appeal from the decree of the Chief Court of the Punjab (Shah Din and Beadon, JJ.), dated the 20th December 1913.

Sir William Garth, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.

LORD BUCKMASTER. — The question in this appeal is whether the appellants have an interest jointly with the respondents in a village known as Bhagsar.

In the proceedings, out of which the appeal has arisen, the appellants were the plaintiffs and the respondents were the defendants, and in that suit the two material issues were, first, whether the property in question was part of a joint family estate, and secondly, if it were, whether the plaintiffs, who were members of the family, had lost their right by abandonment, acquiescence, or adverse possession. The finding of the two Courts that the property was originally joint is not challenged, and the only question is that raised by the second issue. Upon this the Subordinate Judge of Ferozepore found in favour of the appellants, and his judgment was reversed by the Chief Court of the Punjab. In considering the soundness of this latter judgment it is important to bear in mind certain facts with regard to the possession of joint property, which distinguish it from property separately held. In the former case the phrase "exclusive possession" has an equivocal meaning; in the latter it has not. If by exclusive possession of joint estate is meant that one member of the joint family alone occupies it, that by itself affords no evidence of exclusion of other interested members of the family. Uninterrupted sole possession of such property, without more, must be referred to the lawful title possessed by the joint holder to use the joint estate, and cannot be regarded as an assertion of a right to hold it as separate, so as to assert an adverse claim against other interested members [Maharajah Sir Luchmeswar Singh Bahadur v. Sheikh Manowar Hossein (1) and Corea v. Appuhamy (2)]. If possession may be either lawful or unlawful, in the absence of evidence, it must be assumed to be the former. The fact, therefore, that this village of Bhagsar has been occupied for many years by the defendants and their predecessors is insufficient to prove exclusion of the plaintiffs without further evidence. This evidence the respondents sought to find in certain proceedings that took place in 1890, and as the Chief Court has recorded their opinion that the respondents' view of these matters is correct, and this Board has not had the advantage of hearing Counsel for the respondents, it becomes

The facts seem to be these: A disposition of part of the property appears to have been made by Wasawa Singh and Hazara Singh, the fathers of the defendants, in favour of two people, named Phala and Mala, who were respectively the brothers-in-law of Wasawa and Hazara. Mala appears to have taken proceedings in 1890 in assertion of his right for partition of this land. The records of the proceedings appear to have been lost, apart from an order, dated the 20th February 1891 and it is only from the material thus furnished that it is possible to ascertain what the proceedings were. This order states that on the 10th November 1890 an order of partition was proposed and partition had been all but prepared when the plaintiff, Mala, objected on the ground that it was prejudicial to him, and on an enquiry being directed he asserted that he was entitled to one-third of certain khatas, Nos. 39 to 41, the property of the sons of Wasawa and Hazara, referred to in the order as Basawa and Hazara. This the sons of Wasawa and Hazara disputed, and asserted that Mala should get a share in proportion to Rs. 5-14-3, being his share shown in the jamabandi papers. What this share was meant to be it is impossible to know. It may be that it represents the share to which Mala might be entitled upon the footing that the property was jointly held with the appellants' predecessors, and that the sons of Wasawa and Hazara were asserting that the estate was jointly held by them with others in order to defeat Mala's claim. Both Mala and the occupancy tenants disputed the entries in the revenue papers, and those entries clearly showed that the estate was then held jointly by Wasawa and Hazara and the predecessors of the plaintiffs. The Court consequently directed that it was expedient to postpone the partition until the objectors had obtained relief against the entries in the revenue papers in a Civil Court. Now these entries were adverse to the objectors, because they showed that the estate was jointly held with the plaintiffs' predecessors, and unless their claim was removed Mala's share would be to that extent reduced. Three months' time was allowed in order to have these entries rectified, and that was in substance the whole effect of the order. No suit was brought in pursuance of this permission, and the entries were continued on the same footing in the revenue papers, down to and including those for 1905 and 1906, and clearly showed the interest of the plaintiffs in the joint estate.

These facts led the Chief Court to the conclusion that the defendants set up in 1890 adverse possession, and that that possession had continued for more than twelve years before the institution of these proceedings. If their Lordships were so able to interpret the proceedings referred to, they would not be prepared to differ from the judgment of the Chief Court, but in truth they can only find that at that time the revenue records were the subject of challenge, though apparently not by the present respondents, and that the parties interested in their alteration took no steps whatever to secure rectification, with the result that the appellants have remained, as shown by these records, entitled to their joint share in the property.

The absence of all the preliminary proceedings leading up to the order, to which reference has been made, has caused much of the difficulty in this case. If these could be examined much that is now obscure might be made plain, but it is only possible to reconstruct them from the order now in existence.

Their Lordships are unable to think that the information thus obtained is sufficient to justify them in holding that an estate, which must be accepted as having originally been joint, which is recorded as joint throughout the whole of the revenue records, is an estate from which the defendants were adversely excluded, as the Chief Court think. Apart from the effect of these proceedings, the Chief Court, in agreement with the Court below, do not appear to regard the evidence of actual user as sufficient to establish the contention of abandonment or exclusion, and this conclusion is in agreement with their Lordships' view.

For this reason they will humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal be allowed with costs and the judgment of the Subordinate Judge restored.

MEDA CHINNASUBAMMA v. PAPIREDDI GARI CHINNAYYA.

Their Lordships' attention has been directed to the fact that the appellants only claimed a two-thirds share of the estate, but for some unexplained reason three-fourths has been awarded to them by the decree of the Subordinate Judge. This must be due to some error in drawing up the order, for it is inconsistent both with the claim and the evidence. In these circumstances the decree of the Subordinate Judge must be altered by substituting therein the words "two-thirds share" in the place of the words "three-fourths share," and so altered, the decree should be restored.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 144, 151, O. XXI, r. 90—Order refusing to set aside execution sale, reversal of, in appeal—Auction-purchaser not party to proceedings—Restitution, claim to, maintainability of.

An order refusing to set aside an execution sale under Order XXI, rule 90, Civil Procedure Code, was reversed on appeal. The auction-purchaser was not a party to the proceedings. The judgment-debtor applied for restitution of the property from the auction-purchaser.

Held, (1) that section 144 of the Civil Procedure Code did not apply, inasmuch as no decree had been varied or reversed on appeal but only an order under Order XXI, rule 90, refusing to set aside a sale in execution;

(2), that an order could not be made under section 151 of the Civil Procedure Code on the analogy of section 144, inasmuch as the auction-purchaser was not a party to the proceedings instituted for setting aside the sale.

Mr. V. Ramesam, for the Appellant.

Mr. N. Chendrasakara Ayyar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Section 144 of the Code of Civil Procedure cannot in terms apply as no decree was varied or reversed, but only an order under Order XXI, rule 90, refusing to set aside a sale in execution, was reversed by the Appellate Court.

Assuming that section 151 of the Code of Civil Procedure allows an order for restitution in appropriate cases, even though it does not fall under section 144 of the Code of Civil Procedure, such an order cannot be made on the analogy of section 144, unless the auction-purchaser was a party before the Appellate Court which set aside the sale in the proceedings instituted for setting it aside.

The mere fact that the decree-holder was a party to those proceedings will not suffice as the Court auction-purchaser is not the representative of the decree-holder. Manickka Odayan v. Rajagopala Pillai (1), which held otherwise, has been disapproved of in Nadamuni Narayana Iyengar v. Veerabhadra Pillai (2), to both of which decisions the present learned Chief Justice was a party.

The Munsif says, that the auction-purchaser need not at all be a party to any proceedings for confirmation of or setting aside the sale. The petition for restitution does not expressly state that the Court auction purchaser was a party to the proceedings taken to have the auction sale set aside. No records have been produced before us to establish that fact. We, therefore, cannot hold that section 151 empowers the Court to pass an order for restitution against the person not shown to be a party to, and so bound by the order of the Appellate Court setting aside, the sale.

Mr. N. V. Gokhale, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

SHAH, J.—This second appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff for an injunction ordering the defendant to remove the trees overhanging his land and for damages. Both the lower Courts have allowed the plaintiff's claim as to the injunction, and directed that the defendant should remove and cut off the portions of the trees in suit which overhang the land of the plaintiff at his expense, failing which the plaintiff is to be at liberty to cut them down at defendant's costs. The damages were not proved and the claim as to damages was consequently disallowed.

In the appeal before us two points have been urged by Mr. Nijure: first, that, as no damages are proved, no injunction could be granted; and, secondly, that the defendant should have been allowed to prove the alleged local custom as to his right to retain the trees overhanging the plaintiff's land.

As to the first point I have no hesitation in disallowing the appellant's contention. It is clear on the authorities, and for the purpose of this point it is not disputed before us, that the plaintiff has the right to cut off those portions of the trees which overhang his land. This right is recognized in Lemmon v. Webb (1), Hari Krishna Joshi v. Shankar Vithal (2) and Lakshmi Narain Banerjee v. Tara Prosanna Banerjee (3). It is conceded that if the plaintiff had sued only for an injunction he could have maintained the action. The last two of the cases cited above are instances of such actions. But it is urged that as the plaintiff has in fact claimed damages and has failed to prove them, his claim as to injunction cannot be allowed. No authority is cited in support of this proposition, and on principle I am unable to make his claim for an injunction dependent upon his ability to prove actual damages. The plaintiff has the right to cut off the overhanging portions of the trees, and, in my opinion, he has the right also to maintain an action to enforce that right if it is disputed, apart from any question of damages. In the present case the matter does not rest there. It has been found by both the Courts that the overhanging trees are likely to cause damage to the plaintiff. Under these circumstances the first point fails.

As regards the alleged custom, the defendant described the custom in the written statement in these terms: "No owner of plantation can make a complaint against another owner even if these trees grow in any direction in the air. There is a Vahivat (custom) to this effect in our province continuing for over thousands of years." When the issues were framed, there was no specific issue raised as to this custom. After the hearing of the suit commenced, an application was made on the 29th of November 1915 in which the defendant requested the Court to raise the issue as to custom in these terms: "Does defendant prove that there is a custom in the village not to complain against overhanging of cocoanut trees over every neighbour's land?" The trial Court disallowed the application of the defendant for this issue and the evidence relating to it. It is urged before us that the trial Court should have allowed the defendant an opportunity of proving this custom. Having regard to the terms of the issue it seems to me that the trial Court was right in disallowing the defendant's application. As stated in the written statement and as indicated in the proposed issue, there is a custom in the village not to complain against the overhanging of cocoanut trees over neighbours' lands. It seems to me that such a custom would not be reasonable and cannot be pleaded. In effect it amounts to a plea that a person whose right to land is infringed cannot sue in respect of that infringement. Apart from the form in which the alleged custom is stated by the defendant, it seems to me that in substance it is indefinite and vague; and, in my opinion, it will serve no useful purpose to direct at this stage an enquiry as to a custom, which, as stated by the defendant, does not appear to be either reasonable or definite.

In this view of the case it is not necessary to consider Mr. Gokhale's argument on behalf of the respondent that there could be no customary easement in respect of the right to overhang the trees on a neighbour's land as such a right is not an easement within the meaning of the definition of 'easement' under the Indian Easements Act. I express no opinion on the general question as to whether the right to retain the trees overhanging the neighbour's land is a customary easement within the meaning of section 18 of the Indian Easements Act.

On these grounds I would dismiss this appeal and confirm the decree of the lower Appellate Court with costs.

KEMP, J.—I agree.

KUTTIVENTI VENKATARAMANAMURTHI v. MACHERLA SUNDARA RAMIAH.

refund of his purchase-money and obtained an order on 1st December 1908 that 1st defendant should within one month deposit in Court the money drawn out by her with interest at 6 per cent.

Subsequently in execution of that order he attached on 15th December 1908 1st defendant's maintenance decree. He applied to sell the property charged under the maintenance decree but his application was dismissed on 22nd April 1910, for what reason it is not clear, from the records before us. Finally he brought this suit in 1911 against defendants Nos. 1 to 5 to recover the purchase-money. In the plaint there is a prayer for sale of the debt of Rs. 607 due to 1st defendant from defendants Nos. 2 to 5. But the Courts below have treated this as a suit by the holder of a decree to enforce a charge and have passed decrees in the form prescribed by Order XXIV, rule 4 (1), Civil Procedure Code.

The points argued in second appeal are (1) whether the plaintiff's suit is maintainable in its present form; (2) whether the plaintiff is entitled to recover from defendants Nos. 2 to 5 the amount due to 1st defendant up to the date of his attachment of the maintenance decree or the amount due to her on the date when this suit was instituted.

In considering the maintainability of the present suit it is necessary to keep distinct the plaintiff's cause of action to recover from 1st defendant the amount of purchase-money taken out of Court to which he alone became entitled upon the sale being set aside, and his cause of action as against defendants Nos. 2 to 5, who are the judgment debtors in the maintenance suit, to execute the decree attached by him as if he were the original decree-holder.

As against 1st defendant the plaintiff as purchaser was entitled by Order XXI, rule 93, to an order for repayment of his purchase-money with or without interest and to execute the order under section 36, Civil Procedure Code, as if it was a decree. He appears to have followed this procedure when he obtained the order of 1st December 1908 and to have executed the order when he attached the maintenance decree.

The interest the plaintiff is entitled to against 1st defendant is interest up to the date of repayment of the purchase-money taken by her. Under Order XXI, rule 93, it was discretionary with the Court to direct the payment of interest and the Court in its order of 1st December in fact fixed the interest at 6 per cent. up to the date of payment. Having got this order it was unnecessary for the plaintiff to get a personal decree against this defendant; but in order that she might be bound by the order or decree to be obtained against defendants Nos. 2 to 5, it might have been advisable to make her a party to any proceedings against the family property of defendants Nos. 2 to 5.

As between defendants Nos. 2 to 5 and the plaintiff there is no privity of contract for the return of his purchase-money. He can only recover it by virtue of his right to step into the shoes of the maintenance decree-holder and to execute her decree in any manner lawful to her [Order XXI, rule 53 (3)].

It was held in Venkatasubhamma v. Venkanna (1) that the maintenance decree-holder must institute a fresh suit and could not, in execution of his or her maintenance decree, bring to sale the properties made subject by that decree to a charge for maintenance. Section 99 of the Transfer of Property Act, which was held to preclude the decree-holder from proceeding in execution, has since been repealed, and it has recently been decided by this Court in Sowbagia Ammal v. Manika Mudali (2) that there is nothing in Order XXXIV, rule 14, which has taken the place of section 99, Transfer of Property Act, to prevent a maintenance decree-holder from proceeding in execution against the properties charged under the maintenance decree. The learned Judges who decided that case remarked that the position of a widow who, by virtue of her maintenance decree, for the first time acquires a charge on specified immoveable properties, is different from that of a holder of a charge under section 100 of the Transfer of Property Act (although section 100 speaks of charges arising by operation of law as well as those created by act of parties), and that it does not fall within the scope of Order

SAKINA BAI v. KANIZ FATIMA BEGUM.

XXXIV, rule 14 We are not prepared to dissent from their opinion.

Accordingly it was open to the plaintiff as representative of the maintenance decree-holder under Order XXI, rule 53, to proceed to attach and bring to sale the defendants' immovable property. Instead of doing so he has launched this suit, alleging in his plaint that all the parties agreed that that was his only remedy. The question of estoppel has been argued before us but it is unnecessary to go into it, as there was no issue raised on the point at the trial and as the plaintiff's suit need not be dismissed simply on the ground that his proper remedy lay in execution, seeing that under section 47, Civil Procedure Code, it was always open to the Court in which the suit was instituted to treat the suit as a proceeding and deal with it accordingly.

The objection to the suit is a good objection. The plaintiff is not the holder of the charge nor the transferee of the maintenance decree-holder's interest. He has not as yet brought the maintenance decree to sale and purchased it himself. He has not done more than attach the decree, an act which gives him a right to execute the decree by virtue of Order XXI, rule 53 (3), but not a right to institute a suit as mortgagee for the sale of the mortgaged property, as that right remains vested in the holder of the charge or mortgage, namely, 1st defendant. As regards interest the plaintiff appears to be entitled to recover it up to the date of repayment of his purchase-money from the defendants Nos. 2 to 5 to an extent not exceeding the past and future maintenance due to 1st defendant on the date of plaintiff's instituting these proceedings. The Appellate Court has exonerated 1st defendant from interest and the plaintiff has not appealed.

We allow the 3rd defendant's appeal with costs here and in the Courts below, and we remand the plaintiff's suit to the Court of the District Munsif for being disposed of as a proceeding in execution under section 47 (2), Civil Procedure Code.

The operative part of a sanad recited that Government had granted a taluka with all lands cultivated or uncultivated to one K. for his life as revenue-free jagir by way of maintenance and that after the death of K the taluka would continue to stand in the name of his children as a permanent zemindari assessed to a light amount of jama.

Messrs. A. M. Dunne, K. C., and Ramsay, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

LORD PARKER OF WADDINGTON.—In this case the respondent, a widow, having obtained a decree for dower against the appellants, attached a number of villages inherited by the judgment-debtors from her deceased husband. Objection was taken to the attachment on the ground that the villages constituted a political pension within section (60) (g) of the Code of Civil Procedure. The Subordinate Judge upheld this objection, but his decision was reversed on appeal by the High Court of Allahabad. The appellants are now appealing to His Majesty in Council from the decision of the High Court.

Their Lordships are of opinion that the point at issue depends entirely upon the true construction of the Sanad under which the appellants derive their title. This Sanad, a translation of which will be found on pages 88 to 92 of the record, is dated the 13th August 1819 and it appears from the recitals (1) that one Karim Khan, the appellants' ancestor, was then entitled to receive from the Government Rs. 16,000, whether by way of pension for his life or as a lump sum payment is not very material; (2) that the Government had recently purchased a Pargana, comprising the villages in question in the suit, from the Raja of Barhiapur; and (3) that the premises granted were intended to be in lieu of Rs. 10,000 out of the Rs. 16,000 which Karim Khan was entitled to receive.

The operative part of the Sanad witnesses that the Government had granted the "Taluka" of the said Pargana together with all lands cultivated or uncultivated to Karim Khan for his life as "revenue-free Jagir by way of maintenance," and that "after the death of Karim Khan the said Ilaka will continue to stand in the names of his children and Ahfad as a permanent Zemindari assessed to a light amount of jama".

The appellants contend that the subject-matter of the grant witnessed by this Sanad is not the Pargana which the Government had purchased, but the revenue which prior to the purchase had been payable in respect of such Pargana. Karim Khan is, according to them, entitled to receive such revenue for his life without paying any jama in respect thereof. After his death his descendants are to receive it, paying a light jama, which will be subsequently assessed. In this way they contend that what is granted to Karim Khan for life and afterwards to his descendants, is merely the right to a money payment in the nature of a pension. The respondent, on the other hand, contends that the subject-matter of the grant is the Pargana itself with the lands, whether cultivated or waste, to be held by Karim Khan for life, revenue-free, and by his descendants after his death subject only to a light jama, in other words, that the subject-matter of the grant is land, and not a money payment in the nature of pension.

Their Lordships are of opinion that the contention of the respondent is correct. It may be true that the use of the words "Taluka", "Ilaka", "Jagir," and "Zemindari" is not entirely inconsistent with the appellants' construction of the Sanad, but these words point, in their Lordships' opinion, to the grant being a grant of land rather than of revenue charged on land.

It will be observed that what the Khan is to enjoy for his life is the usufruct of the Ilaka, as well as the Zemindari rights. According to the appellants' contention, he is to have only Zemindari rights in the sense of a right to collect the revenue, whereas the word usufruct appears to point to an actual occupation and user of the soil, subject, of course, to the rights of third parties. The word "Jagir" primarily points to occupancy, though it may be occupancy of an office, such as that of collector of revenue. Where, however, a Jagir held for life only is, as in this Sanad, used in contradistinction to an Ilaka held as a permanent Zemindari, it is an almost necessary inference that the occupancy referred to is an occupancy of land.

Their Lordships find it impossible to distinguish this Sanad from the Sanad in question in the case of Amna Bibi v. Najam-unnissa Bibi (1) and they agree with the decision in that case. They also agree with the Court below that the correspondence on which the unreported case relied on by the Subordinate Judge appears to have turned is quite irrelevant upon a question of construction.

The only other point to which reference need be made is the contention that the Sanad was in the case of the descendants of Karim Khan, as well as of Karim Khan himself, a maintenance grant, and that in consequence the premises granted, even if consisting of land, were inalienable and, therefore, not subject to attachment. The answer to this contention is a simple one. In the case of Karim Khan the grant is expressed to be for his maintenance. In the case of his descendants, it is not. The right inference, therefore, is that it was not a maintenance grant in the latter case, though it was in the former.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal fails and should be dismissed with costs.

A transfer of a share of the profits of a village which have at the time actually accrued due, is an assignment of a debt and not of a mere right to sue and is, therefore, not bad in law under the provisions of section 6 (c) of the Transfer of Property Act, although the transfer of a right to sue is a necessary incident of the transaction [p. 634, col. 2.]

Lakshmi Narayan, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The learned Counsel for the appellant has confined his arguments in appeal to two points only and contests the decision of the lower Court on no other point.

The first point is with regard to the legality of the assignment to plaintiffs Nos. 6—8. He contends that this assignment is bad in law under the provisions of section 6, clause (c), Act IV of 1882.

The second point is with regard to the amount of profits to be awarded. He contends that the terms of the sulahnama of 1865 are still in force and that they confine the profits to Rs. 1,200 a year, the enjoyment of certain land rent-free, and the financing of certain family ceremonies.

The respondents argued that the appellant cannot take up the first point, as he definitely abandoned it, according to their assertion, in the lower Court. We could not go so far as to say that he definitely abandoned it, and we allowed the Counsel for the appellant to argue it.

The facts are as follows:—Plaintiffs Nos. 1—5 applied to the Revenue Court for partition of a 4/5ths share in six villages. The appellant disputing their proprietary title, they filed a suit in the Civil Court on 29th June 1909, and satisfactorily established their title. The decree affirming their title and their right to partition was finally affirmed by the Court of the Judicial Commissioner on 17th February 1913. This decree impliedly gave title to plaintiffs Nos. 1—6 to recover the profits of a 4/5ths share of the six villages from the appellant from March 1904, the date of his father's death. The right of recovery was subject, of course, to the provisions of the law of limitation. On the 8th March 1912 plaintiffs Nos. 1—5 transferred to plaintiffs Nos. 6—8 (the present respondents) their rights in the profits of the three years preceding the date of the transfer, that is to say, for the three Fasli years 1317, 1318 and 1319, the Rabi profits of 1319 being in existence on 8th March 1912. The deed of transfer provided that the transferees might retain excesses in certain events, and should in other events be remunerated on a sliding scale.

There is nothing objectionable in the terms of the deed of transfer. It assigns profits actually in existence for valuable consideration. The learned Counsel for the appellant argues that it is bad in essence as a transfer of a right to sue. If it were a transfer of a mere right to sue it would be bad in law, but we consider that it is not a transfer of a mere right to sue, but an assignment of a debt. The transfer of the right to sue was a necessary incident of the transaction, but does not affect the essence of the transaction which was an assignment of a debt. That debt, though not an ascertained amount, or liquidated, was definitely ascertainable. It was not an amount awardable at the discretion or volition of a Court. It was not of the nature of damages. The appellant as Lambardar was under an obligation to disburse to the other co-sharers their legal profits, but he had to disburse them not as damages personal to himself, but as their share of the collections that he made on their behalf and his own. There is nothing in common between such profits and mesne profits to which reference is made in Shyam Chand Koondoo v. Land Mortgage Bank of India, Limited (1) and Durga Chunder Roy v. Koilas Chunder Roy (2), which were damages due from a trespasser, or compensation for the wrongful attachment of moveable property in execution of a decree [Pragi Lal v. Fateh Chand (3)] or damages for breach of contract [Abu Mahomed v. S. C. Chunder (4)]. In all the latter cases the transfers were clearly transfers of the right to sue and nothing else, but here the situation is completely different. We, therefore, find against the contention of the learned Counsel for the appellant upon the first point.

Our decision upon the second point is that the limitation of profits under the terms of the Sulahnama of 1865 existed until the death of Lachhman Singh only. After the death of the latter the remaining sharers took the rights to profits of ordinary members of a co-parcenary body of revenue payers. This was not a case of members of a joint Hindu family.

This concludes all the points argued in the appeal. We dismiss the appeal. The appellant will pay his own costs and those of the respondents.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 108 (j), 115—Lease, assignment of—Assignee, position of—Forfeiture of lease.

Section 115 of the Transfer of Property Act designedly confines forfeiture to the case of an under-lease, so that where a lessee has assigned his entire interest under the lease the assignee's interest cannot be forfeited by any act of the original lessee. [p. 635, col. 2; p. 637, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

BEAMAN, J.—The plaintiff sued the defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 in ejectment as upon a forfeiture for the recovery of the demised land and arrears of rent primarily from defendants Nos. 1 and 2, the plaintiff's lessees, and thereafter generally, should they not be liable, from whomever the Court should find responsible. The 4th defendant is merely a tenant of defendant No. 3, and we are not concerned with her. The plaintiff's father originally let the land permanently to the grandfather of defendants Nos. 1 and 2, and defendants Nos. 1 and 2 in turn assigned this permanent lease to defendant No. 3. Now, along with the assignment of a lease go all covenants running with the land and there remain only in the assignor personal covenants or obligations which may be enforced against him by the lessor. By such assignments privity of estate is at once established between the original lessor and the assignee of the lease; and should the lessor accept rent from the assignee, then privity of contract is likewise established, and the resulting position is that the original lessee, the assignor, stands liable merely as a surety to the lessor for all the contractual covenants of the lease. I think it follows from this very clearly that mere repudiation by the original lessee of the lessor's title will not work a forfeiture against the assignee of the lease. That is the only ground upon which forfeiture was asked in the present suit. The case will be entirely different where it is a sub lease, or, as it is called in section 115 of the Transfer of Property Act, an under-lease. But having regard to the change in the legal rights and obligations of the first lessor and lessee upon the assignment of the whole lease, I think it must follow (and this rule must be a rule without exception) that no mere act of the kind complained of by the first lessee can operate so seriously to the prejudice of the assignee of the lease. It is true that some attempt may be thought to have been made to provide against such abuses by the terms of section 115 of the Transfer of Property Act. But since that section, in my opinion, is confined, and intended to be confined, to cases of sub-leases, or under-leases or parting with part of the interest under the original lease, the principles which will come into play would be very different from those upon which the rights and obligations of a lessor and the assignee of a complete lease will have to be inquired into and determined. Therefore, I think that the Court below was quite right in rejecting the plaintiff's claim to recover possession of the land as upon a forfeiture. The assignee of the lease has never denied the plaintiff's title and has expressed himself ready and willing to pay all the rent due to the plaintiff under the assigned lease. It is true that he says that he has actually paid that rent to his assignor in the belief that he in turn was passing it on to the original lessor, the plaintiff. It is pretty clear, I think, that the plaintiff did not desire to recover the rent from the assignee, thus establishing privity of contract as well as privity of estate between them, and that is the reason, I should think, why matters have been allowed to drift on as they have done. It is also true that the rent is very small, only Rs. 3 a year, and that the plaintiff would doubtless have been very glad to forego it, if by doing so he could have regained possession of the demised land. The decree of the lower Court, however, only allows the plaintiff rent against the original lessees, defendants Nos. 1 and 2. That, in the circumstances, I think, is wrong and that the defendant No. 3 should be made under the decree jointly liable for the arrears of rent. Had he contested the point, it might have needed more consideration, but he does not contest it and his Pleader has expressed his readiness to accept joint liability for the arrears of rent decreed against defendants Nos. 1 and 2. That being so, and with that small amendment, I would confirm the decree of the lower Appellate Court, but the result would be slightly different since the suit could not be dismissed against defendants Nos. 3 and 4. And the proper order would be that the plaintiff's suit should be decreed to the extent of obtaining all arrears of rent against defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 jointly and that no relief need be awarded against defendant No. 4, and that the suit in so far as it was to recover possession of the land should be dismissed. But the plaintiff should have his costs throughout from defendants Nos. 1 and 2. Defendant No. 3 should pay his own costs, and the plaintiff should pay the costs of defendant No. 4 throughout.

HEATON, J.—This appeal raises an interesting and an important point. It appears that in 1867 a person, whom I will call the lessor, leased certain property to the lessee. In the year 1883 the lessee transferred absolutely the whole of his interest in the property to the father of defendant No. 3, whom I will call the assignee. Quite recently it happened that the rent was not paid by the lessee and as clause (1) of section 108 of the Transfer of Property Act tells us, the lessee was still liable to pay the rent, although he had parted with his interest to the assignee; though, of course, he on his part was entitled to recover whatever rent was agreed upon between him and the assignee. However, the rent payable to the lessor fell into arrears, and on a demand for it by the lessor, the lessee repudiated the lessor's title. I think that it is clear in this case that if the only persons concerned had been the lessor and the lessee the latter would have incurred a forfeiture, for a suit brought by a lessor has been held to show his intention to enforce the forfeiture and put an end to the lease. In this case, therefore, it seems to me that there is a clear case of forfeiture as between the lessor and the lessee, were they the only persons concerned. But the defendant No. 3, the assignee, very naturally asserts that at any rate there was no forfeiture of his interest in the property. He has never repudiated the lessor's title, nor has he failed to pay rent demanded from him. Both the lower Courts held that there is no forfeiture of the interest of defendant No. 3 and the suit as regards possession has been dismissed, and I think rightly dismissed, for it is futile to grant a decree for possession against defendants Nos. 1 and 2, the representatives of the original lessees, and it would be wrong to make a decree for possession against defendant No. 3, the assignee. The reason why I think it would be wrong to make such a decree against the assignee is to be found primarily in section 115 of the Transfer of Property Act. I have already referred to clause (j) of section 108. That clause empowers the lessee to transfer his interest absolutely, or by way of mortgage, or by sub-lease, clearly recognising these different methods of transfer and the different interests which they cover. Then, we have the general law as to forfeiture which is contained in clause (g) of section 111. Then, we come to section 115, the second part of which says that the forfeiture of a lease annuls all under-leases except in particular cases which we need not consider. But it does not enact that forfeiture annuls any other kind of transfer by the lessee except the under-lease, and seeing that other kinds of transfers are, as I have pointed out, clearly recognised, I infer that the second part of section 115 designedly confines forfeiture to the case of an under-lease. That in itself would, I think, justify the inference that where the lessee has transferred his interest in other ways than by way of under-lease the transferee's interest is not forfeited by the act of the original lessee. I cannot find in the Transfer of Property Act anything which seems to me to suggest that this conclusion is erroneous. For instance, if we turn to clause (e) of section 111, we find forfeiture provided for where the lessee does certain things, and that word, reading this part of the Transfer of Property Act as a whole, does not seem to me to mean the lessee or his assignee. Then the provisions about the assignment, to which I have already referred, give the power of assignment and on an assignment the interest of the lessee is vested in the assignee. The general intention of the Act is made clearer still, I think, by the words of section 108, which enacts that the benefit of the lease shall be annexed to, and go with, the lessee's interest as such, and may be enforced by every person in whom that interest is from time to time vested. It seems to me, therefore, clear that the Transfer of Property Act does very emphatically recognise that his interest in the property may be transferred by a lessee to an assignee and this may be done without the consent of the lessor, and if that can be done, it seems to me to follow as a matter of reason that when the entire interest is transferred by the lessee to the assignee, then the assignee is not responsible for acts done by the lessee. His responsibilities are those arising out of his acquired interest in the property leased. That being the general conclusion at which I have arrived from a study of the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act, I think that the decrees of the lower Courts were quite correct in refusing to direct the dispossession of defendant No. 3. But as the assignee gets the interest in the property, so also he becomes liable to the obligations attaching to that interest, and one of those obligations is the payment of rent, not merely to the lessee or assignor, but to the original landlord, the lessor, and though the assignee is not under any direct obligation personally to pay the lessor, yet if the rent is not paid, the lessor can demand it not only from his original lessee but also from the person to whom the lessee's interests have been transferred. That seems to me to follow as a matter of reason just as clearly as the other conclusion follows, i.e., that the assignee is not responsible for the acts of the lessee after the lessor has assigned his interest in the property.

Therefore, just as I think that the decrees of the lower Courts were right in refusing a decree of dispossession against defendant No. 3, I think they were wrong in refusing to make defendant No. 3 responsible equally with defendants Nos. 1 and 2 for the arrears of rent. And so I agree with the decree proposed by my learned brother.

JUDGMENT.

WALMSLEY, J.—These appeals are by the tenants and they arise out of proceedings under section 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The plaintiffs were the two landlords Tara Sankar and Kali Sankar. After the decision of the lower Appellate Court, Kali Sankar died leaving two sons, Asutosh a major and Sudhansu a minor. The appellants applied to have the heirs of Kali Sankar substituted and caused a notice to be issued to Asutosh calling upon him to show cause why he should not be appointed guardian of his minor brother. Asutosh did not appear. Orders were then passed by the Court that the Deputy Registrar should be appointed guardian of Sudhansu. Defendants failed to pay the costs of the Deputy Registrar, with the result that on 12th June 1918 a Bench of this Court ordered that the appeals should stand dismissed as against the minor at the risk of the appellants. The only respondents, therefore, now before the Court are Tara Sankar, one of the original plaintiffs, and Asutosh, one of the two sons of the second plaintiff.

A preliminary objection is taken on behalf of the respondents that in the absence of Sudhansu the appeals cannot proceed on the ground that all the parties necessary for the determination of the case are not before the Court. It is pointed out that the case arose out of an application made under section 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act for settlement of fair rents and for enhancement and that such an application must under section 188 be made by all the landlords; but the result of what has happened in the course of the present appeals is that one of the landlords is now absent. Reference is made to the case of Bejoy Gopal Bose v. Umesh Chandra Bose (1), where a somewhat similar situation arose. The Judges there held, "The decree was a joint decree in favour of all the plaintiffs, and if the defendant desired to question the correctness of that decree, he was bound to bring before the Court all the parties affected by that decree," and the appeal was dismissed as he had not done so. Another case is Tarip Dafadar v. Rhote annessa (2). A third case is Basir Sheikh v. Fazle Karim Biswas (3). It is urged on behalf of the tenants that between the case of Bejoy Gopal Bose v. Umesh Chandra Bose (1) and that of Basir Sheikh v. Fazle Karim Biswas (3) the new Civil Procedure Code came into force; and the difference between Order XXII, rule 4, of the new Code and section 362 of the old Code is emphasized. Under the law as it now stands the words "as against the deceased defendant" have been added after the words "the suit shall abate." It is also pointed out that in the case of Basir Sheikh v. Fazle Karim Biswas (3) the Judges proceeded very much on the ground that two of the plaintiffs being omitted from the appeal they would be able to execute the decree in its entirety. That is one of the reasons given. But the learned Judges also referred to the cases of Bejoy Gopal Bose v. Umesh Chandra Bose (1) and Tarip Dofadar v. Khotejannessa (2) which I have just mentioned, and it appears to me that those earlier cases proceeded not on the words of section 368 but on the general principle that all the parties necessary for the disposal of the case must be brought before the Court.

I think, therefore, that the preliminary objection must be sustained and the appeals referred by the tenants be dismissed with costs, one gold mohur in each case.

The learned Vakil on behalf of the landlords intimates that he withdraws the cross-objections filed in connection with these appeals. We make no order as to costs, in the cross-objections.

section 47, Civil Procedure Code. The execution applications were dismissed by the Munsif under Order XXI, rule 14, for failure to produce a certified extract from the khewat as ordered. The appeals have been dismissed by the District Judge and the decreeholder appeals. It appears to me that the appellant is right in his contentions that Order XXI, rule 14, does not apply. In neither case was the application one for the attachment of land. The decree passed was one for sale on a mortgage where a preliminary attachment is not necessary, and the execution applications, which I have perused, merely ask for sale of the property, not for its attachment. In Appeal No. 40 there is an additional reason why the rule does not apply as the application does not relate to land at all. The property the sale of which is asked for consists exclusively of trees. I accordingly allow both appeals and direct that the execution applications be restored to the file. The appellant will have costs of the appeals.

Appeal allowed.

JUDGMENT.

BEAMAN, J.—In my opinion the Courts below were right in holding this suit barred. The plaintiff's adoption was challenged in 1901 and his rights were clearly interfered with as a result of that litigation. That is plain from the frame of the present suit, in which he seeks to have it declared that he is not bound by the decrees in the former suit. It is, therefore, in my opinion, clearly a case within the principle of Jagadamba's case [Jagadamba Chaodhrani v. Dakhina Mohun Roy Chaodhri (1)]. That case was made the foundation of a Full Bench decision of this Court in Shrinivas v. Hanmant (2) and although there have been two later decisions of the Privy Council in the cases of Thakur Tirbhuwan Bahadur Singh v. Raja Rameshar Bakhsh Singh (3) and Muhammad Umar Khan v. Muhammad Niaz-ud-Din Khan (4), which may appear to conflict with the principle of Jagadamba's case (1), it was pointed out by a Bench of this Court in the case of Shrinivas Sarjerao v. Balvant Venkatesh (5) that those decisions left the authority of Shrinivas v. Hanmant (2), as far as this Court is concerned, quite unshaken. I entirely concur with that view. Having carefully considered those decisions of the Privy Council, it is clear that neither of them professes to overrule Jagadamba's case (1), although without any reference to it there is one sentence in the later Privy Council case which appears to conflict with it. However that may be, we are bound by the authority of our own High Court. Under that authority the plaintiff was bound to bring his suit within six years to establish his adoption. He failed to do so; and, inasmuch as he admittedly cannot succeed in this litigation without establishing the validity of his adoption, it follows that his present suit is out of time and ought to have been dismissed, as it was dismissed by the lower Courts, with all costs upon the plaintiff. I think this appeal must likewise be dismissed with all costs upon the plaintiff.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the plaintiff sued for a decree for the dissolution of his partnership with the defendants and the learned Sub-Judge dismissed the plaintiff's suit on a point taken for the first time in his Court, namely, that the suit was not maintainable as, assuming the facts alleged in the plaint to be true, there was, in law, no partnership.

These facts were contained in the 3rd, 4th and 5th paragraphs. Paragraph 3 says that the plaintiff and the 1st defendant entered into an arrangement in or about December 1907 to construct at their joint expense a boat and another smaller boat attached to it, the plaintiff making certain advances towards it, among certain other stipulations which need not be gone into in detail, and agreeing that the licenses, when the boat was completed, should be taken in the name of the 1st defendant, that the boats should be plied for hire, that the 1st defendant should keep the accounts and that net profits and losses derived from the user of the boats should be shared equally between the plaintiff and the defendants. Paragraph 4 sets out the amount advanced by the plaintiff towards the capital and paragraph 5 states that the 1st defendant had been letting the boat for hire and managing the whole business and had earned large sums of money by way of profit from her use, for which he had not accounted to the plaintiff.

Now, the learned Subordinate Judge, having perused a section in Lord Lindley on Partnership on this extremely difficult subject, apparently has come to the conclusion that people who own a ship in common in no circumstances are partners. The law of England no doubt is that a mere part ownership of a ship does not constitute the relation of a partner. That is clearly stated in all the books and in all the cases. And there is no doubt that section 239 of the Indian Contract Act has tended to import into the law of this country some of the very fine distinctions derived from the law of England, where special reasons of public policy led to the making of these close distinctions between mere co ownership and co-partnership in regard to the vessels. Although it is quite true that the co-ownership in a vessel does not constitute the relation of partners but merely that of tenants-in-common, yet when the ship begins to be put to use, to earn freight, a very different state of things exists. Abbott on Merchant Shipping, Part I, Chapter III, page 132 of the 14th Edition, says this: "Firstly, co-owners are, as such, tenants-in-common of their ship: and, secondly, if they employ their ship in earning freight, or otherwise as a money making machine, they become joint adventurers or partners in the employment," and for that proposition Green v. Briggs (1) is cited. That is a very long judgment of Wigram, V. C., and he cites Holderness v. Shackels (2) and says this: "The Court distinguished between the ship itself and her earnings; and held in that case that although part owners were tenants-in-common of the ship, they were jointly interested in the use and employment of the ship, and that the law as to earnings must follow the law in partnership cases." And in Hill, Ex parte (3), the Vice-Chancellor said: "There is no lien on the ship because that was not joint property, but the earnings of the ship would have been joint property and liable to the joint creditors, not from any doctrine peculiar to the earnings of a ship, but on the general principles applicable to the joint property of every partnership. If, in this case, the Thames had been employed on a whaling voyage, and the money now at the Bank represented the cargo, no dispute could have arisen. Then is freight, qua earnings, distinguishable from other earnings of a ship, for the purpose under consideration? In the absence of authority establishing such distinction, or a clear principle requiring me to adopt it, I will not admit it."

In Young, Ex parte (4), one of the cases relied on by the respondents' Vakil, in which Lord Eldon's mind was distinctly called to the distinction between the ship and her earnings, he said, "I have no doubt that freight is liable to the joint demand. As to the ship, it stands upon the nice distinction of a tenancy-in-common".

And I notice that Lord Lindley points out there are two cases under the English Law of employment of a ship, one is where she is employed by some only of the total co-owners, which, in English Law, can be done against the will of the rest. For reasons of public policy it has been held that the majority of the co-owners of the ship who wish to employ her may force the hands of others. Therefore, one sees that, if a ship is employed under these conditions, it may very well be right that the law should guard the unwilling co-owners from being made co-adventurers in an employment which they did not approve of. With regard to the second case what Lord Lindley says at page 37 is this: "Where a ship is employed by all the part-owners, or by some of them, but not against the will of the others, they all share her gross earnings, and contribute to the expenses incurred in obtaining them and in such a case there is little, if any, difference between the account which is taken between the part owners and that which would be taken if they were actually partners." And similarly Abbott lays it down quite plainly at page 133 that "each part owner, who does not before the commencement of an adventure effectually withdraw authority from his co-owners to sail the ship on his behalf, is liable as a partner for the whole of the expenses of that adventure." We, therefore, hold that, so far as the earnings of the ship go as regards the freight that she earns, on the allegations in the plaint there exists a partnership between the plaintiff and the defendants, and the plaintiff, if he can prove these allegations, will be entitled to a dissolution of partnership and taking of accounts as regards freight. But he is not a partner but only a co-owner in respect of the actual hull of the ship and he will not be entitled, in any event, to have his prayer granted as regards the sale of the boat or boats used by the partnership.

(1) (1848) 17 L. J. Ch. 323; 6 Hare 395; 67 E. R. 1219; 12 Jur. 326; 77 R. R. 156.

The preliminary objection on which the learned Subordinate Judge dismissed the case was due to a misapprehension and it must be remanded to him for disposal upon the merits. The appellant will have the costs in this Court. The costs in the Courts below will be costs in the cause.

JUDGMENT—This is a case stated for the opinion of the Court under section 90 and Order XXXVI of the Code of Civil Procedure. The plaintiffs, who are the Municipal Commissioner and the Municipal Corporation for the City of Bombay, seek to recover from the defendant, who is the present acting Principal of the Wilson College, municipal property taxes in respect of the buildings known as hostels belonging to that College. The Wilson College is affiliated to the University of Bombay. Section 21 (1) of the Indian Universities Act, 1904, provides that a College applying for affiliation to an University must satisfy the Syndicate of the University, inter alia, "(c) that the buildings in which the College is to be located are suitable, and that provision will be made, in conformity with the regulations, for the residence, in the College or in lodgings approved by the College, of students not residing with their parents or guardians, and for the supervision and physical welfare of students;" "(f) that due provision will, so far as circumstances may permit, be made for the residence of the Head of the College and some members of the teaching staff in or near the College or the place provided for the residence of students."

Under section 25 (1) and (2) (m) the Senate of an University is empowered with the sanction of the Government to make regulations to provide, inter alia, for the residence and conduct of students, and the Senate of the Bombay University has accordingly made the following regulation, viz., "that each College shall provide residential quarters for such a percentage of its students as the Syndicate may from time to time approve." In order to satisfy the requirements of the provisions of section 21 (1) (c) of the Indian Universities Act, 1904, and pursuant to the above quoted regulation, the Wilson College has erected three buildings known as hostels, two of which are in the College compound and the third in close proximity to the same, for the use of its students. The first is capable of accommodating thirty students, the second, forty-four students, and the third, one hundred and twenty-six students. It appears that in addition to the students an European Professor and an Indian Superintendent reside in the first and second hostels and an European Superintendent and an Assistant Superintendent reside in the third hostel, and that all these are on the staff of the College. In the second hostel a peon is accommodated in the outer compound. The fees payable by students of the Wilson College in respect of each of the two terms in a year are as follows:—

1 Non-resident students, Rs. 48, and a sum of Rs. 3 as subscription towards the Gymkhana.

2. Resident students the above sums of Rs. 48 and Rs. 3 and an additional fee—the average amount of which is about Rs. 23.

Pursuant to section 140 (c) of the City of Bombay Municipal Act, 1888, the Municipal Commissioner has caused the three hostels to be assessed for payment of the general tax as set out in paragraphs 8 and 9 of the case.

The defendant contends that the Wilson College is exempt under section 143 (1) (a) and (2) (d) of the City of Bombay Municipal Act, 1888, from payment of the general tax in respect of the three hostels. Section 143 (1) (a) and (2) (d) runs as follows:—

"(1) The general tax shall be levied in respect of all buildings and lands in the city, except

(a) Buildings and lands or portions thereof exclusively occupied for public worship or for charitable purposes;

(2) The following buildings and lands or portions thereof shall not be deemed to be buildings exclusively occupied for public worship or for charitable purposes within the meaning of clause (a), viz.,

(d) Those in respect of which rent is derived, whether such rent is or is not applied exclusively to religious or charitable purposes."

Mr. Campbell for the plaintiffs has very fairly conceded that he is not going to contend that the fees paid by the resident students are rent within the meaning of subsection (2) (d) of section 143 of the City of Bombay Municipal Act, 1888. The main contention of Mr. Campbell for the plaintiffs is that these three hostels are not exclusively occupied for charitable purposes.

It seems to me that it would be better and certainly more convenient to divide for the purposes of argument hostels into portions occupied by students, and portions occupied by the Professor, Superintendents and Assistant Superintendent. The plaintiffs contend that both these portions are rateable for payment of general tax, as they are not exclusively occupied for charitable purposes within the meaning of section 143 (1) (c) of the City of Bombay Municipal Act. The onus to prove that they are so occupied is on the defendant. Let us, then, first consider the question of the portion occupied by students. From the statement of the case it appears that the resident students on an average pay Rs. 23 more per term than the non-resident students. Then the question arises: Are students tenants of the College? In my opinion they are clearly not; for none of the incidents relating to tenancy exists in a case like this. The students have to observe certain rules framed for regulating their conduct; they are liable to be turned out of their rooms at any time without notice and without refund of fees or part of fees. Certain restrictions are placed even on their user of the rooms in their occupation, and it is evident that there would be no discipline if these students were regarded as regular tenants of the College and had their legal rights of tenants. I, therefore, hold that the extra sum paid by resident students is not paid as rent within the meaning of sub clause (d) of section 143 (2) of the City of Bombay Municipal Act, but is an additional fee paid by them for the advantages derived by them and more attention paid to them for looking after their social, moral and physical welfare than the non-resident students of the College who pay a less fee.

Then the next question for consideration is that—is the portion of the hostels occupied by the students exclusively occupied for charitable purposes within the meaning of section 143 (1) (a)? It must be borne in mind that the words "charitable purposes" must not be taken in their popular sense and as it was held in the case of University of Bombay v. Municipal Commissioner, Bombay (1), the words "charitable purposes" have acquired a technical meaning in the Presidency of Bombay and in that sense they include all purposes within the meaning of Statute 43 Eliz., c. IV. It is not disputed that the College is a charitable institution. Then, is the hostel an integral part of the College as contended by Mr. Mirza for the defendant? In my opinion, the hostel cannot be considered a part of the College but must be regarded as a separate institution which every College must erect and maintain; for the Indian Universities Act, 1904, contemplates that the College authorities will provide accommodation in the College itself or in some convenient building near it for the residence of the students who are not living with their parents or guardians and for some members of the teaching staff in or near the College or the place provided for the residence of such students. Therefore, it is incumbent upon every College affiliated to the University to provide quarters for such students. Further, it is admitted that the Syndicate of the University requires the College authorities to submit periodical-ly a statement of students for whom residence is provided in the hostel. I must, therefore, hold that hostels are erected and maintained by the College as part of the general educational scheme of the country and the object of the hostel is the advancement of learning and it, therefore, falls within the general objects which are charitable and which are mentioned by Lord Macnaghten in Income Tax Commissioners v. Pemsel (2) and, therefore, the portions occupied by the resident students are exempt from taxation, as they are exclusively occupied for charitable purposes within the meaning of section 143 (1) (a) of the City of Bombay Municipal Act.

Now as to the portion occupied by the Professor and Superintendents. On behalf of the plaintiffs it is contended that this occupation must be held to be a beneficial one and therefore rateable. Bearing in mind the fact that hostels are provided for residence of students who do not reside with their parents or guardians and that the Indian Universities Act, 1904, section 21 (1) (c), contemplates that the College authorities will perform the duty of supervising, looking after and taking care of students residing in the hostel, how can a College discharge the duty imposed upon them by the Legislature except some one, or so many of their teaching staff as are necessary, reside in the hostel? That is why a Superintendent is given quarters in the hostel for the proper discharge of the duties imposed upon them by the College authorities and as required by the Indian Universities Act. In my opinion, it is absolutely necessary for the scheme of education that provision must be made for the residence of necessary members of the teaching staff to reside in the quarters provided for students. Residence for such members is compulsory for the scheme of education for the proper discharge of their duties. Materials and details are necessary to come to a definite conclusion as to whether more than one Superintendent is necessary for the proper supervision and physical welfare of students or that the portions now occupied by a Professor and Superintendents are absolutely necessary for that purpose, or that any portion of such quarters is used for any other purpose. These are considerations necessary to determine the question before the Court: Bent v. Roberts (3) and the case of The Oxford Rate (4). Mr. Mirza for the defendant offered to adduce evidence by calling the defendant but the plaintiffs' Counsel would not agree to this course being adopted, and it is settled practice that where a special case is stated by consent it can only be re-opened by mutual consent: Hamilton, Fraser & Co. v. Staley, Radford & Co. (5).

On the materials before me it appears that in the first hostel there is accommodation for thirty students and in the second, for forty-four, and that although these are regarded as two buildings, it is really one as there is intercommunication between them, and the third hostel has accommodation for one hundred and twenty-six students. I, therefore, hold, on the materials before me, that the premises occupied by one Superintendent for the first and second hostels and the premises occupied by one Superintendent in the third hostel and the portion occupied by the peon in the outer compound are necessary for the discharge of their duties of supervision and physical welfare of students as required by section 21 (1) (c) of the Indian Universities Act and are exempt from taxation under section 143 (1) (a). As to the portions occupied by the Professor and the other Superintendents or Assistant Superintendent, I have no evidence to show what the terms of their employment are or what their duties are such as to make their presence on the premises absolutely necessary for educational purposes and for due performance and proper discharge of the duties imposed upon them by the College; and, therefore, the portions occupied by them will, under the circumstances, be liable for taxation, but I will give liberty to the defendant to prove when occasion arises that the terms of their employment and their duties are such as to make their presence on the premises absolutely necessary and that the portions occupied by them are necessary and are exclusively occupied for that purpose.

Therefore, the answer to the question submitted is that the defendant as representing the Wilson College is liable to be rated for the general tax leviable under section 140 (c) of the City of Bombay Municipal Act in respect of the parts of the hostels occupied by persons other than the students and one Superintendent in the first and second hostel and one in the third hostel and the peon. Each party to bear its own costs.

Answer accordingly.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal has arisen out of a suit in ejectment. The plaintiff Sardar Karam Singh is the Talukdar of the village and the allegation in the plaint was that the three defendants, Ghirrao, his son Babu Ram and his brother Matadin, had been tenants in the village of Damodra belonging to the plaintiff. It was alleged that they had been ejected by process of law from their holding and the plaintiff brought this suit for the purpose of having them ejected from the residential house which they occupy in the village. The plaintiff's case was that having ceased to be cultivators in the village the defendants had no longer any right to retain the house. The Talukdar stated that he was unwilling to allow them to remain in the village. He asked them to vacate the land upon which their house stands and they had refused to do so; and it was this refusal which constituted the cause of action for this suit.

It was admitted that Ghirrao, the 1st defendant, had been ejected from the holding in the village but the plea was taken that the members of the family to which the defendants belonged were not really cultivators but village Pandits. It was denied that the second and the third defendants had followed the calling of an agriculturist.

This question was determined against the defendants by both the Courts below. The learned Subordinate Judge in his judgment has come to the conclusion that the defendants are agriculturists and that the family originally settled in the village as such. There is documentary evidence to show that Bhawani Din, the father of the first and the third defendants, was a cultivator in this village as far back as the year 1868. I am bound by the finding of the lower Appellate Court and this matter is concluded. It follows, therefore, that if these people have been ejected from their agricultural holding in this village, they have no right to occupy a house in the village abodi against the will of the Zemindar. This is, as I understand it, the general law which applies in this part of the country to the relations between landlords and tenants. The law has been expounded in a judgment of Knox, J., which is to be found reported as Shohrat Singh v. Jhagru (1). There it was laid down that the general law of the land is that if a tenant is ejected from the tenancy or abandons it then, unless there be some special custom to the contrary, the site upon which he has built his house reverts to the Zemindar and the tenant must remove the materials therefrom. The same principle has been followed by another learned Judge of the Allahabad High Court in a judgment which is to be found reported as Phul Bibi v. Zahur Ali (2). So far as I am aware, this law laid down with respect to the relations between Zemindars and tenants in the Agra Province is equally good law for Oudh, and the learned Advocate for the appellants has not been able to refer me to any authority of this Court which lays down the law in the contrary sense. The judgment of the lower Appellate Court appears to me, therefore, to be quite correct and is not open to interference on any ground of law.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

JUDGMENT.—The petition, in so far as it is for a certificate that the case is a fit one for appeal to his Majesty in Council, is not opposed. We certify accordingly under section 110 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The petition is further for leave to appeal in forma pauperis. In *Munni Ram Awasthy v. Mr. D. T. Mangalmoorthy, for Respondent No. 2.

JUDGMENT.—This litigation relates to a house which belonged originally to one Firangi, whose family tree is as follows.—

After the death of Firangi his son, Kolhya died without issue so that Budhu became sole owner. Fifteen years before the suit was filed, i.e., in 1902, Budhu was succeeded by his sons both of whom died in 1908. In the meantime Budhu's widow Maina had re-married in 1906. Madho and Nandu each left a widow, but both those women re-married almost immediately after their husbands' deaths and Maina, having succeeded as mother of Budhu's sons, was in possession when the suit was brought.

The plaintiffs are vendees from the defendant Damdia and having failed to obtain possession from Maina sued for possession, on the ground that she having re-married could not inherit her sons' property.

The trial Judge, following Sammar v. Musammatt Bhago (1) and referring to Sadhu v. Mussammatt Patango (2) and Laxman v. Gundaji (3), dismissed the claim on the ground that a re-married widow is entitled to succeed to the property left by the son of her first husband if the son died after the re-marriage.

The plaintiffs appealed on the strength of the decision of Stanyon, A. J. C., in Basorey

v. Ballabhdass (4), where it was held that a Hindu widow who remarries becomes thereafter incapable of inheriting any property which, but for her re-marriage, she would have inherited from a lineal successor of her former husband. The lower Appellate Court considered the learned Additional Judicial Commissioner to have taken a different view in Kashirao v. Ukarda (5) and concurring with the trial Judge dismissed the appeal.

In second appeal it is pointed out for the plaintiffs that in the case reported as Kashirao v. Ukarda (5) the propositus Pandharinath died in 1896 and his mother Manjai remarried in 1897 after inheriting the field in dispute. It is contended therefore that the remarks at page 118* of the report, regarding the position which would have obtained had Manjai claimed after remarriage, constitute a mere obiter dictum and should not be taken into account. It is further urged that just as a widow by remarriage ceases to be the patni of her husband so she must cease to be a Gotraja Sapinda of her son, to whom therefore she cannot inherit. The decision in Basorey v. Ballabhdass (4) above cited is said to be precisely in point and it is urged that if I am not prepared to follow it I should make a reference to a Bench.

On a careful perusal of the judgment in Basorey v. Ballabhdass (4), I have come to the conclusion that with all respect to the learned Additional Judicial Commissioner who decided it I should not regard it as binding upon me. It seems clear from the facts stated at page 174† that the plaintiffs failed to prove the date on which Musammatt Chaturia remarried and that their claim was really barred by limitation, inasmuch as she had held the land in dispute as occupancy tenant in her own right, not as heir of her son Dhira by her first husband Latorey.

The ante-penultimate paragraph of the judgment does indeed support the appellants, but for the reason already stated this portion appears to have been unnecessary. That it was recorded without any basis in the arguments of the Counsel seems to be indicated by the fact that it contains no reference to the important decision in Sammar v. Musammatt Bhago (1). Moreover, the reference to Vrijbhukandas v. Bai Parvati (6) is not intelligible, for in that case none of the women concerned had been remarried. The Bombay case really in point is Basappa v. Ragava (7), where a Full Bench of four Judges held, following the Calcutta decision relied on in Sammar v. Musammatt Bhago (1), that a remarried Hindu widow is entitled to succeed to the property left by her son by her first husband, the son having died after the remarriage. An earlier Bombay case to the same effect is Chamar Haru v. Kashi (8). And in a recent Calcutta case of Ganga Prasad v. Ramasrey Shahu (9), Mookerjee and Casperz, JJ., referred to Akora Suth v. Boreani (10), Chamar Haru v. Kashi (8) and Basappa v. Ragava (7) as showing the Legislature to have recognized that remarriage not only does not operate as physical death of the widow, but that it does not operate even as a civil death for all purposes. Again in Laaman v. Gundaji (3), Bose, A. J. C., pointed out that a mother stands on an altogether different footing from a widow succeeding to her son, because he is part of her body, a connection which cannot be put an end to by the mother remarrying. Bose, A. J. C., further remarked that the Hindu Widows' Remarriage Act, 1856, could not apply to the case of a mother remarrying during her son's life, inasmuch as she had then no interest in her deceased husband's property by inheritance to him or his lineal successors. He considered that the Act could not apply prospectively and a remark to the same effect is to be found in Kashirao v. Ukarda (5).

In this state of the authorities I do not feel at all pressed by the decision in Basorey v. Ballabhdass (4) and following the earlier decision of this Court confirm the decrees of the Courts below.

This appeal is dismissed with costs. In the lower Courts costs will be paid as already ordered.

The Hon'ble Pandit Gokaran Nath Misra and Mr. K. P. Trivedi, for the Appellants.

Babus Ishwari Prasad and Basudeo Lal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiffs appellants for the recovery of money due on a mortgage effected by the defendant-respondent in favour of Gayadin, the father of plaintiff No. 1 and the grandfather of plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3. The defence was that the covenant as to the payment of interest at Rs. 1-8-0 per cent. per mensem was hard and unconscionable and was obtained by undue influence exercised by Gayadin at a time when the defendant was in embarrassed circumstances and that the further covenant to pay compound interest with six-monthly rests, if the mortgage money was not paid within a year, was penal and unenforceable. The learned Subordinate Judge found on all these points against the defendant. There was a further plea that the plaintiffs were not the only heirs of Gayadin or the sole owners of the mortgage-deed in suit, or, in other words, that the suit was bad for non-joinder of Ram Dayal, his nephew. The learned Subordinate Judge accepted this plea and dismissed the suit.

In so dismissing it, the learned Subordinate Judge overlooked the provision of Order I, rule 9, of the Code of Civil Procedure, which lays down that no suit shall be defeated by reason of the misjoinder or non-joinder of the parties, and the Court may in every suit deal with the matter in controversy so far as regards the rights and interests of the parties actually before it. The Court below was asked by the plaintiffs to implead Ram Dayal as a co-defendant, if his impleading was necessary but the defendant objected that Ram Dayal should be a co-plaintiff, because he had an interest in the mortgage-deed in suit. Ram Dayal, however, stated in his evidence that he had no share in the mortgage-deed in suit, inasmuch as the plaintiffs had paid him Rs. 1,100 on account of his share of the principal and Rs. 1,000 on account of interest thereon 10 or 15 days after the grant of a certificate of guardianship to Musammatt Rupni on account of her minor sons, who are now plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3. It appears that Gayadin, Loke and Gokaran were three brothers; the last named died childless. Loke left a son named Ram Dayal. Ram Dayal claimed a share in the family property, including the mortgage-deed in suit and other deeds of mortgage. On the 30th April 1909 Ram Dayal agreed to accept Rs. 2,400 from the present plaintiffs in satisfaction of all his claims to the family property and secured the payment of that amount by taking Rs. 100 in cash before the Sub-Registrar and stipulating for the payment to him of Rs. 1,100 out of the mortgage-deed in suit and Rs. 1,200 out of another mortgage-deed with interest thereon after that date. This agreement was registered. Whether it was open to him to receive his share of the money directly from the mortgagor or not, his admission in this case that he had received the money payable to him on account of the mortgage deed in suit from the plaintiffs is sufficient to protect the interest of the defendant.

The learned Counsel for the defendant-respondent contends that a registered deed of assignment was needed to enable the plaintiffs to claim the share belonging to Ram Dayal; but the statement of Ram Dayal being that he had no interest left in the mortgage deed, the plaintiffs as the sole heirs of Gayadin are entitled to sue. Section 45 of the Indian Contract Act has no application, because no promise was made by the debtor to Ram Dayal, who is not one of the heirs of Gayadin. As a matter of further precaution, Ram Dayal has now been added as a respondent to this appeal and as a defendant to the suit on his own application. The statement made by him in this Court, similar to what he said in the Court below, is that he had received his share of the money in the mortgage deed in suit from the plaintiffs and that he had no objection to the plaintiffs' realizing the entire money due on the mortgage. On the face of it, the deed stands in favour of Gayadin, whose heirs have brought the suit, and an assignment by Ram Dayal in favour of Gayadin was in the circumstances not necessary to give the plaintiffs a right to sue.

The rate of interest, secured by the deed of mortgage, is not penal nor hard and unconscionable. In the case of default of payment of the principal money within a year, the interest was to be compoundable at the original rate every half year. As pointed out by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Sundar Koer v. Rai Sham Krishen (1), a covenant to pay compound interest at the rate originally fixed in case of default is not necessarily penal. The plaintiffs are the surviving members of a joint family, of which Gayadin was the manager, and no succession certificate under Act VII of 1889 was needed.

(1) 34 C. 150 at p. 158; 4 A. L. J. 109; 5 C. L. J. 106; 9 Bom. L. R. 304; 11 C. W. N. 249; 17 M. L. J. 43; 2 M. L. T. 75; 34 I. A. 9 (P. C.).

The appeal is, therefore, allowed, and the claim of the plaintiffs decreed with costs here and below and future interest at 6 per cent. per annum from the date of the suit till realisation. Six months' time will be allowed for payment. A decree will be framed in terms of Order XXXIV, rule 4, of the Code of Civil Procedure. The defendant-respondent will bear his own costs throughout.

Where an Appellate Court refuses to accept the report of the Commissioner for local inquiry, it is not bound to order a fresh local inquiry. The matter is within the discretion of the Court. [p. 651, col. 2.]

On an application by a party for the examination of the Commissioner for local inquiry the Court is bound to see that there is some real ground for examining the Commissioner and that the application has not been made for the purpose of annoying him or for some frivolous purpose. The Court has a discretion as to whether it should permit or refuse a party to examine the Commissioner. [p. 651, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—This is an appeal by the defendant No. 3 against the decision of the learned Additional District Judge of Midnapore, dated the 7th June 1916, affirming the decision of the Officiating Subordinate Judge of the same place. The suit was brought for possession of a portion of a Khal on declaration of title. Three points have been raised in this appeal against the judgment of the learned Additional District Judge. The first point raised is as regards limitation. It is said that the learned Judge for the finding he arrived at on the question of limitation relied on evidence which was inadmissible under the terms of the Indian Evidence Act. There are two answers to that. The first answer is that the learned Judge was invited by the parties to give his decision on the evidence on the record and, in the grounds of appeal, no question was raised with reference to the two documents objected to. The learned Judge might not unreasonably suppose that no grounds of appeal having been taken against the admissibility of those two documents he was entitled to refer to them. The second answer is this: certainly, the first document, namely, the judgment in the criminal case, was admissible and the second document, namely, the plaint, was not used by the learned Judge for the purpose of acting on the so-called admission contained therein but was used for the purpose of the learned Judge discovering what the suit dismissed was about. In those circumstances, the learned Judge was obviously entitled to satisfy himself as to what the suit the judgment in which was given in evidence was about, for, the suit having been dismissed for default, the learned Judge, unless he read the pleadings, was absolutely in the dark as to what the case was about.

The next point is that the learned Judge refused to permit a case of res judicata to be gone into. The grounds on which he refused that are these. This case was on appeal before the learned District Judge on a former occasion. The present appellant obtained from the District Judge a remand and that remand was granted on the grounds stated in the learned District Judge's judgment. And, amongst those grounds, the learned Judge held that the decision in the former boundary suit was not to be treated as res judicata between the parties. If the present appellant was not satisfied with that order, he could have appealed against that. He having taken the remand on the conditions mentioned by the learned Judge in his judgment, must be taken to have accepted the condition laid down by the learned Judge that the decision in the former boundary suit was not to be treated as res judicata between the parties.

The third point is one that has no substance in it. It is said that there ought to be a fresh local enquiry, the learned Judge having refused to accept the report of the Commissioner. That was a matter clearly within the discretion of the learned Judge and it is not shown that he wrongly exercised that discretion. Then the appellant states that he wished to examine the Commissioner but he was not allowed to do so. In a matter like this, the Court is bound to see that there is some real ground for examining the gentleman who had undertaken the duty of the Commissioner and that it is not for the purpose of annoying him or for some frivolous purpose. The learned Judge obviously has a discretion in a matter of this nature as to whether he should permit or refuse a party to examine the Commissioner. It has not been shown to us that the learned Judge improperly exercised the discretion that the law vested in him in declining to allow the appellant at the stage he applied to examine the Commissioner.

The present appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

PANTON, J.—I agree.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs-appellants brought a suit out of which this appeal has arisen for the purpose of obtaining a declaration that they were under-proprietors (pukhtadars) of certain plots in a village called Benipore described in the plaint.

It appears that recently the defendant taluqdar took proceedings under Chapter VIIA of the Oudh Rent Act against the plaintiffs and obtained an order of the Revenue Court under section 107G. The Revenue Court held that the lands now in suit were in possession of the plaintiffs as rent-free lands and were liable to be assessed to rent. The rent was assessed and the Court declared that the plaintiffs were tenants of the defendant.

The plaintiffs now come to the Civil Court for the purpose of claiming a decree for declaration that they are not tenants but under-proprietors of the lands in question. The suit was contested on a variety of grounds. Amongst other pleas one was taken to the effect that the Civil Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit. The Court of first instance accepted this plea and dismissed the plaintiffs' claim, though it is proper to observe that the case was also decided on the merits. I only mention the question of jurisdiction here because it was not debated in the lower Appellate Court; and the learned Counsel for the respondent in this Court has informed me that he is not in a position to support the opinion of the Court of first instance. It is clear that the Civil Court had jurisdiction to entertain this suit. The Judge of the first Court relied upon a ruling reported as Rup Narain v. Badri Prasad (1). This ruling was afterwards doubted in another case to be found reported as Matai Singh v. Ajudhya Singh (2) and it was finally overruled by a Bench decision to be found reported as Shankar Sahai v. Gojadhari Prasad (3). There is no doubt therefore that the suit was cognizable by a Civil Court.

To come to the merits of the case, it is admitted that in the year 1893 the property in suit was mortgaged to one Bhaiya Kamta Prasad by a deed of conditional sale. The mortgagee brought a suit for foreclosure and obtained a decree on the 22nd of December 1893. Eventually the decree was made final and possession was delivered to the mortgagee. After this the defendant taluqdar brought a suit for pre-emption on the basis of this foreclosure and obtained a decree on the 15th of August 1896. It is said that in execution of the pre-emption decree the taluqdar obtained formal possession but never succeeded in obtaining actual possession of the property now in question. No rent appears to have been paid by these plaintiffs until the taluqdar succeeded in obtaining from the Revenue Court the order under section 107G of the Oudh Rent Act to which I have referred above. The lower Appellate Court has dismissed the claim of the plaintiffs. It applied the provisions of section 25 of the Oudh Law

NADIR SINGH v. INDAR SEN SINGH.

Act (Act XVIII of 1876) and held that the result of the foreclosure was to deprive the plaintiffs of all proprietary or under-proprietary interest in the lands which were comprised in the mortgage and to leave them only with a right of occupancy as ex-proprietary tenants in such lands as they held as sir at the time foreclosure took place. It was of opinion that on the evidence it was shown that the lands now in question were the lands which the plaintiffs held as sir at that time, and consequently it was of opinion that they could not set up any rights as under-proprietors. All they could claim to be was that they were occupancy tenants.

It has been argued here in the first place that the learned Judge was wrong in applying section 25 of the Oudh Laws Act to the case. That section has been repealed, but it was in operation at the time the foreclosure proceedings took place. I agree with the learned Judge that section 25 did apply to the facts of this case. The argument here is that the word "transferred", as used in section 25, is not applicable to cases in which the transfer has been made by way of foreclosure; and in support of this argument a decision of the Board of Revenue, Suraj Bakhsh v. Bhagwan Din (4), has been relied upon. I am unable to accept the opinion of the learned members of the Board. It seems to me that the word "transferred", as used in section 25, is of general import and that its meaning cannot be restricted, as has been argued, to cases to which the transfer has been made under orders of the Court. Even if that argument were to be accepted, it seems to me sufficiently obvious that in the present case the transfer of the mortgagor's rights to the mortgagee was certainly effected by an order of the Court, for it is common ground that the property was transferred in the first instance under a foreclosure decree and was subsequently transferred by a decree of Court in favour of the defendant taluqdar.

It is true that after this transfer took place no proceedings were taken by the Deputy Commissioner, as provided by the section, for the purpose of determining the extent of the lands which the ex-proprietors were to hold as occupancy tenants, nor was anything done to determine the rent of the lands which were to be so held. All the same I cannot accept the contention for the appellants that because these proceedings were not taken by the Deputy Commissioner, it necessarily follows that the ex mortgagors remained in adverse possession of the plots which were then in their occupation. If the plots now in dispute were in the actual cultivating occupancy of the plaintiffs at the time foreclosure took place, it follows that the highest right they can set up in respect of these lands is that of occupancy tenants. The Deputy Commissioner, if he had taken proceedings under the section, might have allowed them occupancy rights in all these plots. He certainly could not have allowed them any higher rights and he might have allowed them less by confining their rights to a portion only of the lands which they then held. On the other hand, I am not satisfied that it is shown on the evidence that the lands now in dispute were in the actual cultivating occupancy of the plaintiffs at the time when foreclosure was made; and before I can come to a proper decision in the case it appears to me to be necessary that this matter should be investigated. The fact that the plaintiffs describe these lands as their sir lands does not necessarily lead to the conclusion that at the time of foreclosure they must have been in their "actual cultivating occupancy", to use the words of section 25.

I remit the following issue to the lower Appellate Court for determination:—

Were the lands now in suit, or any of them, in the cultivating occupancy of the plaintiffs at the time of the foreclosure of the mortgage?

The learned Judge will take such evidence on this issue as the parties may desire to produce and he will return his finding to this Court within two months from the date of this order of remand. Fifteen days to run from the date of the lower Court's finding will be allowed to the parties to file objections, if they are so minded.

Issue remitted.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal was filed before the judgment in Surya Bhan v. Renai (1) was published. The learned Counsel for the appellant admits that the ruling in question governs this case. This disposes of the first ground of appeal. As to the second ground of appeal the trees would undoubtedly go with the land on pre-emption. So would a right of easement. It is urged that these rights were separately valued. But this is not so, as far as the sale-deed is concerned. Some statement was made to this effect in the first Court. The price of pre-emption decreed includes the value of all rights. There is no error of law pointed out by the appellant's Counsel. The appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Appeal from a decision of the District Judge of Darbhanga.

JUDGMENT.

IMAM, J.—The only point of law on which the learned Vakil on behalf of the petitioner has addressed us arises on the question of the construction of section 174, Bengal Tenancy Act, and rule 89, Order XXI, Civil Procedure Code. The appellants were the judgment-debtors in a rent-decree. In execution of that decree a proclamation of sale was issued for satisfying the decretal amount. Thereafter the sale took place and under section 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act the appellants deposited the amount mentioned in the sale proclamation with five per cent. on the purchase-money. The learned Munsif, before whom the amount in question with the five per cent. was deposited, accepted the sum and set aside the sale. The respondents then preferred an appeal to the learned District Judge of Darbhanga, who reversed the order passed by the Munsif and directed the sale to be restored.

The ground on which the learned District Judge has held that the deposit made by the judgment-debtors was insufficient is based upon a comparison of the language of section 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and rule 89, Order XXI of the Civil Procedure Code. Section 174 with reference to the amount contains these words: "the amount recoverable under the decree with costs", whereas the rule contains the words, "the amount specified in the proclamation."

It is not for a moment claimed by the appellants that they deposited the amount recoverable under the decree with costs. Their learned Vakil frankly admits that the amount specified in the proclamation was deposited, but he has contended that in fact, although the language of the two sections is different, the deposit made of the amount specified in the proclamation would work out to be the amount recoverable under the decree with costs. With this contention we are not in sympathy, nor are we satisfied that the amount in question is the same. The difference of language has a purpose, as the two Acts have different legislative schemes. The learned Judge in dealing with this aspect of the question has very rightly drawn attention to sub-section 3 of rule 89, Order XXI, which clearly shows the position of the decree-holder under the Code with respect to any further charges that he may claim under the decree and in respect of which he may receive satisfaction. No such provision has been made in section 174. We are, therefore, of opinion that the learned Judge below was right in the construction he has placed upon the sections and that, therefore, his order restoring the sale was a just and proper one. In the circumstances the application is rejected with costs.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 20, Sch. I, Art. 132
—“Debtor” in s. 20, meaning of—Hindu joint family
—Son, whether debtor or agent of father—Mortgage-deed—Money payable by instalments—Default in payment of instalments—Suit instituted more than 12 years after default—Limitation—Waiver.

Where a mortgage-deed provided for payment of the mortgage money by certain definite instalments and further stipulated that if the instalments were not paid at the appointed time and if any default were to take place, then the contract relating to the payment of future instalments was to be deemed rescinded and the mortgagees were to be entitled to bring their suit at once and claim interest at a certain rate:

Held, (1) that a suit brought by the mortgagees on the basis of the above mortgage-deed more than 12 years after the date when the first default in payment was made was time-barred under Article 132 of Schedule I of the Limitation Act; [p. 656, col. 1.]

(2) that no question of waiver on the part of the mortgagees could arise for consideration in connection with a mortgage bond, the enforcement of which was being sought by a sale of the property. [p. 656, col. 1.]

The word “debtor”, as used in section 20 of the Limitation Act, means the person who is liable under the contract of debt. Hence, where a father and his son form together a joint Hindu family and a debt is contracted by the father, the son is in the lifetime of the father neither a debtor nor, in the absence of any evidence, an agent of the father for the purposes of the said section. [p. 656, col. 2.]

Pandit Harkaran Nath Misra and Babu Bisheshwar Nath Sriwastava, for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—The only question for discussion in this second appeal is a question of limitation. The suit was a suit for sale on a mortgage and the Courts below have decided that it was time-barred. In my opinion the decision is correct. The document upon which the suit was brought was executed on the 27th of October 1894 and the suit was instituted on the 3rd of April 1916.

Turning to the mortgage-deed, we find that the mortgagor was one Sheo Mangal who, it is said, is now deceased and is represented by his sons Daya Shankar and Har Shankar, defendants. The mortgage was made in favour of two persons Sukh Nandan Lal and Lal Behari, who are the predecessors-in-title of the present plaintiffs. The question of limitation must be determined with particular reference to the terms of the mortgage-bond. The deed provides that the principal sum in respect of which the mortgage is being executed is a sum of Rs. 800 and the agreement was that this money was to be paid up in certain definite instalments of Rs. 40 and 50 each. It was agreed between the parties that if the instalments were not paid at the appointed time and if any default were to take place, then the contract relating to the payment of future instalments was to be deemed rescinded and the mortgagees were to be entitled to bring their suit at once and claim interest at the rate of 12 per cent.

The evidence shows that the first default in payment was made on the 11th of April 1895, and consequently on the terms of the bond a suit for sale ought to have been brought within 12 years of that date. The learned Counsel for the appellants has referred to the fact that payments were made on account of principal after the date of this default, and he relies on these payments as proof of waiver on the part of the creditors. The answer to this is that no question of waiver can arise for consideration in connection with a mortgage-bond the enforcement of which is being sought by a suit for sale of property. In such a case the Article of limitation to be applied is Article 132 of the Schedule to the Limitation Act. The provision about waiver in connection with the question of limitation is to be found in Article 75 of the Schedule, but that Article refers in terms to suits based upon promissory notes or bonds. Nothing to be found in Article 75 can be applied to a suit to which Article 132 applies in order to make out some other rule of limitation than that which is laid down in the latter Article itself. This plea, therefore, must fail.

The learned Counsel then has relied upon the general exception which is declared by section 20 of the Limitation Act. I have been referred to the document of mortgage on the back of which, it is true, there are recorded certain payments. These are set down in a somewhat peculiar way. First, we have one or two notes of payments followed by a signature, then five and six memoranda of payments followed by another signature; and similarly a third set of payments followed by another signature. It has been stated here that the signature in each case is that of Daya Shankar, the son of the mortgagor Sheo Mangal, who is impleaded here as the first defendant. Now before any reliance can be placed on these endorsements for the purpose of extending the period of limitation under section 20 it must be shown, in the case where the payment was payment of a part of the principal, that it was made by the debtor or by his agent duly authorised in this behalf. We have also to take notice of the proviso to the section which says that, in the case of part payment of the principal of a debt, the fact of the payment must appear in the handwriting of the person making the same. It may be stated at once that no question of payment of interest can arise in this case for, as I have already stated, the principal sum was Rs. 800 and that was to be payable in certain instalments. No interest was to be charged and consequently any payments made must have been on account of principal. Then the question arises, if these payments were made, were they made by the debtor or by his agent duly authorised on this behalf? That they were not made by the debtor seems to be admitted. The debtor in the case was the executant of the mortgage-deed, Sheo Mangal. It has been argued, however, that Sheo Mangal with his sons constituted a joint family and that Daya Shankar was a debtor within the meaning of subsection (1) of section 20. I very much doubt whether that argument can be maintained, because it appears to me that this part of the section must be strictly construed and the natural meaning be attributed to the word "debtor" is the person who is liable under the contract of debt, and that person in this case was Sheo Mangal. I have to observe that it is admitted that all the payments endorsed on the back of the document were made while Sheo Mangal was still alive. I do not think, therefore, that with reference to the terms of this section Daya Shankar can be treated as a debtor, nor again it is, I think, possible to contend that he was the duly authorised agent of the debtor. No agency can be inferred from the fact that Daya Shankar and his father Sheo Mangal were members of a joint Hindu family. Sheo Mangal, while alive, was presumably the managing member of the family and certainly there is no authority that I know of for the proposition that the son, in the absence of any evidence, could be deemed to be a duly authorised agent of his father for the purpose of paying a debt. It seems to me, therefore, that the whole argument with regard to section 20 of the Limitation Act fails and that the plaintiffs are not entitled to the benefit of that section.

No other question remains for decision. The suit was, in my opinion, time-barred and was rightly dismissed. The consequence is that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

ORDER.—The first point taken is that the act for which the petitioner was convicted does not fall within the order passed under Criminal Procedure Code section 144.

It is true that the order mentions a specific act, but it also includes all acts of the same kind by the general words, "in any way interfering with the conduct of the Adyapakam service." I think that these words sufficiently define the acts from which the petitioner was required to abstain and thus renders them "certain" within the meaning of section 144. I may also point out that the petitioner as trustee had powers of management over the temple and its property and the act done was within those powers, and the order as regards him may be read as directing him "to take certain order" in the management of the temple.I think that the case falls within *Ramanadhan Chetti v. Calcutta Police Act (IV of 1866), s. 54 (a), offence under—Findings necessary for conviction.

The preliminary condition which must be fulfilled before effect can be given to section 54 (a) of the Calcutta Police Act is that there must be reason to believe that the property found in the accused's possession is stolen property. [p. 658, col. 1.]

The Court has first to find on sufficient materials that there is reason for such belief, and it is not until it has come to such a finding that it can consider whether the accused has been able to account for possession of the property. [p. 658, col. 2.]

Rule granted against an order of the 4th Presidency Magistrate, Calcutta, Northern Division, dated the 8th May 1918.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. J. N. Banerjee (with him Babus Jyotish Chandra Hajrah and Santosh Kumar Pal), for the Petitioner, submitted that upon the findings of fact arrived at in this case the conviction under section 54A of the Calcutta Police Act was not tenable. The petitioner was first of all tried under section 411, Indian Penal Code, with respect to some articles alleged to have been stolen and was acquitted. The present prosecution was in respect of another article found in the same search and alleged to have been stolen. There is no evidence in this case that the silver bar is stolen property except that of the Police Officer, who says he simply suspects it to be stolen property, but gives no reason for so saying. This is not enough. The defence has satisfactorily explained why the accused could not produce the key of the box. Even if he did not wilfully produce the key that would not be a sufficient reason for believing that this article found in the box was stolen property; the box might contain various other things which the accused did not like that the Police should search. Then as regards the accused's failure to account for his possession of this article, he ought not to have been asked to do so before the Magistrate had sufficient reasons for believing that the article was stolen property. The section itself is clear on this point.

Referred to Queen Empress v. Dhanjibhai Edulji (1), Queen v. Behary Sing (2), Sheo Surun Sahai v. Mohamed Fazil Khan (3).

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner has been convicted under section 54 (a) of the Calcutta Police Act, which provides that a person in possession of anything which there is reason to believe to have been stolen or fraudulently obtained shall be liable to punishment, if he fails to account for such possession. The preliminary condition which must be fulfilled before effect can be given to this section is that there must be reason to believe that the property found in the accused's possession was stolen property. The reasons given by the Magistrate for coming to this belief in the present case are stated in his judgment as follows:—
“First, that this silver bar was found along with other articles alleged to have been stolen and claimed by a certain person, about which there was already a case under section 411, Indian Penal Code, against the accused; secondly, that the accused was asked to produce the key of the box in which these articles were but he did not, and the box had to be broken open by the Police Officer; and thirdly, that the accused failed to account for the bar.”

As regards the first of these reasons, the accused was acquitted of the charge referred to and in the absence of anything to show that the other articles were stolen, no inference against the accused can be drawn from the fact that this silver bar was found with those other articles. As regards the second of those reasons, the failure of the accused to produce the key is not shown to have been wilful. His story is that it was not then in his possession, and this has not been rebutted. The third ground is not one on which the Magistrate is justified in finding reason for believing that the property was stolen. He had, first, to find on sufficient materials that there was reason for such belief and it was not until he had come to such a finding that he could consider whether the accused had been able to account for its possession.

Taking this view, we make the Rule absolute and set aside the conviction and sentence passed on the petitioner. The petitioner is acquitted of the offence charged and his bail bond will be discharged.

Rule made absolute.

ORDER.—The question for decision in this case is, whether we can give an extended meaning to the word "cheating" in section 562 of the Criminal Procedure Code so as to cover an offence under section 420 of the Indian Penal Code (cheating and dishonestly inducing delivery of property, etc.).

We should be glad to do so, as we recognise that equally strong reasons on public and humanitarian grounds may exist for lenient treatment of an offence under either section. On the other hand, a careful consideration of the wording of section 562 of the Criminal Procedure Code seems to preclude the possibility of such a construction. If the term "cheating" is to be held to cover offences under sections 418, 419 and 420 of the Indian Penal Code, which are included with section 417 in the same group in Schedule II to the Criminal Procedure Code, a similar extension must be allowed to the terms "theft" and "dishonest misappropriation." The former must be held to cover offences under sections 380, 381 and 382 of the Indian Penal Code and the latter offences under section 404 of the Indian Penal Code. But such a construction is impossible in face of the fact that the Legislature has specifically mentioned "theft in a building" (section 380, Indian Penal Code) in section 562 of the Criminal Procedure Code in addition to simple theft (section 379). The inference is irresistible that "theft in a building" was not intended to be included in the term "theft" and we cannot give a narrow interpretation in the case of "theft" and a wide one in the case of "cheating".

The view we have taken is in accord with that expressed by a Bench of the Bombay High Court in Emperor v. Ramjan (1). The only authority to the contrary is that of a single Judge in Har Narayan v. Ramji Das (2), from which we must respectfully dissent.

We set aside the order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate and direct him to dispose of the case according to law.

Accused went to a Police Station and made the report, "I have killed my wife and her corpse is lying in my house", in consequence of which the Police, proceeding to his house, discovered the corpse of his wife in an inner room of the house:

Held, that under section 27 of the Evidence Act the officer who had taken down the statement of the accused was entitled to depose that the accused came to him at the time and place stated and said: "I have killed my wife and her corpse is lying in my house", and that in consequence of that statement the woman's corpse was discovered as indicated by the accused; but that when this had been deposed by the prosecution, the defence were entitled to require the production of the record made at the Police Station and to insist upon proof of the whole of that record. Per Walsh, J.—Where there is no evidence of offence except a confession, the confession must be taken as a whole. The Court cannot select, from the only evidence which it is proceeding to act upon, in order to find the crime established as a fact at all, portions which it rejects as untrue and treat the balance which remains as truthful evidence. Appeal from an order of the Sessions Judge, Allahabad, dated the 21st March 1918.

Mr. C. R. Alston, for the Appellant.

Mr. A. E. Ry es, Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

PIGGOTT, J.—On the 3rd of December last, somewhere about 2 o'clock in the day, a young Bengali, Surendra Nath Mukherji, whose age is given in the record as 22 years but who according to his father's evidence was not yet quite 20 years of age, presented himself at the Kotwali Police Station at Allahabad and made a certain report, a record of which was entered in the Police register provided for the purpose. In consequence of this report the City Inspector, Muhammad Said, proceeded at once to the house in the city in which the said Surendra Nath Mukherji was living. He found the door leading into the inner apartments locked and it was opened with a key produced from his person by the above mentioned accused. The latter then led the way to a certain room on the north-east side of the courtyard which was fastened on the outside by a chain. He unchained this door and led the Police Officer and certain witnesses, one of whom, Bande Husain Khan has been called at the trial, into the room. On the floor was lying the corpse of a young girl named Sunilabala Debi, wife of Surendra Nath Mukherji aforesaid. As to the age of this girl there is some little conflict of evidence, but we shall not be far wrong if we take it to have been about 15 years. She was quite dead and was wearing only a bodice and a loin cloth. Some part of this loin-cloth was in some way drawn together or heaped up under the back of the neck. There was a slight cut or incision on the great toe of each of the feet, and with reference to these the accused made a statement and produced from a recess in the same room an implement with which he said those incisions had been made. The corpse was subsequently examined by Mr. Kashi Nath, Assistant to the Civil Surgeon of Allahabad.

With regard to the incisions above spoken of Mr. Kashi Nath was quite satisfied that they had been inflicted after death, and this is in accordance with the statement to which the accused himself has adhered throughout. The only other external mark of injury was a slight redness of the skin on the left side of the neck. This was evidently a mere patch, described in the Assistant Surgeon's evidence as $1\frac{1}{2}$ inch long into $\frac{3}{4}$ inch broad. A further examination of the corpse disclosed that death was almost certainly due to asphyxiation, but beyond this the Assistant Surgeon was not prepared to go. He was asked a number of questions as to the possibility of death by strangulation or death by suffocation and as to the presence or absence of indications tending to prove that this suffocation, or strangulation, or whatever it was, had been in its nature either homicidal or suicidal. The general effect of his evidence seems to me to be to leave these questions absolutely open. In one portion of his evidence the Assistant Surgeon seemed to incline towards the belief that death had been caused by suffocation rather than by strangulation, though he admitted himself to be puzzled by the absence of any marks of external injury about the mouth or nose. At the very end of his examination after he had protested that he was unable to give any decisive answer on the question of strangulation or suffocation, he told the Court that on the whole strangulation by means of a soft cloth seemed to him more in conformity with the post mortem appearances than any other theory. This is in itself an opinion expressed with much doubt and reserve: it is not altogether consistent with other portions of the evidence given by the same witness. It is difficult to understand how, on the theory of strangulation effected in this manner, the only mark left upon the neck should have been the small red patch already referred to. On the evidence, moreover, it would seem that what is ordinarily the most characteristic symptom of death by strangulation, namely, the protruded tongue, was entirely absent. Surendra Nath Mukherji was eventually put on his trial on the charge that he had murdered his wife. Of the Assessors who heard the evidence one finds him guilty and the other not guilty. The learned Sessions Judge finds him guilty and has passed sentence of death. The record is before us for confirmation of that sentence and we have had the advantage of hearing the petition of appeal presented on behalf of the convict argued by Mr. Ross Alston. The evidence on the record is admittedly most scanty. At the very outset of the trial a question arose as to the admissibility in evidence of the statement recorded at the Kotwali Police Station at 2.30 p. m. on December the 3rd. The learned Sessions Judge was at first disposed to reject that statement as inadmissible by reason of the provisions of section 25 of the Indian Evidence Act. Later on, upon further consideration of the provisions of section 27 of the same Act, he has allowed it to be put in evidence. I have no doubt that the provisions of both these sections apply to the circumstances stated and require to be considered. A mere statement in evidence by the City Kotwal that the accused came to the Police Station and made a report, in consequence of which the corpse of his wife was discovered in an inner room of his residential house, would be calculated to work unfairly from the point of view of the prosecution and from that of the defence; section 27 of the Indian Evidence Act was no doubt introduced on purpose to obviate the possibility of such unfairness. Under that section the City Kotwal was unquestionably entitled to depose that Surendra Nath Mukherji came to him at the time and place stated and said: "I have killed my wife, her corpse is lying in my house," and that in consequence of this statement the woman's corpse was discovered as indicated by the accused. Now when once this much had been deposed to on behalf of the prosecution, the defence were clearly entitled to require the production of the record made at the time at the Kotwali Police Station and to insist upon the proof of the whole of that record if they thought it advisable to do so. I think that the statement should have been put in evidence in this manner at the request of the defence; but as the case stands, I see no reason to object to its appearance on the record and I find it necessary to consider it in some detail. According to this statement the accused reported that his wife had been seriously misconducting herself for sometime past and that she had been carrying on an illicit correspondence with another man. For this reason, the statement says, the accused made up his mind to kill her. He arranged that he should be alone with her in the house at about noon on the day in question. He had spent the night in remonstrating with her, and continued to do so; but her only reply was, "leave me alone: I want to go away." Thereupon the accused tied her loin cloth round her neck and killed her, after which he inflicted the two incisions on the great toes already spoken of. With regard to these the explanation given in the statement is that the accused had heard that persons strangled by means of a piece of cloth would come to life again.

On the following day, the 4th of December 1917, the accused, having spent the night in Police custody, was placed before a Magistrate of the First Class, to whom he made a confession. We have before us the record of that confession and also the evidence of Mr. S. E. Anthony, the Magistrate who took it.

According to Mr. Anthony, as soon as he began to question the accused and before he had even completed the preliminary questions which a Magistrate always puts in these cases, the accused interrupted him by saying: "I have killed my wife." The confession itself adds very little to this bald statement. It repeats the allegation of unchastity against the girl in general terms, and adds that the accused had obtained possession of letters written by her to some other man. For this reason, he says, he murdered her by strangling her with the dhoti she was wearing. After the enquiry preliminary to commitment the accused was again examined by the same Magistrate on the 21st of December 1917. He then declined to answer most of the questions put to him and claimed his right to reserve his defence for the Sessions trial. To the Sessions Judge the accused said that he had gone out on the morning of December the 3rd and returned about 11 o'clock, to find the house door shut and no answer returned to his knocks. He then climbed over one of the walls and, in the closed room already spoken of, found his wife lying dead with her own loin cloth tied round the neck. He unfastened the cloth and, in the attempt to discover whether life was quite extinct, inflicted the cuts on the toes which have already been referred to. He came out of the house, locking the door behind him and told one Tarak Nath Mukherji, a telegraph signaller, what had happened. On the advice of the latter he first sent a telegram summoning his own father, who was in Calcutta at the time, and then went to the Police Station intending to report that his wife had committed suicide. He alleged that, somewhere inside the Police Station, before he went upstairs to the room where the City Inspector Mohammad Said was sitting, he entered into conversation with some subordinate Police clerk, who strongly advised him not to report that his wife had committed suicide but to say that he had killed her out of jealousy on account of her misconduct. He says this Munshi gave him further reasons for adopting this course and that, after he had gone upstairs, the City Kotwal also urged him not to be afraid, but to say that he killed the woman and that he would get off all right. He ascribed his subsequent confession to the Magistrate to Police influence. He now denied having killed the girl, asserting that he was very much in love with her. He said, further, that she had attempted to commit suicide on other occasions. The defence evidence was mostly directed to this point; but the telegraph signaller Tarak Nath Mukherji confirmed the accused's statement so far as it concerned him. Two physicians, Dr. Nogensra Nath Datt and Nauak Prasad Varma, a homœopathic practitioner, gave evidence that they had attended the girl on two different occasions after what appeared to be attempts on her part to commit suicide by poisoning. Evidence was also given of an occasion on which it was said the accused's wife had left her house declaring her intention of drowning herself in the Jumna river. The evidence of the accused's father, Benod Behari Mukherji, and of a neighbour, Nimai Charan Mukherji, suggests further that the girl was of a wilful and hysterical temperament, that she would resort to hunger-striking and to beating her head on the ground if her will was crossed in any way.

I have set out the evidence for the defence in the first instance because there is really no further evidence for the prosecution beyond that already indicated. A younger brother of the accused's was called, but he gave no evidence particularly relevant to the case, except that in cross-examination he supported the allegation for the defence as to previous attempts to commit suicide. The record before us suggests that the prosecution intended in the first instance to produce certain further evidence, and more particularly that witnesses who were present at the discovery of the corpse were to be examined as to statements made by the accused at that time and as to a certain pantomime gone through by him, in illustration of the manner in which he had compassed his wife's death. It is not clear whether this part of the prosecution case was dropped because those responsible for the conduct of the case were satisfied that there was no substance in it, or because it was supposed that evidence of this nature could not be given without contravening the provisions of section 26 of the Indian Evidence Act. The evidence is certainly not before us and I only allude to it because of this latter possibility. I think that the witnesses were entitled to depose to any actions performed by the accused in their presence and, after they had done so, the defence would have been entitled under other provisions of the Indian Evidence Act to put questions (if they deemed it advisable) as to any words used by the accused which accompanied or explained those actions. If any evidence of this sort was available I can only say that, in so difficult a case, I feel some regret that it is not before me.

The learned Sessions Judge in finding the accused guilty has proceeded upon a line of reasoning which sounds convincing enough, if all the premises assumed by the learned Sessions Judge are granted. He takes it that the case must necessarily have been either one of suicide or one of wilful murder. He comes to the conclusion that the evidence as a whole and more particularly the statement of the Assistant to the Civil Surgeon, considered along with appropriate passages in certain medical treatises to which the Court was entitled to refer under the proviso to section 60 of the Indian Evidence Act, practically excluded the possibility of suicide. Holding, therefore, that the fact of murder is established beyond question, the learned Sessions Judge finds that, even apart from the accused's retracted confession, the circumstances as a whole point to the accused as the only possible murderer. The confession itself, as made before the Magistrate on December the 4th, the learned Sessions Judge evidently regards as clinching the matter.

In considering the soundness of the conclusion thus arrived at, I wish to take up first two questions of detail. The whole of the evidence for the defence has been swept aside by the learned Sessions Judge on what appear to me quite inadequate grounds. It is true that most of the persons concerned are relatives, caste-fellows or friends of the accused, although it is not clear that these remarks apply to the physician Nanak Prasad Varma. The matters to which these witnesses were required to depose were matters which could only have been within the knowledge of relatives or close friends of the family. It is not logical to put aside evidence of this sort, merely on the ground that the persons giving it have a motive for desiring to befriend the accused person. No doubt, as the learned Sessions Judge remarks, the fact that this unhappy girl had attempted to commit suicide on previous occasions would have but little bearing on this case, if it be indeed proved beyond possibility of doubt that the present case was not one of suicide. Nevertheless the defence evidence as a whole does suggest to my mind certain conclusions which I regard as established with reasonable certainty. I accept it as proving that this child wife was of a self-willed disposition and hysterical temperament. I think it highly probable that she had on previous occasions, either actually made, or professed to make, some attempt to take her own life. Further than this I do not desire to press the defence evidence, nor do I think it necessary to do so. Now as regards the medical evidence, I feel bound, although with some reluctance, to comment on the absence of certain details which I should have desired to find there. In a case of this sort, where a human life is at stake, no motives of delicacy, however natural or in themselves commendable, can be allowed to interfere for a moment with any attempt to sift out the truth. Speaking on the basis of an experience which goes back for a considerable number of years, and which calls to my mind more than one case analogous to the present in some of its most important features, I take it upon myself to say that in all cases in which the supposed victim of a murder is a young girl, the Medical Officer conducting the post mortem examination should invariably make a thorough and careful examination of the organs of sex. In the present case we have it that the parties had been married for about a year and, according to the evidence, they had been separated for almost six months of that time. It appears not very probable that the medical examination, if directed expressly to this point, would have proved that this unhappy girl was at the time of her death a virgo intacta; but if this had happened to be the case, it would have thrown a most important light upon the consideration of the entire evidence. Even apart from this possibility, it might have disclosed some evidence bearing upon one conceivable view of the case which has been entirely kept out of sight at the trial, but which I think it impossible altogether to overlook.

Subject to these preliminary remarks, I now come to close quarters with the main grounds upon which the judgment of the Court below has proceeded. Is it fairly established on the evidence that the present case is either one of suicide or of wilful murder, and moreover is the hypothesis of suicide absolutely excluded by the evidence? It is not a matter about which it is possible to enter into any course of detailed reasoning. The question is as to the inferences to be drawn from the evidence of the Assistant to the Civil Surgeon considered in the light of any standard authorities on medical jurisprudence. Speaking for myself I can only say that, on the evidence as it stands, I think that the theory of suicide, although shown to be somewhat improbable, cannot be said to be definitely excluded. I would go further and say that, in the case of a young girl of this age and of such antecedents and temperament as I believe to be proved by the defence evidence, the possibility of death by accident, or by some undiscovered natural cause, is not altogether excluded. There remains yet another possibility at which I have taken it upon myself to hint in an earlier portion of this judgment. To put the matter bluntly, assuming that this girl met with her death at a moment when she was alone in a certain room with her husband, I should not even then be satisfied that the accused had caused her death by inflicting any injury upon her with such guilty intention or such guilty knowledge as would be necessary to support a charge of culpable homicide. The possibility would remain that he had been resisted in an attempt to exercise his marital rights, resisted perhaps with cries and screams, and in an attempt to stifle those cries he had used more force than he realized and driven a nervous and hysterical child into death by suffocation, without any intention of producing such a result or knowledge that he was likely to do so. The most curious and exceptional feature of this particular case is to be found in the two cuts inflicted upon the feet after death. I am quite unable to believe that a man who had deliberately murdered his wife would inflict these curious post mortem injuries for any such motive as that suggested in the statement taken down at the Allahabad Kotwali. If he merely wished to make sure that his victim was dead, he could have used a cutting implement to better purpose in a great variety of other ways. I feel confident that the explanation subsequently offered by the accused of these injuries is the true one, namely, that he was trying desperately to see whether there was not some life left in the apparently inanimate body. It is at least possible that he suspected the girl was shamming death and intended to put that to the test.

This brings me, therefore, to the final question. We are asked to convict this young man of murder, substantially upon a retracted confession and to do this in a case in which, putting that confession on one side, there is not, in my opinion, definite proof that murder has been committed at all. I should feel in any case most reluctant to act upon a retracted confession under such circumstances. In this particular case I feel no hesitation in going a good deal further. Parts of the confession in question I definitely disbelieve. I do not believe the reason given in the statement recorded at the Kotwali for the cuts inflicted after death on the feet. I do not believe the imputations on the chastity of the unfortunate girl thrown out either in this statement or in the confession subsequently recorded before the Magistrate. Practically I come back to this. Disbelieving so much of the confession, am I prepared to feel satisfied beyond the possibility of doubt that the accused was speaking the truth when, at the outset of his statement before the Magistrate on December the 4th, he began by saying: "I have killed my wife?" To this my answer is, firstly, that I am not satisfied beyond all doubt that the accused was speaking the truth when he said this. If he had been induced by injudicious advice, no matter from what quarter that advice may have proceeded, to tamper with the truth in other portions of his statement, he may not have been speaking the truth when he uttered these words. Secondly, as I have already pointed out, I might be prepared to believe that the accused truly said that he had killed his wife, and yet hold that in doing so he had not committed the offence of murder, or even that of culpable homicide. I am satisfied as the case stands that the conviction and the sentence recorded in the Court below cannot be affirmed and that, on the materials on this record, the appellant cannot be convicted of any lesser offence.

WALSH, J.—I agree that this appeal must be allowed. I have formed no theories about the case, but if I had to direct a Jury I should feel myself compelled to tell them, not as a matter of law but as a matter of common sense, that upon the mysterious condition of the evidence in this case it was their duty to give the defendant the benefit of the doubt.

As I have said before, and I repeat it because I think it is sound and indeed I think what my brother has said is in accord with it, that when a confession is the only evidence, that is to say, when there is no evidence of the crime except the confession relied upon, you must take the confession as a whole, that is to say, you cannot select, from the only evidence which you are proceeding to act upon in order to find the crime established as a fact at all, portions of it which you reject as untrue, and treat the balance which remains as truthful evidence. This does not seem to me a principle of law so much as a statement of sound reason and logic, and few cases could afford a better illustration of it than the present case. There are two statements in the confession, namely, the adultery by the deceased girl with other men, and the existence of love letters written by her, the first of which is in the highest degree improbable and the second of which is demonstrably untrue; but they are so completely involved in the confession itself as, to my mind, to constitute the confession a piece of testimony which no reasonable man would act upon in the ordinary affairs of life in a business of his own. The Judge has, I think, unfortunately treated this retracted confession, and the explanation given for its original utterance, as being necessarily an attack upon the Police. He says, "it is no doubt a retracted one but for all that, it is singularly free from suspicion." He further says, "it was made in the presence of a Police Officer who is above suspicion in the matter of bringing any pressure to bear upon the accused." In the sense in which the Judge used the words "free from suspicion," I agree with him. Where I differ from him, and I think it was a fatal misdirection, is in drawing the inference from that conclusion that the confession itself is necessarily true. It is quite consistent with all the facts of the case, and with the confession itself, that the accused was persuaded to make it voluntarily in his own interest, and was honestly supposed to be doing it in his own interest by the person who prompted him. I am inclined to think that the confession in that sense was quite voluntary and I accept the evidence of Mr. S. E. Anthony about it. But it is perfectly consistent with that hypothesis that nonetheless the confession was false, as indeed it has been shown to be to a large extent. There is one unsatisfactory feature about the trial and the way in which the conclusion was arrived at. There is great doubt, even mystery, upon the medical testimony and the appearance of the body, as to how the death was caused at all. In the calendar two witnesses were vouched, and sent up to the trial, for the purpose of proving that the accused had illustrated the manner in which death had been caused. It may be, I do not stop for the moment to enquire that it is not open to us now to look at that evidence, but it is part of the history of the prosecution and it is impossible for me to shut my eyes, in a case of this importance, to the fact that either because a doubt existed as to its legitimacy as evidence, or as to its trustworthiness, the point was deliberately abandoned by the prosecution. It is an elementary principle of criminal law, and certainly should be applied in a case of this gravity and difficulty, that the accused is entitled to the benefit of any point, such as this which was essential to the questions which lay at the root of the enquiry, which had been put forward and subsequently abandoned by the prosecution. A further difficulty in the case to which my brother has already referred, and which has been entirely overlooked in the decision of the case, is the bearing upon what really happened of the cuts inflicted on the deceased woman's toes after death.

The judgment reads in some particulars like a category of grievances against the accused and his friends. It cannot be too often repeated, because it ought always to be remembered and I think in this case it was forgotten, that there is all the difference between a trial of a criminal case where a man's life is at stake and a civil suit. It is not desirable to call upon the defence to frame a theory either at the beginning or at any other stage of the hearing, particularly in a case of difficulty in which the theory of the prosecution itself is by no means clear and whether there was any misunderstanding or not, Mr. Ross Alston, if he did refuse, was perfectly within his rights in declining to accept the invitation. I feel bound also to say that it is due to the father of the accused, to whom this case must in any view have been a source of great anxiety and who obviously was in a position of considerable difficulty in the witness-box, to say that, in my opinion, without having heard anything suggested against his demeanour at the trial, and after reading his evidence over and over again, he gave it with candour and freedom from any trace of dishonesty. He dealt in detail with the conversations which he had with his son, and with the Vakils who were advising at that critical moment in the defence, but as far as I can see, the evidence which he gave was, as I have said, candid and straightforward and I do think that some better reason should have been given for throwing over the whole of his testimony than the mere fact that his name was Mukherji.

The telegram, the absence of which is commented upon, is now in our hands. It has been produced by Mr. Ross Alston. There is one very curious feature about it, which only shows the importance in a case of difficulty of probing every clue, and this is the duty of the Police, as far as possible. Certainly before 2 o'clock, if not considerably before, the accused was at the Kotwali and from that moment remained in the custody of the Police. His witness says that the conversation about sending the telegram took place about 1.30. The telegram itself states officially that it was handed in at the Allahabad Telegraph Office at 12 minutes past 3. We are now informed that that hour relates to some transaction inside the office. The statement on the form is that the time was noted at the moment when it was handed in at the telegraph office. Therefore, the inference to be drawn from the telegram itself is, either that it was handed in at a time when the accused was in the custody of the Police or that there is great remissness in the telegraph office with regard to the entries of these matters. It is impossible to say that cases may not, and do not often occur, when the time and day of an act done, recorded accurately and officially, becomes of vital importance in an enquiry, and if the practice is in the post office to enter as the hour for handing in a telegram something which is two hours wide of the mark, the sooner that practice is abandoned the better. The entry ought to be accurate, and made in ordinary language, either in English or the language which is used for the telegram, so as to be readily understood by any person of ordinary intelligence without consulting a Code. This is a side issue, but it does so happen that the point has not actually been cleared up in the evidence. I agree that the conviction must be quashed.

BY THE COURT.—We accept this appeal, set aside the conviction and sentence in this case, acquit the appellant Surendra Nath Mukherji of the offence charged and direct that he be forthwith released.

Conviction set aside.

'Mamul', payment of, to Police Officer—Offence.*

The mere demand by a Police Officer of 'mamul' or a customary payment with a view to extend his favour to the person making the payment is in itself a threat and consequently, the obtaining of money by such a demand comes within section 46 of the Police Act. [p. 667, col. 1.]

Appeal under section 47 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act V of 1898) against the acquittal of the accused by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Guntur, in Criminal Appeal No. 20 of 1917, preferred against the conviction and sentence by the Stationary Sub-Magistrate, Guntur, in Calendar Case No. 51 of 1917.

Mr. E. R. Osborne, for the Crown.

Mr. K. P. Padmanabha Pillai, for the Accused.

JUDGMENT.—The prosecution case is that prosecution 1st witness paid three annas to accused as a "mamul." The demand of the "mamul" is spoken to not only by prosecution 1st witness but also by prosecution 2nd witness, and the payment of the money was witnessed by prosecution 4th witness, the Circle Inspector. The Sub-Magistrate who tried the case believed these witnesses, and there is certainly no reason, in our opinion, for disbelieving prosecution 1st witness, who made his statement to the Inspector at the earliest opportunity. Accused's story is that he paid three annas to prosecution first witness as earnest money for purchase of a goat, and that prosecution 1st witness returned the money as he withdrew from the bargain. Defence witnesses Nos. 1 to 3 are examined in support of this story, but the prosecution witnesses were not cross-examined as to their presence at the scene of offence and the Sub-Magistrate has given good reasons for rejecting their evidence. On the facts we think the Deputy Magistrate has paid too little regard to the opinion of the Magistrate who heard the evidence, an opinion in which we entirely agree.

As regards the point of law the Deputy Magistrate considers that all the elements necessary to constitute an offence under section 46 of the Police Act are not established. The mere demand of a "mamul" or customary payment made in order to obtain the favour of the official demanding it is itself a threat and consequently the obtaining of money by such a demand comes within section 46 of the Police Act. In this case we have also the evidence of prosecution 1st witness that he paid as the Police were troubling him, and in Exhibit A he says the Police threatened to take him to the Police Station; we, therefore, restore the conviction by the Sub-Magistrate under section 46 of the Police Act and confirm the sentence of imprisonment but reduce the fine to Rs. 15.

Criminal revision from a decision of the Magistrate, Shahabad.

Mr. Sushil Madhab Mullick, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application against the conviction of the petitioner under section 403 of the Indian Penal Code. The petitioner has been sentenced to an imprisonment of 25 days with a fine of Rs. 20.

The facts and circumstances relating to this case are shortly as follows:—

A sale-deed was executed in favour of one Gulzar Rai on July the 26th, 1917, whereby some land of the vendor was conveyed to the petitioner. That land was in the possession of the opposite party Inder Rai by virtue of a mortgage deed executed for Rs. 165. Under the terms of the sale-deed the petitioner was entitled to redeem the said mortgage in favour of the opposite party. Gulzar Rai, the executant of the sale-deed, did not register it, and, therefore, the petitioner had to apply to the Sub-Registrar of Koilwar for having a compulsory registration of the deed. The Sub Registrar refused to register the sale-deed. The petitioner, therefore, appealed to the District Sub-Registrar of Arrah. In support of his case the petitioner filed before the District Sub Registrar certain documents amongst which were the said rehan-deed in favour of Inder Rai and a bahi belonging to him. We are concerned only with these documents in this case. The petitions whereby the documents were filed before the District Sub-Registrar are Exhibits 5 and 6, dated the 5th September and 13th October 1917 respectively. Among other witnesses Inder Rai, the opposite party, was also examined as a witness on behalf of the petitioner in the registration appeal. He is witness No. 7, and was examined on the 5th September. The District Sub-Registrar allowed the appeal of the petitioner and compulsorily registered the sale-deed. Shortly after on the 24th November a petition was filed before the Sub Registrar for the return of the documents. This petition purports to be on behalf of both the petitioner and Inder

RAM BYAS RAI v. EMPEROR.

Rai, the opposite party, through a Mukhtear named Bhagwat Prasad. On the 27th November 1917 the papers were returned to the petitioner in the presence of the said Mukhtear. Four months after, on the 1st March, the opposite party, Inder Rai, made an application for the return of the documents. He was then told by the clerk in the registration department that the documents were already returned to the petitioner. A slip was also written by the clerk to the petitioner requiring him to see him at once. This slip is Exhibit 12. On the 6th March, Inder Rai, the opposite party, made another application before the Sub-Registrar asking for the return of the documents. In this application he has referred to the previous application made by him: this is Exhibit 9. The Sub-Registrar then called both the parties. The parties then took time to settle their differences out of Court. This was not done. The opposite party again appeared before the Sub-Registrar complaining to him that the papers which were taken away by the petitioner were not returned to him. The Sub-Registrar then passed an order that the opposite party might take any step he liked in the criminal Court and that the Registrar could not help him. Inder Rai, therefore, instituted proceedings out of which this matter has arisen. The Courts below have convicted the petitioner holding that he did not return the documents to the complainant, Inder Rai, but retained them with a view to misappropriate the money due on the mortgage bond by setting up a redemption of the mortgage and that he thereby committed a criminal misappropriation under section 403 of the Indian Penal Code.

The Courts below have held that the petitioner took back the documents from the registration department but did not return them to the opposite party. There can, of course, be no doubt that the parties were both on friendly terms prior to the filing of the documents before the Sub-Registrar and also that Inder Rai gave evidence before the Registrar not long before the documents were returned to the petitioner. Gulzar Rai, the vendor of the petitioner, after the execution of the sale-deed resiled from it and would not register the deed and hence the proceedings in the registration department arose. The money due under the mortgage bond to Inder Rai, the opposite party, was not paid, and could not be paid because the time for the payment, namely, the end of Jeth stipulated for in the mortgage bond had not arrived. This was admitted by the petitioner. Inder Rai was ready to give every assistance that lay in his power in order to support the case of the petitioner, so much so that although the money was not paid to him he handed over the documents without any demur and the documents were accordingly filed on behalf of the petitioner. He further supported the petitioner's case by giving his evidence on the 5th September 1917. The registration case being over, one would naturally expect that the parties would apply for the return of the documents soon after the order of the Registrar was passed. The petition, therefore, of the 24th November, which purports to have been filed on behalf of both the parties, is only natural. It is also clear that both the parties joined in the petition for the return of the documents. Some of the documents filed belonged only to the petitioner and others belonged to Inder Rai, the opposite party. This is supported by the evidence of Bhagwat Prasad Mukhtear, who says that both of them appeared before him and joined in the application filed by him for the return of the documents. This is a very important fact which bears upon the motive in this case, but unfortunately the Courts below have not considered it and perhaps their attention was not drawn to it. As the documents were filed only on behalf of the petitioner, the registration department returned the documents to him in the presence of Bhagwat Prasad. The Courts below have made much of the fact that the registration department clerk ought not to have returned the documents to Ram Byas Rai, the petitioner, but ought to have returned them to both the parties, as the application for the return of the documents was made by both of them. I do not appreciate this, I would rather think that the documents could not be returned to Inder Rai as they were not filed on his behalf. No Court or office can take the responsibility of returning documents to a person on whose behalf they are not filed simply because the documents might belong to that person. For the purpose of returning a document the Court recognises only the person on whose behalf the document is filed. The fact remains that the petition of the 24th November was filed on behalf of both the parties, and Inder Rai, therefore, knew that the documents were going to be returned. The petitioner, when he appeared before the Sub-Registrar, stoutly denied having retained the documents with him at that time and boldly asserted that the documents were made over, soon after they were taken back from the registration department, to the opposite party. It appears to me that there is a good deal of substance in the plea of the accused, inasmuch as if the documents were not returned to the opposite party for four months he would surely have come to Court and repeated his grievance long before the 1st of March, the date on which he made his first appearance before the registration department and complained in respect of the documents. This throws a great suspicion on the complainant's case. The present course adopted by the complainant, opposite party, four months after the documents were returned to the petitioner, is probably due to some unfortunate dispute which has since cropped up between the parties. There is an indication of this in the report of the Sub-Registrar to the Sub-Divisional Officer, in which he says that there was something else in the hearts of both the parties and that he, therefore, advised them to have their grievances settled by arbitration. They took time to do it but could not make up their differences. The evidence in the case is too meagre for a sure and certain finding that the petitioner did not make over the documents to the opposite party. Even if it be admitted that the documents were not returned, there is nothing to show that there was a criminal motive on the part of the petitioner. The Courts below have said that the object of the petitioner was to misappropriate the mortgage money and to set up the redemption of the mortgage. The opposite party is in possession of the land mortgaged to him. The petitioner's case has all along been that no money was paid to the opposite party and that the mortgage has not been redeemed. This was his case when he applied for the compulsory registration of the sale-deed and has been so throughout the proceedings in the registration department. Even when he appeared before the District Sub-Registrar four months after the documents were returned to him, he said that the mortgage of Inder Rai was not redeemed. This was his case in the trying Court and as well as in this Court (vide the sworn petition of motion). There is nothing to show that there has been any attempt thereto on his part to deprive Inder Rai of his money or to use the documents for his own purposes. In the absence of any overt act on his part, no inference of dishonest motive can be imputed to him simply by the retention of the documents, Queen v. Abdool (1). The chief element for a conviction under section 403 is the dishonest misappropriation of the property or conversion to one's own use, Crown v. Muhammada (2), Bhuban Mohan Banerjee v. Tansuk Roy Seraogi (3). The petitioner's avowedly honest statement all through that the mortgage has not been redeemed has not been at all considered by the Courts below in imputing a dishonest motive to him.

I, therefore, set aside the conviction and sentence of the petitioner and direct that he be discharged from his bail bond. The fine, if paid, should be refunded.

Conviction set aside.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 436—

GANPAT V. EMPEROR.

Offence, minor, cognizance of, by Court—Graver offence disclosed, charge for, not pressed by prosecution—Commitment to Sessions on graver charge, legality of.

Where a Magistrate takes cognizance of a minor offence against an accused, and a graver offence triable by the Sessions Court is disclosed in evidence but the prosecution does not press for the framing of a charge in respect of such offence, a commitment to the Sessions Court in respect of the graver offence is illegal.

Krishna Reddi v. Subbamma, 24 M. 136; 2 Weir 544, explained.

Petition praying that in the circumstances stated in his Letter D. No. 3230, dated the 3rd April 1918, the High Court will be pleased to quash the commitment of Marappa Goundan, accused, in Sessions Case No. 21 of 1918, on the file of the Sessions Court, Coimbatore (P. R. No. 2 of 1918 on the file of the Court of the Sub-Magistrate of Mettupalayam).

The Hon'ble Mr. T. Richmond, for the Accused.

Mr. E. R. Osborne, the Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

ORDER.—The decision in Krishna Reddi v. Subbamma (1) goes only to this extent, that, where the prosecution had pressed for the framing of a charge of a higher offence triable by the Sessions Court, even if the Subordinate Magistrate had originally taken cognizance only of a charge relating to a lesser offence, the refusal of the Magistrate to frame the charge for the higher offence might be treated as an order of discharge in respect of that offence and that section 436 of the Criminal Procedure Code would, in those circumstances, give the District Magistrate jurisdiction to direct the Subordinate Magistrate to commit the accused to the Sessions on the graver charge.

In the present case the offence of attempt at rape was not mentioned in the Police charge sheet on which the Subordinate Magistrate took cognizance of the case and the prosecution did not press for the framing by that Magistrate of a charge against the accused in respect of that offence.

The Sessions Judge was, therefore, justified in holding that the decision in Krishna Reddi v. Subbamma (1) could not be extended so as to cover this case, and we accordingly accept the reference. Quashing the commitment we direct the Subordinate Magistrate of Mettupalayam to proceed with the trial of the charges for the minor offences framed by him against the accused.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 377—Unnatural offence—Proof—Evidence, uncorroborated, of person on whom offence committed, whether sufficient.

In cases under section 377 of the Penal Code it is, as a rule, unsafe to convict on the uncorroborated testimony of the person on whom the offence is said to have been committed, unless for any reasons that testimony is entitled to special weight [p. 670, col. 2.]

Petition, under section 439, Criminal Procedure Code, for revision of the order of the Sessions Judge, Multan, dated the 28th January 1918, affirming that of an Honorary Magistrate of the 1st Class, Multan, dated the 20th December 1917, convicting the petitioner.

Mr. Mukand Lal Puri, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—The conviction rests solely on the evidence of the boy Muhamda, whose statement is not supported by Sulla and Yaru, the alleged witnesses of the offence.

No semen was found on the clothes either of Muhamda or of Ganpat, and no injuries were found on their persons.

Muhamda admits that he had hurt his thigh while ploughing 2 or 3 days before and that it bled, so this would account for the blood colouring matter found on his loin cloth, and the presence of such matter on Ganpat's loin cloth might be equally well explained.

It appears to me that in a case of this kind it is, as a rule, unsafe to convict on the uncorroborated testimony of the person on whom the offence is said to have been committed, unless for any reasons that testimony is entitled to special weight. Muhamda is a boy of 14, and it cannot be said to be improbable that he may have been tutored. The offence is said to have been committed on the 10th October, and it is noteworthy that the boy admits that he did not tell his father Ramzan about it till the next day and it was not till the 12th that a report was made at the Thana. I also note that Ramzan speaks of only of Sulla having been mentioned to him by Muhamda as witness of the occurrence, whereas Yaru is said to have witnessed it as well.

Further, there is an important discrepancy as to where the boy went after the commission of the offence. He says in Court that he was first taken by the witnesses to the well and that in the evening (not the morning, as stated by the learned Sessions Judge in his judgment) he was taken by the accused and Mehra to Shamkot and stayed the night with the accused. But in the report at the Thana what he said was that after the accused had run away he returned to his well, and Ganpat's brother Babu kept him there for the night.

From this discrepancy alone it would appear that Muhamda is not an entirely straightforward witness. He has not satisfactorily explained why after Sulla and Yaru had come up and the accused had run away, he did not go straight to his father and complain to him.

In my opinion, therefore, implicit reliance cannot be placed on Muhamda's evidence, and Ganpat should not be convicted thereon.

I accept the application, set aside the conviction and sentence, and acquit Ganpat and direct that he be set at liberty and the fine, if paid, be refunded.

Revision accepted.

On a complaint being made to a Magistrate that public rights in a channel had been interfered with, the Magistrate took proceedings under section 133, Criminal Procedure Code, and coming to the conclusion that the channel in question was in fact a public channel passed orders under sections 139 (1) and 140 (1), Criminal Procedure Code:

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—This is a Rule calling upon the District Magistrate of Howrah to show cause why the orders under sections 139 (1) and 140 (1), Code of Criminal Procedure, complained of in the petition should not be set aside or why such other order should not be passed in the matter as to this Court might seem fit and proper on grounds Nos. 1 and 2 mentioned in the petition. The proceedings with which we are concerned in this case are proceedings taken under section 133, Code of Criminal Procedure. The learned Sub Divisional Magistrate of Uluberia proceeded to enquire on a complaint that public rights had been interfered with and he came to the conclusion that the channel was, in fact, a public channel. Mr. Mukherjee, who appears for the petitioners in this case, says that, having regard to the rulings of this Court, the Magistrate ought to have first enquired whether his clients had a bona fide claim of right to the channel; and, if he found that they had, then he should have referred the parties to the Civil Court. No doubt, in certain decisions of this Court the rule is stated to that effect: but those words do not appear in the section and I think that every case must largely turn on the particular circumstances affecting it. No doubt, in normal cases that course is a wise and proper course to adopt. It is not con.

EMPEROR V. VARADACHARIAR.

venient that a Court of this nature should adjudicate and settle matters which can properly be referred to the Civil Court. But there are other cases—cases of urgency—where that rule, notwithstanding the fact that it may place one of the parties in a less favourable position, cannot be followed and it seems to me that the present case is one of those cases where the Magistrate has got to choose whether he would proceed with the case and determine it or whether serious injury would be caused to the other party. I think in this case we ought not to interfere with the orders complained of, the Magistrate having determined that the public have a right to the water of the channel, as it would, if the petitioners' argument be assented to, seriously affect a very large portion of land of the persons who appeared before the learned Magistrate.

The other point that has been made is that the learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate was guilty of a serious contempt of Court in ordering the bund to be cut after an order had been made by this Court on the 16th August last staying all further proceedings. It is said that the order was communicated to the learned Magistrate by a Mukhtar. Whether the learned Magistrate believed the statements made by the Mukhtar as credible or not we do not know. There is no answer to the affidavit filed by the petitioners and I do not know whether the Magistrate ever knows of it or not. There seems to be no reason, if the petitioners intended to communicate an order of an urgent nature to the Magistrate, why an order in some form or other should not have been taken from this Court to communicate to the Magistrate. Whether any actual rule exists or not as to that I do not know; but I take it that, where the order is of a very urgent nature, there cannot be any difficulty in procuring an order from the Court and sending it down by the party who obtains the order to communicate it to the Magistrate. I do not think we can assume in this case that the learned Magistrate was deliberately acting in defiance of the order of this Court. I think this is a case where we ought not to interfere, having regard to the nature of the public right which the learned Magistrate has found to exist. That being so, the Rule fails and must be discharged.

TEUNON, J.—I agree.

Owner and occupier, liability of.*

The words "whoever contravenes" in section 420 of the Madras City Municipal Act, 1904, cover owners as well as occupiers of the premises.

The construction of an inflammable pandal or the continuance of an existing one is an offence under section 282 read with section 420 of the Act.

Appeal, under section 417 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, against the acquittal of the aforesaid accused by the Court of the 4th Presidency Magistrate, Egmore, Madras, in Calendar Case No. 17776 of 1917.

The Crown Prosecutor, for the Appellant.

Mr. K. S. Krishnaswamy Ayyangar, for the accused.

JUDGMENT.—We are quite clear that this section 282 (of the Madras City Municipal Act, 1904) read with section 420 (of the Act) was intended to reproduce section 264 of the old Act (The City of Madras Municipal Act, 1884), which made the new construction of an inflammable pandal or the continuance of an existing pandal, etc., of that character an offence. The pandal in question is clearly unlawful and there is no written permission of the President to legalise it. We think that the language of section 420 (the Madras City Municipal Act, 1904), "Whoever contravenes", is wide enough to cover an owner and occupier of premises which offend against the section.

We set aside the acquittal and impose a fine on the defendant of Rs. 5.

Oudh Laws Act (XVIII of 1876), Ch. II, s. 9—Pre-emption—Sale of house by riaya—Suit for pre-emption, maintainability of.

A sale by an occupier of a house in a village who has merely the ordinary rights of a riaya in it, does not give rise to a right of pre-emption exercisable under Chapter II of the Oudh Laws Act, inasmuch as under section 9 of that Act, unless the transferor is a proprietor of a proprietary or under-proprietary tenure or a share in such a tenure, no right of pre-emption comes into being. [p. 674, col. 1.]

Mangal v. Raja Partab Bahadur Singh, 4 O. C. 26, followed.

Appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Fyzabad, dated the 23rd February 1917, confirming that of the Munsif, Akbarpore, dated the 23rd October 1916.

Syed Wazir Hasan, for the Appellants.

Mr. Mohammad Wasim, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are very simple. A widow called Asuda was the occupier of a house in Kasba Jalalpur, Fyzabad district. She had in this house the ordinary rights of a riaya, that is to say, she owned the materials but had no title in the site. She sold this house to one Abdul Ghani. The proprietors of the village have sued to exercise a right of pre-emption under the provisions of Chapter II, Act XVIII of 1876. The lower Courts dismissed the suit, relying on the decision in Mangal v. Raja Partab Bahadur Singh (1). The learned Counsel for the appellants at the first hearing of this appeal admitted that, if that decision were followed, this appeal must fail. He stated, however, that he proposed to question the view of the law taken in that decision. The appeal was accordingly referred to a Bench for decision. In Mangal v. Raja Partab Bahadur Singh (1), Mr. Spankie laid down that, unless the sale was one by a proprietor or under-proprietor of the land in a village, no right of pre-emption was created. The learned Counsel for the appellants has argued on the following lines. Under the provisions of section 6, Act XVIII of 1876, what is referred to as "the right of pre-emption" is stated to be "a right of the persons hereinafter mentioned or referred to to acquire, in the case hereinafter specified, immoveable property in preference to all other persons." He points out that that section does not specify who are the persons who acquire the right but that those persons are specified in section 9 in the order in which they are entitled thereto, that is to say—

(1) 4 O. C. 26.

(1) co-sharers of the sub-division (if any) of the tenure in which the property is comprised, in order of their relationship to the vendor or mortgagor,

(2) co-sharers of the whole mahal in the same order,

(3) any member of the village-community,

(4) if the property be an under-proprietary tenure, the proprietor.

He thus finds the persons entitled to the right. He then proceeded to consider what was the property to which the right applied. That is found in section 7. It is the property in all village communities, whether proprietary or under-proprietary, and in the cases referred to in section 40 of the Oudh Land Revenue Act, and extends to the village site, to the houses built upon it, to all lands and shares of lands within the village boundary, and to all transferable rights affecting such lands. He urged that, as this was a house built upon the village site, it was property to which the right applied, and, as he finds the appellants amongst the persons entitled to the right and the property in suit as property subject to the right, he argues that there must be a right of pre-emption in their favour. This argument, however, ignores the existence of two other necessary conditions. To establish such a right of pre-emption as created by Chapter II of the Act, we must discover as constituent elements—firstly, the person entitled to the right, secondly, the property over which the right can be exercised, thirdly, the nature of the transfer,

fourthly, the status of the transferor.

MAUNG MYO v. MAUNG KWET E.

His argument does not cover the two latter points. The nature of the transfer is given in section 10. It must be a private sale or a foreclosure of a mortgage. Here there was a private sale, so that question is settled. But where his argument fails is with regard to the fourth point. Under section 9, unless the transferor is the proprietor of a proprietary or under-proprietary tenure or a share of such a tenure, no right of pre-emption comes into being. This point is not made very clear in Mangal v. Raja Partab Bahadur Singh (1). But it is undoubtedly the point upon which Mr. Spankie based his decision. The words of the Chapter must be strictly construed. It could not be suggested for a moment that, where the transfer has been by a gift, any right of pre-emption could exist and it is equally the case that, where the transferor is not a proprietor of a proprietary or under-proprietary tenure or a share in such a tenure, no right of pre-emption comes into being.

We, therefore, accept the principle laid down in Mangal v. Raja Partab Bahadur Singh (1) and dismiss this appeal accordingly. The appellants will pay their own costs and those of the respondents.

MAUNG MYO—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT
versus

MAUNG KYWET E—DEFENDANT—
RESPONDENT.

Defamation—Damages, suit for, maintainability of, in respect of charge which has formed subject of complaint.

Where one man charges another with an offence and without unreasonable delay makes that charge the subject of a complaint to the Police or to the Court, he is protected from an action for defamation of character in respect of allegations contained in the charge. If the complaint is dismissed, the accused has two remedies, one by obtaining sanction for the prosecution of the complainant for bringing a false charge, and the other, if he has suffered loss or injury, by a suit for damages for false and malicious prosecution. [p. 675, col. 2.]

Mr. G. S. Pillay, for the Appellant.

Mr. Tha Gywe, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Plaintiff sued for Rs. 100, damages for defamation of character, on the ground that the defendant had falsely charged him with setting fire to his, defendant's house. The defence was that the charge was true. The first Court gave plaintiff a decree for Rs. 60. On appeal the lower Appellate Court stated that the suit was for damages for malicious prosecution according to the plaintiff-respondent's Advocate, and on the authority of certain Indian cases dismissed the plaintiff's suit. The plaintiff now comes to this Court in second appeal under section 13 of the Upper Burma Civil Courts Regulation.

The plaintiff-appellant urges that his suit was not or was not merely for damages for false and malicious prosecution, and no statement of his Advocate in the lower Appellate Court could alter the nature of the suit which was to be ascertained from the record. This is undoubtedly the case. The plaint as filed alleged in paragraph 2 that the defendant had come to the plaintiff's house, while the plaintiff was asleep, with the headman and village elders, and had charged the plaintiff with having set fire to his house. The plaint went on to state that the defendant was on bad terms with the plaintiff, that the charge was false, that the plaintiff had been defamed thereby and had suffered loss and injury. The case was at first dealt with ex parte, but the defendant appeared later and was allowed to defend the suit. The Judge of the lower Appellate Court says in his judgment that "the plaintiff was too premature. He had not even waited to see what the result of the information given to the Police would be." But there is nothing on the record to show when the information was laid with the Police; and though the defendant appeared and was examined before issues on the 21st July 1916, the suit having been filed on the 1st July 1916, and then stated that he had lodged a complaint with the Police, in his cross-examination when examined as a witness, he admitted that this suit had been filed before he had made his complaint to the Police. It would seem, therefore, that the suit could not have been a suit for damages for a false and malicious prosecution since, at the time it was filed, no step had been taken towards prosecuting the plaintiff; the cause of action cannot, therefore, have been a prosecution which had not even reached the stage of a report to the Police at the time the plaint was filed.

The judgments relied upon by the lower Appellate Court appear to lay down that unless and until cognizance is taken of a complaint by a Court and some action is taken to require the plaintiff to appear and answer a charge, it cannot be said that there is any prosecution and there can, therefore, be no right of action for damages on the ground that there is a prosecution which is false and malicious. This view appears to have been dissented from in the Bombay case of Ahmedbhai v. Framji Edulji (1), and in the case of Bishun Pergash v. Fulman Singh (2) a Bench of the Calcutta High Court in 1914 examined the case-law on the subject and expressly dissented from the view taken in the Calcutta and Madras cases relied upon by the lower Appellate Court. I am bound to say that there appears to me to be much force in the arguments by which the learned Judges in this later case arrived at their conclusions. It is not necessary to refer to them in detail because, as has been pointed out above, this suit was not a suit for damages for malicious and false prosecution. But I have referred to these cases because there appears to be another question arising in this suit which is referred to in two at least of the cases cited which appears to be of importance, and that is whether an action for defamation would lie against a defendant in respect of a charge which has formed the subject of a complaint to the Police or to Court. In the case of Bishun Pergash v. Fulman Singh (2) cited above, the plaintiff also claimed damages for defamation, but the Judges refused to consider this claim on the ground that it was not put in issue and for other reasons. In the case of Golap Jan v. Bhola Nath (3), however, it was held that even if the complaint to the Magistrate was defamatory, still the complainant was entitled to protection from suit and this protection was the absolute privilege awarded in the public interest to those who make statements to the Courts in the course of and in relation to judicial proceedings. This view of the law appears to be correct. Defamation of character is not a ground for claiming damages for false and malicious prosecution which may be granted upon proof of actual loss or damage. The law provides sufficient protection for an accused person in the prosecution of a complainant who has deliberately brought a false charge. But if this is the case, it appears to me to be more than doubtful whether a plaintiff is entitled to sue for damages for defamation on the ground that the allegations which formed the subject of the complaint to the Police or Magistrate had been previously made outside the Court, and whether if he were so entitled the effect would not be to deprive the complainant of his privilege and would not be opposed to public policy. A person who had reason to believe that an offence had been committed, would be very seriously and unfairly handicapped if he were bound to keep his reasons to himself and to go to Court without making any enquiry into the truth of his suspicions, under penalty of having to meet an action for damages if he did not follow this course. I am of opinion therefore that the defendant-respondent having taken his complaint to the Police and to Court, so far as the record shows, without unreasonable delay was protected from an action for defamation of character in respect of allegations contained in his subsequent complaint. This being so, the plaintiff-appellant's suit was bound to fail. He had, when the complaint was filed and was dismissed, two remedies, one by obtaining sanction for the prosecution of the defendant for bringing a false charge, and the other, if he suffered loss or injury, upon the authority of the Calcutta case of 1914 cited above, by a suit for damages for false and malicious prosecution. In this view of the case the appeal is dismissed with costs throughout.

Section 115, Civil Procedure Code, authorises the Court to call for the record of any case which has been decided, but where there has been no decision and the case is still pending, interlocutory orders passed during the course of the hearing cannot be made the subject of revision, unless those orders have the effect of determining the case, so far as the party applying for revision is concerned, or concluding the claim otherwise in a manner not open to appeal. JUDGMENT.—This is an application for revision of an order passed in a suit, pending in the Court of the Second Additional Judge of Lucknow, refusing to permit an amendment of the plaint in certain particulars.

The plaintiff is a minor and has instituted a suit, claiming possession of the Mahewa Estate, as the heir-at-law of the late Taluqdar, Rajendra Bahadur Singh. The defendant, Jai Indra Bahadur Singh, claims the estate as the legatee of Rajendra Bahadur Singh. The plaintiff is represented in the suit by his mother, who is his next friend. The allegation of the plaintiff in regard to the Will set up by Jai Indra Bahadur Singh is that Rajendra Bahadur Singh was a man of weak intellect and mind, and was for various reasons in fear of Sheo Indra Bahadur Singh, with whom he lived and who was the manager of his estate, and that the latter took advantage of his position and of Rajendra Bahadur Singh's weakness, and got him to execute a Will in favour of his own son, Jai Indra Bahadur Singh by the exercise of coercion and undue influence.

These allegations were denied by the defendants. In his replication the plaintiff reiterated what he had stated in the plaint and affirmed that Sheo Indra Bahadur Singh had got his brother Rajendra Bahadur Singh to execute the Will by fear and undue influence.

The plaint was verified by the next friend of the plaintiff, and the replication was verified by her general agent.

It is now sought to amend the plaint so as to add that the execution of the said Will by Rajendra Bahadur Singh was also denied. The ground on which the amendment was pressed in the Court below, was that the mother and next friend of the plaintiff had on previous occasions contested the genuineness of the Will in other cases to which the plaintiff was a party and that her agent and Counsel had wrongly represented her as admitting the execution of the said Will by Rajendra Bahadur Singh without her knowledge or permission. The Court below disallowed the application.

The learned Counsel who now appears for the plaintiff urges in revision that the next friend of the minor was in any event entitled to apply for the amendment of the plaint in the interest of the minor, if on a reconsideration she thought that she had wrongly made admissions prejudicial to his interest. We cannot, however, allow that question to be considered in revision because, as pointed out in Heeranchal Kunwar v. Kanhai Lal (1) and in Nand Ram v. Bhopal Singh (2), no application for revision lies from an interlocutory order which does not determine the case. An appeal would lie from the final decree which might be passed in the suit. Section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure authorizes the Court to call for the record of any case, which has been decided, but where there has been no decision, and the case is still pending, interlocutory orders, passed during the course of the hearing, cannot be made the subject of revision, unless those orders have the effect of determining the case, so far as the party applying for revision is concerned, or concluding the claim otherwise in a manner not open to appeal. In Riasat Ali v. Rae Rajeshar Bali (3) and in Allahabad Bank v. Muhammad Raza Khan (4) an application in revision was entertained from an order adding or refusing to add a person as a party to a suit, because so far as the right to add that person as a party was concerned, the order had the effect of concluding it. In Musammatt Farid-un-nisa v. Mukhtar Ahmad (5), an application for revision was similarly entertained from an order directing the plaintiff to elect and remove one of the two inconsistent allegations, because the effect of the forced removal would have been to determine that part of the case.

In the present case, it is open to the plaintiff to contest the propriety of the order refusing him leave to amend the plaint under section 105 of the Code of Civil Procedure, when an appeal is filed from the final decree. The consequences of the application for amendment being allowed in appeal may sometimes be embarrassing, as evidenced by the decision in Sevugan Chetty v. Krishna Aiyangar (6), but the ground on which the application for amendment is pressed in this Court is different from that urged in the Court below, and it may be still open to the plaintiff to move the Court below for a reconsideration of its order. We do not desire at this stage to express any opinion on the merits of the application for amendment.

We disallow the application for revision accordingly. The opposite party will get one set of costs from the applicant.

Revision rejected.

Letters Patent (Cal.), cl 15—“Judgment,” meaning of—Order dismissing appeal without investigation, whether “judgment” - Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 5—Appeal, delay in presenting—Review, time spent in obtaining, exclusion of—Sufficient cause.

The term “judgment” in clause 15 of the Letters Patent means “decree” or “order”, consequently an order of dismissal of an appeal without investigation of the merits may be a “judgment.” [p. 679, col. 1.]

Quære.—Whether an order dismissing an appeal on the ground that it had been preferred after the period of limitation prescribed therefor and that sufficient ground had not been made out for extension of the period under section 5 of the Limitation Act is a “judgment” within the meaning of clause 15 of the Letters Patent.

An appellant is not entitled, as a matter of right, to a deduction of the period during which his application for review remains pending in the Court below. He has to seek extension of time under section 5 of the Limitation Act, in other words, to satisfy the Appellate Court that he had sufficient cause for not preferring the appeal within the prescribed period. [p. 679, col. 1.]

Letters Patent Appeal against the decision of Mr. Justice Newbould, dated the 21st March 1916, in Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 2545 of 1913, against the decision of the Subordinate Judge, 1st Court of Chittagong, dated the 7th October 1912, affirming that of the Munsif, 2nd Court at Patiya, dated the 8th July 1911.

NEWBOULD, J.—This appeal admittedly was filed after the period of limitation had expired. The appellant filed a petition supported by an affidavit asking that the appeal might be registered and it was ordered that it should be registered, subject to objection at the hearing.

The facts of the case, so far as they are necessary for dealing with the point now raised, are as follows:—The appeal against which this second appeal was preferred was disposed of on the 7th October 1912. On the next day, 8th October 1912, an application was made for review of that judgment. That application was dismissed on the 12th April 1913. The present appeal was filed in this Court on the 9th July 1913; but the application for registering the appeal after time was not made till the 4th August 1913. The learned Pleader for the respondent has conceded for the sake of argument that the appellant is not to blame for the delay that took place between the 8th October 1912 and the 12th April 1913 in disposing of the application for review. His contention is that the appellant ought not to be allowed to proceed with this appeal because he has given no explanation for the delay of the period between the disposal of the review application and the filing of this appeal. In my opinion, this contention must be allowed. The facts of this case are similar to those of the case of Gobinda Lal Das v. Shiba Das Chatterjee (1). In that case, the question was whether an appeal filed after time on account of the delay in the hearing of an application for review should be admitted. The two learned Judges who heard the Rule (Rampini and Mookerjee, JJ.) differed, the former holding that the filing of an application for review was no sufficient ground for extending the time for filing an appeal and Mookerjee, J., on the other hand, holding that the Rule should be made absolute and time for filing the appeal extended "as the grounds upon which the review was asked were prima facie proper and reasonable and the appeal to this Court was presented with due promptitude, as speedily as might be, after the disposal of the application for review of judgment." In that case, the application for review was rejected on the 24th November, the petition for leave to file the appeal was drawn up on the 27th November and presented to this Court on the 30th November, which was the next day for hearing applications. On behalf of the appellant, it is contended that the time occupied by the application for review should be ignored and the appellant should be allowed the ordinary ninety days from the date when that matter was decided. This contention finds considerable support from a decision of the Punjab Chief Court in Karm Bahsh v. Daulat Ram (2). That decision was considered in the judgment of Mookerjee, J., to which I have already referred, at page 1330*. In discussing this and other decisions, he remarked:—"Upon a review of these authorities, it is clear, that there has been some difference of judicial opinion as to the manner in which the discretion of the Court, in extending the period prescribed for an appeal, should be exercised. The earlier Full Bench cases in this Court lay down that as an ordinary rule, allowance should be made for the period during which an application for review is pending, and the later cases lay stress on the condition that such application for review must be a bona fide and a proper one presented and carried on with due diligence and that the appeal itself is presented without unreasonable delay after the rejection of the application for review." In the present case, in the absence of any explanation of the delay between the 12th April and the 9th July 1913, I cannot say that this appeal was presented without unreasonable delay after the rejection of the application for review. I must, therefore, refuse to exercise in the appellant's favour the discretionary power given to me by section 5 of the Limitation Act. The petition of appeal is, therefore, rejected with costs, one gold mohur.

Babu Mohini Mohan Chuckerburty, for the Appellant.

Babu Chunder Sekhar Sen, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal under clause 15 of the Letters Patent from a judgment of Mr. Justice Newbould. The appeal was dismissed by him under section 3 of the Indian Limitation Act, on the ground that it had been preferred after the period of limitation prescribed therefor and that sufficient ground had not been made out for extension of time under section 5.

A preliminary objection has been taken that the appeal is incompetent as the decree made by Mr. Justice Newbould is not a "judgment" within the meaning of clause 15 of the Letters Patent. In support of this view reliance has been placed upon the decision in Gobinda Lal Das v. Shiba Das Chatterjee (1). On behalf of the appellant that case has been distinguished, on the ground that there the Court had to deal with an application for registration of the appeal after expiry of the period of limitation and that the effect of the order was that the appeal was never registered, while in this case the appeal was registered and was dismissed subsequently under section 3 of the Indian Limitation Act. We need not decide whether the distinction is or is not substantial; but we observe that the decision in Gobinda Lal Das v. Shiba Das Chatterjee (1) has been criticised and distinguished in the case of Mathura Sundari Dassi v. Haran Chandra Shaha (3). It may also be pointed out that as repeatedly ruled by this Court [Doucett v. Wise (4), Upendra Nath Bose v. Bindeshri Prosad (5) and Krishen Doyal Gir v. Irshad Ali Khan (6)], the term "judgment" in clause 15 of the Letters Patent means "decree or order," and that consequently an order of dismissal of an appeal without investigation of the merits may be a "judgment." In the present case, however, it is not necessary for us to enter upon a discussion of this question, because, the appeal, if competent, must fail on the merits. The application for review was, no doubt, presented to the lower Court with due diligence on the 8th October 1912, that is on the day following the disposal of the appeal in that Court. The application for review was dismissed on the 12th April 1913, but the appeal to this Court was not presented till the 9th July 1913, and no application was made under section 5 of the Indian Limitation Act till the 5th August 1913. No explanation has been offered for this delay. The decision in Gobinda Lal Das v. Shiba Das Chatterjee (1) shows that the appellant is not entitled, as a matter of right, to a deduction of the period during which the application for review remained pending in the Court below. He has to seek extension of time under section 5 of the Indian Limitation Act, in other words, to satisfy this Court that he had sufficient cause for not preferring the appeal within the prescribed period. He is consequently under an obligation to explain satisfactorily why he did not come to this Court till the 9th July 1913, and further why he did not apply for extension of time till the 4th

August 1913. This he has completely failed to do. The appeal was obviously barred by limitation and there was thus no ground whatever established for extension of time.

The result is that the decree made by Mr. Justice Newbould is affirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

JUDGMENT.—The decision of both the lower Courts in this case is erroneous and must be set aside. The facts of the case may be very briefly stated. One Bhagwandin, who is the first defendant in the suit out of which this appeal has arisen, made a mortgage in favour of the second defendant Naraindin of a 4-pies share in certain Zemindari property. This mortgage was made in the year 1907. Later on the mortgagee brought a suit for foreclosure, the defendant impleaded being the mortgagor Bhagwandin. When that suit was instituted, the sons of Bhagwandin, who are the plaintiffs in the present case, applied to be made parties on the ground that they were interested in the subject-matter of the dispute. The defence which they put forward was that the property was joint ancestral family property, that their father had no right to mortgage the ancestral property and that there was no reason which in law would justify the passing of a decree which would bind the family property on the ground that the debt had been borrowed for legal necessity or in the interests of the joint family. The Court which was dealing with that case gave effect to this defence. It dismissed the suit for foreclosure but gave a personal decree for the mortgage debt against the father Bhagwandin. Thereafter the decree-holder proceeded to take out execution of this personal decree and in execution it seems that he attached the 4-pies share which had been mortgaged in the year 1907. The sons objected to this attachment. Their objection was dismissed and in consequence of the order of dismissal they filed the present declaratory suit. The relief which was claimed in the suit was that it should be declared that the entire family property was exempt from attachment and sale in execution of the personal decree obtained against Bhagwandin the father. In the alternative it was prayed that if the whole of this relief be not granted, it should nevertheless be declared that the interest of these sons of Bhagwandin was not liable to be taken in execution of the decree. Both the Courts below have dismissed the suit in its entirety.

They have proceeded on the principle that the sons are liable to pay the father's debt and that, therefore, it was not possible in the present proceedings to hold that this property which belonged to them was not liable to be taken in execution in order to satisfy the father's debt. However, we have it on the authority of a very recent decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council, which is reported as Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (1), that so long as the father in a Hindu family is alive, the pious obligation to discharge his debts which is allowed by the Hindu Law upon his sons cannot be enforced. To quote the words of Lord Shaw, which are to be found at page 443* of the report, "While the father, however, remains in life, the attempt to affect the sons' and grandsons' share in the property in respect merely of their pious obligation to pay off the father's debts, and not in respect of the debt having been duly incurred for the interest of the estate itself, which they with their father jointly own, that attempt must fail; and the simplest of all reasons may be assigned for this, namely, that before the father's death he may pay off the debt, or after his death there may be ample personal estate belonging to the father himself out of which the debt may be discharged." Consequently I must hold that the reason which has led the Courts below to their decision is not a good reason in law, and obviously the proper decree to be passed in the case was a decree declaring that the interest of these five plaintiffs in this share, which is joint family property, was not liable to be attached and sold in execution of the decree. The learned Counsel for the appellants has argued very strenuously that the plaintiffs are entitled to have a declaration made in respect of the entire joint family property including the interest of the father Bhagwandin, but that proposition does not appear to me to be maintainable. It has, I think, been settled definitely that under a decree against any individual co-parcener for his separate debt a creditor may during the life of the debtor seize and sell his undivided interest in the family property. Consequently it appears to me that it was competent to the decree-holder in this case to apply for attachment and sale of the joint undivided interest of Bhagwandin in this ancestral family property and to have the share brought to sale. The purchaser of such an interest is after his purchase entitled to enforce his rights by partition.

I am given to understand that while these proceedings have been going on in Court, the property has already been brought to sale and has been purchased by the decree-holder himself. In that case I may observe here that he has bought the property subject to the result of this litigation and the result will be that he will be deemed to have acquired only the interest of Bhagwandin in this joint family property. I allow the appeal to this extent, therefore, that I give the plaintiffs a decree declaring that their interest in this joint undivided family property, consisting of 4-pies Zemindari share, was not liable to attachment and sale in execution of the decree obtained by the second respondent against their father Bhagwandin. The plaintiffs are entitled to costs in all three Courts.

Buddhist Law, Burmese—Succession—Pongyi, whether can inherit from lay relatives after ordination

A pongyi or rahan divests himself of all worldly possessions at the time of his ordination and thereafter is incapable of inheriting property from his lay relatives [p. 682, col. 2.]

Mr. Pershad for Mr. C. G. S. Pillay, for the Appellants.

Mr. Tha Gywe, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs, U Inguya and U Nyannawun, are Burmese Buddhist priests. They sue their cousin Maung Pwe for partition and possession of their two-thirds share of the undivided estate of the common grandfather Tha Byo. Tha Byo had three children, one son Maung Gyi and two daughters Ma Cheik and Ma Nge. U Inguya is a son of Ma Cheik, U Nyannawun of Ma Nge, and Maung Pwe of Maung Gyi. The plaintiffs' case is that the lands in suit, which belonged to Tha Byo, remained undivided in the hands of his descendants and are now in the possession of Maung Pwe, and that they, as representing Tha Byo's two daughters, are entitled to recover two-thirds of the estate from Maung Pwe who represents the son. The second plaintiff U Nyannawun also alleged that Maung Pwe had been paying him one-third of the produce of the land annually as his share of the income, and because Maung Pwe had refused to pay in the year 1275, he claimed to recover twenty baskets of paddy from Maung Pwe as arrears.

Maung Pwe replied that Burmese Buddhist priests cannot inherit from their lay relations, that he had been in adverse possession of the lands for over twenty years, that the plaintiffs relinquished their rights in his favour some sixteen years ago and that, even if the plaintiffs could inherit, they would not be entitled to the shares which they claimed.

The trial Court framed issues as to—

(1) Whether the plaintiffs, being pongyis, could inherit from their lay relatives,

(2) whether their claim was barred by limitation,

(3) whether they had relinquished their rights in favour of Maung Pwe,

(4) what share they would be entitled to, supposing that they could inherit, and

(5) whether the second plaintiff was entitled to recover arrears of his share of the produce.

After recording evidence, the Court found on the authority of the ruling of this Court in Ma Fwe v. Maung Myat Tha (1) that the plaintiffs being pongyis could not inherit from their lay relatives, and on this finding dismissed their suit.

The plaintiffs appealed to the District Court which, holding on the authority of Mi Taik v. U Wiseinda (2) that it was settled law that pongyis could inherit, set aside the judgment and decree of the trial Court and directed that the suit should be re-admitted and decided on the merits.

The trial Court then found that, in view of the fact that the last of Tha Byo's children died some thirty years ago and Maung Pwe had been in undisputed possession ever since, the plaintiffs' claim was barred by limitation.

The plaintiffs again appealed, and the District Court held that the claim was not barred by limitation and again remanded the case for trial on the merits.

(2) 2 Chan Toon's Leading Cases 235.

MAUNG PWE v. U INGUYA.

The trial Court then found that Maung Pwe failed to prove that the plaintiffs had relinquished their rights in his favour, and holding on the evidence that the plaintiffs succeeded in proving that they were each entitled to one third of the estate and that the second plaintiff was entitled to recover from Maung Pwe one-third of the produce of the lands from 1275 B. E. onwards, gave judgment for plaintiffs with costs.

Maung Pwe appealed but his appeal was dismissed with costs.

He now comes to this Court in second appeal under the provisions of section 100 of the Code of Civil Procedure and he still alleges that under Burmese Buddhist Law a priest cannot inherit from his lay relatives.

The rulings of this Court on this point have undoubtedly been conflicting.

In Ma Fwe's case (1), cited above, the learned Judicial Commissioner, Mr. Burgess, held that a Burman on entering the monastic order retained no interest in the property which he possessed before his ordination.

In Ma Taik v. U Wiseinda (2) another Judicial Commissioner, Sir George Shaw, expressed the opinion that there was nothing in Burmese Buddhist Law to prevent a monk from acquiring by inheritance property which he proceeds to devote to religious purposes.

In U Tilawka v. Nga Shwe Kan (3) my learned predecessor Mr. McColl said: "I think it is clear that a monk is debarred by the rules of his order from mortgaging property descended from his ancestors, and indeed from owning such property."

All doubt in the matter seems now to have been set at rest by the decision of the Chief Court of Lower Burma in the case of Shwe Ton v. Tun Lin (4). In that case the question before the Full Bench for decision was whether the next-of-kin of a pongyi are entitled on his death to inherit from him lands which he received after his ordination (a) as inheritance, or (b) as a gift. In order to decide the first part of this question the learned Judges found it necessary to decide whether a pongyi can inherit lands from his lay relatives after his ordination, which is the very question which arises in the present case. On this point the judgment of the Chief Court is as follows: "We are not prepared to hold that a pongyi can inherit from his lay relatives. When a pongyi or rahan is ordained, his severance from his family is so complete that, if he was a married man before, he is regarded as having divorced his wife. He is certainly cut off as completely from his original family as if he had been adopted into another family. We consider it inconsistent with a pongyi's personal status that he should inherit from his natural family with whom all ties of relationship have been annulled."

This ruling supports the opinion of my learned predecessor and I have no hesitation in following it.

The first plaintiff in the present case was admittedly ordained before his mother died, so there can be no doubt that he could not inherit from her and it is as her heir that he claims a share in the land in suit. His claim must clearly fail.

The second plaintiff says that his parents both died when he was a child. If this is true he had already acquired the status of heir before he was ordained, and the question arises whether or not, after his ordination, he can still claim to be heir to his parents. There can be no doubt that Burmese Buddhist priests divest themselves of all worldly possessions at the time of ordination. That being so, the second plaintiff must have divested himself of his rights as heir to his parents and grand-parents when he entered the priesthood, and he cannot now claim to be heir to Tha Byo. His claim to a share of Tha Byo's estate must, therefore, fail.

But if he had no right to the lands, he clearly had no right to any share of the produce, and the contribution of twenty baskets of paddy which he alleges Maung Pwe paid to him as his share of the produce must be regarded as a charitable gift, which is what Maung Pwe says it was. As a matter of fact it was not Maung Pwe who gave the paddy, but Maung Pwe's tenants, and the evidence goes to show that they gave it not by direction of Maung Pwe but as a result of the influence of the pongyi. However that may be, it seems clear that the second plaintiff had no right to demand the payment and his claim under this head also must be dismissed.

I find, therefore, that the plaintiffs were not entitled to claim any share of the estate in suit or of the income thereof and I set aside the judgments and decrees of the lower Courts and dismiss the plaintiffs' suit with all costs.

Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881), s. 83, applicability of—Handi payable at sight—Holders for valuable consideration—Consideration money, return of.

Section 83 of the Negotiable Instruments Act has no application to cases of hundis payable at sight, inasmuch as such hundis are presented not for acceptance but for payment. [p. 684, col. 1.]

Holders of hundis for valuable consideration are entitled to return of the consideration money paid by them to their endorsers, if the hundis subsequently turn out to be worthless and no payment can be obtained upon them. [p. 684, col. 2.]

The Hon'ble Pandit Gokaran Nath Misra, for the Appellants.

Mr. John Jackson and Babu Salig Ram, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—These two appeals (Nos. 200 and 201 of 1914) may be disposed of by one judgment. They have arisen out of two suits brought by two sets of plaintiffs against the same set of defendants. The principal defendants in the case were the third, fourth and fifth defendants whose names are Lalta Prasad, Mul Chand and Phul Chand. The facts of the case may be briefly set out. On the 24th of December 1912 two hundis were drawn by the first defendant Sheo Prasad upon a firm in Cawnpore, which was owned by the sixth defendant in the suit, Salik Ram. These hundis were handed to the second defendant Gur Dayal in payment of certain moneys due to him by Sheo Prasad. This defendant endorsed the hundis to the third and fourth defendants Lalta Prasad and Mul Chand. It is necessary to explain here that Lalta Prasad is the father of the fourth defendant Mul Chand and also of the fifth defendant Phul Chand, the latter being a minor whose age is given as nine years. Lalta Prasad and his two sons have two places of business, one at Kachhauna in the Hardoi district and another in Sandila also in the Hardoi district. The former business is run in the names of Lalta Prasad and Mul Chand while the business at Sandila is carried on in the names of Mul Chand and Phul Chand. After the hundis had been endorsed to the Kachhauna firm owned by Lalta Prasad and Mul Chand, the hundis were passed on by the Sandila firm to the present plaintiffs. The hundis were sent by these plaintiffs to the seventh defendant Gauri Shankar, who carries on business at Cawnpore. The hundis were endorsed to him not by way of negotiation but merely in order to enable him to present the hundis for payment as the agent of the plaintiffs. The seventh defendant Gauri Shankar took the hundis to the firm owned by Salik Ram upon which the hundis were drawn. They were first taken to Salik Ram's place of business on the 28th of December, on which date it is said Salik Ram was not there. On that date his munim wrote on the hundis the word 'dekha', meaning that the hundis had been presented. Presentation for payment was made on successive dates from the 28th of December up till the 9th of January 1913 and on this latter date Salik Ram dishonoured the hundis. He took objection first of all to the endorsements in favour of the plaintiffs and he also made a further objection regarding the cancellation of the handi stamps. As soon as this was done, the hundis were returned by the seventh defendant Gauri Shankar to the plaintiffs, who thereupon communicated with their endorsers defendants Nos. 3 to 5, from whom they claimed the money. These defendants refused to pay and these suits were instituted. The Court of first instance decreed the claims. The Subordinate Judge held that there were irregularities in the endorsements in favour of the plaintiffs in this way, namely, that whereas the hundis had been endorsed to Lalta Prasad and Mul Chand by the second defendant Gur Dayal, the endorsers who passed the notes on to the plaintiffs were Mul Chand and Phul Chand, the members of the other firm trading at Sandila. He also was of opinion that the stamps had not been properly cancelled, and for these reasons it was held that the hundis could not be used in evidence, but he was of opinion that it having been proved that the plaintiffs had given value for these hundis which were subsequently dishonoured, the third, fourth and fifth defendants were liable. It may be noted here that in the defence put up by these three defendants it was contended that the endorsements in favour of the plaintiffs were in order and also that there was no irregularity about the stamps. For this reason they contended that there was no cause of action against them. A further plea was put forward to the effect that no reasonable notice of the fact of dishonour had been communicated to these defendants. This plea was based upon the terms of section 83 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, a section which can have no application to the facts of the present case. Section 83 provides a rule relating to the presentation of bills of exchange for the purpose of acceptance. Here the hundis were not being presented for acceptance, but for payment for they were payable at sight. The third, fourth and fifth defendants went in appeal to the District Judge, who dismissed the suits. He has taken a view of the law which in my opinion is altogether untenable. After adverting to the finding of the Court below regarding the informality in the endorsements and the irregularity about the cancellation of the stamps, he went on to say that there was no question of loan in the case. He pointed out that in the plaints and throughout the cases it had been alleged that the two hundis had been sold and that it was not the case for the plaintiffs that any money had been lent upon them. Then he went on to point out that the defendants Nos 3 to 5 were holders for valuable consideration and he argued in this way, namely, that as the plaintiffs wanted these hundis and paid for them, they took the hundis over with their eyes open and subject to all risks. One of the risks he mentioned was that the drawee might go bankrupt, as he apparently did in the present case; but I am informed and the matter has not been disputed that Salik Ram did not become bankrupt until after the date upon which he refused to cash the hundis. The learned Judge sums up his discussion by saying, "In any case the plaintiffs knew what they were getting or could have known and now that the hundis are worthless the loss must fall on them." This is an altogether mistaken view of the rights of the parties. The facts remain that the plaintiffs in these two suits gave money to the third, fourth and fifth defendants for hundis which have turned out to be worthless and upon which no payment could be obtained. This being so, they are in every way entitled to the return of their money. The third, fourth and fifth defendants were clearly liable to the plaintiffs. I, therefore, allow both these appeals, set aside the decree of the Court below and restore the orders of the Court of first instance with costs to the appellants both here and in the Court below. Babu Salig Ram, who has appeared in this Court on behalf of the respondent Gauri Shankar who was impleaded as the seventh defendant, has pointed out that his client was impleaded without any cause of action being shown against him and without any relief being sought against him. There can be no doubt as to the correctness of the plea. Gauri Shankar had only been acting as the agent of the plaintiffs and there was no relief which they could seek against him. I, therefore, direct that Gauri Shankar's costs be paid by the present plaintiffs-appellants in all three Courts.

Appeal allowed.

Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Monghyr.

Syed Mohammad Tahir, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Lalit Mohan Ghose and Baranasi Prasad Jhunjunwala, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff is the appellant. He brought a suit for ejecting the defendants from the lands in suit under section 66 of the Bengal Tenancy Act after serving them with a notice under section 49 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, alleging that they are his under-tenants. There is also a prayer to recover Rs. 26-9-0 the rent of the land as damages including cesses, and also mesne profits from 1322 F. S. up to the recovery of possession.

The defendants on the other hand claimed that they had acquired the rights of occupancy tenants and that the plaintiff was merely a tenure-holder on the basis of a mustajri lease, and not an occupancy tenant of the land. Thus the pleadings of the parties raised the following issues framed by the Munsif who tried the case. The issues were:—

(1) What is the status of the plaintiff in relation to the jote in suit? (Issue No. 4 of the Court below).

(2) Are the defendants shikmidars of the plaintiff? (Issue No. 5 of the Court below).

The Munsif decided both the issues against the plaintiff and held that the plaintiff was a tenure-holder and that the defendants were occupancy raiyats of the disputed land. The Munsif accordingly dismissed the suit of the plaintiff.

The plaintiff appealed to the District Court and raised the question that the defendants were precluded from claiming that they were occupancy tenants and that the plaintiff was a tenure-holder, inasmuch as the status of both the defendants and the plaintiff was decided in a previous litigation between the parties. In other words, the plaintiff contended that the plea of the defendants was barred by res judicata. Prior to the present suit there were two suits brought by the plaintiff against the defendants and the contentions of the parties are based upon the decisions in those cases. It is, therefore, necessary to give briefly the history of those two cases.

In 1911 the plaintiff brought the first suit under section 66 of the Bengal Tenancy Act for the ejectment of the defendants in the Court of the Munsif of Monghyr, being Suit No. 43 of 1911. In that suit it was held that "the defendants are under-raiyats and the plaintiff is the raiyat of the land in suit." Upon that basis a decree for rent was made with the direction that "if the decree amount be not paid within 15 days, the plaintiff to get khas possession of the jote land." The judgment of the Munsif is Exhibit 12 and the decree is Exhibit 9. There was no appeal from that decree. Apparently the defendants paid the amount of the decree and hence they were not ejected.

Subsequently the plaintiff brought another suit in the same Court for the rent of 1318 and the first 8 annas kist of 1319, and for ejectment. This suit was numbered 123 of 1912. The same Munsif, who decided the first case, held contrary to his previous decision that the "defendants are under-raiyats and the plaintiff a raiyat" and dismissed the suit. The Munsif did not give effect to his former judgment on the ground stated by him in the following words: "the judgment, Exhibit 2, shows that the decree for ejectment in that suit was based upon the entry in the khatian, that is, the defendants are under-raiyats and the plaintiff a raiyat, but it has now been found in this case that the said entry is not correct. So I hold that the defendants are not precluded from raising this question in this suit." This judgment is dated the 15th June 1912 and is Exhibit D filed by the defendants.

On appeal by the plaintiff, the Additional Subordinate Judge upheld the aforesaid decision of the Munsif on a ground quite different from that of the Munsif in the following words: "It appears to my mind that there would not have been a decree for ejectment in this suit on quite a different ground. The arrears sued for were one for the last half of 1318 and the first half of 1319", and hence "there could not be a decree for ejectment in this suit under section 66 as there was a claim for the arrears of the first half year of 1319..... The Pleaders on both sides now admit that there could not have been a decree for ejectment in this suit under section 66, as there was a claim for the arrears of the first half of 1318." The Subordinate Judge concluded his judgment in the following words:—

"It is, therefore, unnecessary for me to decide if the defendants were raiyats or under-raiyats of the land." This judgment is Exhibit D in Rent Appeal No. 136 of 1912.

Upon the judgment and the decree, Exhibits 12 and 9 respectively, in Suit No. 43 of 1911, the plaintiff contended before the lower Appellate Court that the plea by the defendants as to their status is barred by the principles of res judicata. The learned Subordinate Judge at one place in his judgment said that section 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure and the judicial decisions would "apparently make the decision of the first suit res judicata on the question of status." But curiously enough the learned Subordinate Judge did not give effect to his finding, on the ground stated by him "that in the peculiar circumstances of the case I cannot hold that the first previous judgment now relied upon by the appellant can operate as res judicata and disallow this contention of his". I fail to appreciate this. The principle of res judicata bars the jurisdiction of the Court to entertain the matter already decided between the parties by a Court of competent jurisdiction. All the requirements of section 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure were complied with, as held by the learned Subordinate Judge. Hence no circumstances would at all prevent the decision of that case from operating as a bar to the entertainment, by any Court, of the issues decided in that case. I, therefore, hold that the decision in suit No. 43 once for all determined the status of the parties. I cannot yield to the contention on behalf of the respondents that the decision arrived at in that suit was subsequently held in Suit No. 123 of 1912 to be wrong, and hence the judgment cannot operate as res judicata. It was for the defendants to set right the decision of the Munsif by an appeal or proper proceedings sanctioned by law. This was not done, and it was not open to the defendants to dispute in any way the validity of that judgment and to set up the plea that they have the status of occupancy tenants in the subsequent suit No. 123 of 1912, nor is it open to them to raise the plea in the present suit.

The judgment in Suit No. 43 of 1911 is final and is binding between the parties as to their respective status in the land in suit.

It is then contended that the decision in the second case operated as res judicata. The Subordinate Judge has accepted this view and I think that he is entirely wrong. The Appellate Court's judgment in that case is Exhibit 11 and the decree is Exhibit 8. No doubt the Munsif in his judgment Exhibit D, dated the 15th June 1912, held that the defendants were not under-raiyats and he did not at all take into consideration the decision in the first case. The Appellate Court, however, left the question undecided and thought that for the purpose of that case it was unnecessary to decide the status of the parties, inasmuch as the suit of the plaintiff was dismissed on the ground that it comprised claims for more than one year in contravention of section 65 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The Appellate Court's judgment has taken the place of and superseded the decision of the Munsif. It is well known that the principle of res judicata cannot apply where the question is left open and undecided by the Court.

SAIYED-UN-NISA V. MAIKU LAL.

It was then contended that the question of the defendants' status was left open in the judgment of the Subordinate Judge in the second case, and hence it was open to the defendants to show by evidence that they have acquired the status of occupancy tenants in the lands in suit. It has been suggested that the decision of the Subordinate Judge in the second suit leaving the question of the status open would operate as res judicata upon the contention of the plaintiff that the question was concluded by the decision of the first case. I am not able to appreciate this argument. This appears to me to be an argument in circle. The decision of the first Court was a final adjudication of the status of the parties and is a permanent bar to the points decided therein being agitated in any Court.

Lastly it has been contended that the plea of res judicata cannot be given effect to as it was not raised in the trying Court. The plea of res judicata is a question of law and can be raised at any stage.

In the case of Muhammad Ismail v. Chatter Singh (1) a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court held that the plea of res judicata can be taken for the first time even in second appeal. Latterly the same Court in Kanahai Lal v. Suraj Kunwar (2), a Divisional Bench of the same Court qualified the above by holding that the Appellate Court is not bound to entertain the plea, for it cannot be decided upon the record before that Court if its consideration involves the reference of fresh issues for determination by the lower Court.

In the present case the plea of res judicata does not appear to have been raised in the first Court but the judgments and decrees of that case were filed and marked as Exhibits in that Court. The plea was not only definitely taken in the lower Appellate Court but was entertained and decided by that Court. On the other hand, it does not appear from the judgment of the lower Appellate Court that any objection was taken by the respondents to the plea being raised and determined by that Court. The materials were sufficient for the determination of the plea in the first Court and also in the lower Appellate Court and so in this Court as well. I, therefore, overrule the contention of the respondents and hold that the plea was rightly entertained by the lower Appellate Court and that the plaintiff is entitled to press it in second appeal in this Court. Upon the judgment and decree of the first case in Suit No. 43 of 1911, which were conclusive and operative as res judicata, the defendants are only under-raiyats and are liable to be ejected from the holding under section 66 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the conditions of which have been fully complied with.

The Munsif has held that the notice under section 49 of the Bengal Tenancy Act was properly served and that it was valid and sufficient for the purpose of the suit and also that the issue regarding the payment was not pressed by the defendants (vide the decision of the Munsif on issues Nos. 3 and 8). These findings of the Munsif have not been challenged by the defendants either before the lower Appellate Court or in this Court, and must be accepted.

The plaintiff is, therefore, entitled to a decree for possession as well as to recover rent of the land for the year 1320 and damages and mesne profits from 1322 up to the date of recovery of possession.

The result is that the suit is decreed with costs throughout. The appeal is also decreed with costs.

Appeal decreed.

In cases where the tacking of possessions is allowed, it is essential that the adverse possessions which are to be tacked must be of the same or of an identical nature. Thus, a mortgagee from a trespasser cannot, as against the true owner, tack his mortgagee possession to that of his mortgagor, the reason being that the latter is a trespasser on the proprietary right, whilst the mortgagee holds adversely merely to the extent of his mortgagee interest. [p. 689, col. 2.]

The legal principle which is embodied in section 41 of the Transfer of Property Act is based upon the doctrine of estoppel, and the mere circumstance that the real owner kept silence and advanced no claim for a long time cannot be treated as evidence of such an implied consent on his part to the continuance of the trespasser's possession during that time, as can be profitably availed of by a transferee from the trespasser. JUDGMENT.--The facts of this case are a little complicated and require to be set out in some detail. The suit was brought by the plaintiff appellant Musammât Saiyed-un-nisa for recovery of 1-anna 1-3/11-pies share in a property described as Chak Naya Gaon. The defendants in the case, Maiku Lal and others, are in possession of this property under a mortgage which was executed in their favour in the month of May 1904; and they resisted the plaintiff's claim on various grounds which will be presently noticed.

The plaintiff Musammât Saiyed-un-nisa is the daughter of a man named Fakir Bakhsh, who died in the year 1898. This man left the plaintiff and another daughter and also four sons Aziz Bakhsh, Amir Bakhsh, Sultan Bakhsh and Sattar Bakhsh. After Fakir Bakhsh's death the four sons took possession of the property to the exclusion of the plaintiff and her sister. Mutation was effected in their names in equal shares. After this in the year 1899 one of the sons, Aziz Bakhsh, executed a deed of gift in favour of his wife Musammât Khurshed Qadar Begam, by which he purported to transfer to her a 6-annas share in Chak Naya Gaon. Later on Aziz Bakhsh and his three brothers joined in executing a sale-deed of the whole 16-annas of Chak Naya Gaon in favour of Baldeo, Behari and others. After this took place a suit was brought by Musammât Khurshed Qadar Begam to recover the whole 16-annas of Chak Naya Gaon. From a reference to the proceedings in this previous litigation it would seem that Khurshed Qadar Begam never got possession of the property which her husband Aziz Bakhsh had transferred to her by gift. It is also clear from the revenue records that no mutation was ever made in Khurshed Qadar Begam's favour after the deed of gift had been executed by her husband. In her suit Khurshed Qadar pleaded that she was entitled to a 6-annas share of Chak Naya Gaon by virtue of the deed of gift executed by her husband, and she claimed to be entitled to the other 10-annas by right of pre-emption. The case was fought out to this Court and was eventually settled by a compromise. The result was that Khurshed Qadar Begam was given a decree for the whole 16-annas. She was to get 6 annas under the deed of gift and was to pay a sum of Rs. 5,800 for the purpose of pre-empting the remaining 10-annas. In order to enable her to raise the money which she was required to deposit in Court in satisfaction of the pre-emption decree, Khurshed Qadar Begam mortgaged the entire 16 annas to the second defendant in this suit, Prag Dat, on the 23rd of May 1904. She borrowed a sum of Rs. 6,000 and deposited the necessary amount in Court retaining the balance for herself. The mortgage was a mortgage with possession and it is under this mortgage that the defendants now claim.

In the year 1909 the present plaintiff Saiyed-un-nisa and her sister sued their brothers and Khurshed Qadar Begam and certain other persons who were alleged to be transferees, for the purpose of recovering their shares of the estate left by their father Fakir Bakhsh. Those cases were also fought out to this Court and in the end the claim of Musammât Saiyed-un-nisa was decreed. Her sister's suit failed on the ground that it was barred by limitation. After obtaining a decree from this Court, Sayed-un-nisa applied to the Revenue Court for mutation. She was resisted by the present defendants who pleaded that they were in possession and the result was that mutation was refused. She has, therefore, brought the present suit for the purpose of recovering her share of the property from these mortgagees.

In the fifth paragraph of the written statement, the defendants set up their title as mortgagees under the deed of the 23rd of May 1904. In the 11th and 12th paragraphs of the written statement, reference is made to the facts which have been set out above regarding the history of the dealings with this property since the time of Fakir Bakhsh's death. In the 13th paragraph of their statement of defence, the defendants pleaded that their mortgagor Khurshed Qadar Begam was the owner in possession of the entire 16 annas of Chak Naya Gaon, and they claimed that they were entitled to hold possession, being the mortgagees from the absolute owner. As an alternative plea to this, they pleaded that at any rate Khurshed Qadar Begam was the ostensible owner and that they were in possession as mortgagees in good faith and for consideration. In the 14th paragraph it was pleaded that the suit was barred by limitation and in the 15th paragraph the defendants stated that in any event the plaintiff was not entitled to recover possession without redemption of the mortgage of the 23rd of May 1904.

The Court of first instance dismissed the suit and its decree has been affirmed on appeal by the learned District Judge.

In second appeal two pleas are raised. In the first place it is argued that the Courts below were wrong in applying the provisions of section 41 of the Transfer of Property Act for the purpose of holding in favour of the defendants that they were transferees in good faith and for valuable consideration. The other plea is that the Courts were wrong in holding that the suit was barred by limitation. In my opinion both these pleas must be allowed.

To deal first with the question of limitation, it is obvious from what has been stated that the case for the defendants is that they are mortgagees in possession claiming under a deed which was executed in their favour on the 23rd of May 1904. They obtained possession under this deed, and as the present suit was brought on the 29th of January 1916 the suit, as a suit for possession, is clearly within time. It seems that these defendants imagine that they are entitled to join on to the period of their own possession as mortgagees the period during which Musammât Khurshed Qadar Begam and her predecessors, who were trespassers, were in possession. But the learned Counsel for the respondents had to concede in the course of the argument that this position was not open to him. If the case for the defendants is that by virtue of adverse possession they have acquired the right of mortgagees, then the answer is that their possession in this capacity has not extended over the full statutory period of 12 years; and for the purpose of resisting the plaintiff's claim to possession of the property, it is not possible for them to say that they are entitled to the benefit of the period during which Khurshed Qadar Begam or her predecessors were in possession. In cases where the tacking of possessions is allowed, it is well established that the adverse possessions which are to be tacked, must be of the same or of an identical nature. A mortgagee from a trespasser cannot, as against the true owner, tack his mortgagee possession to that of his mortgagor, the reason being that the latter is a trespasser on the proprietary right, whilst the mortgagee holds adversely merely to the extent of his mortgagee interest. It is plain therefore that the defendants cannot be heard to say that they have acquired the rights of usufructuary mortgagees by prescription as against Saiyed un-nisa, and no case is or can be set up on their behalf that they are in any way entitled to possession as absolute owners. So much for the plea of limitation.

There remains the other question of the applicability of section 41 to the transaction of mortgage relied upon by these defendants. I have already mentioned that in the 13th paragraph of the written statement the defendants set up a plea that Khurshed Qadar Begam was "at any rate the ostensible owner of the Chak Naya Gaon" at the time she made the mortgage in the defendants' favour. For the purpose of section 41 of the Transfer of Property Act, it is not sufficient for the defendants to say that Khurshed Qadar was the ostensible owner of the property. It was also necessary for them both to plead and to prove that Khurshed Qadar was the ostensible owner with the consent, express or implied, of Musammât Saiyed-un-nisa. In this respect it seems to me that the defendants' case has failed entirely. No such consent on the part of the present plaintiff as is required by section 41, has been established. All that has been made to appear, is that from the time of Fakir Bakhsh's death up till the time when Saiyed-un-nisa brought the suit against her brothers and Khurshed Qadar, she never attempted to make any claim with respect to her share of the inheritance. In dealing with this question, the learned Judge of the Court below has made the following observations:—"It has been argued that the plaintiff did not consent to the ostensible ownership of Khurshed Qadar. It seems to me that the argument that she afterwards claimed that she had been dispossessed, does not help her. If a person on being dispossessed of property, does not take immediate action to recover possession, it seems that until such action is taken, the person must be said to be consenting to the continuance of the possession." In the first place this is not a correct statement of the facts in this case. It is quite clear that Saiyed-un-nisa never obtained possession of this property after the death of her father Fakir Bakhsh. It was not until she brought her suit against her brothers and Khurshed Qadar that she got a decree for possession. She had not been in possession before that time; and again it is not in my opinion a correct statement of the law to say that mere acquiescence on the part of Saiyed-un-nisa, that is to say, her failure to come forward and assert any claim to the property, can be treated as evidence of consent in law. I may mention here that it was proved in the previous case, and the fact is practically admitted, that at the time when her father died, Musammât Saiyed-un-nisa was not more than 15 or 16 years of age. The property was seized by her brothers immediately after the death of her father and no question of consent on the part of Saiyed-un-nisa can arise in these circumstances. Being a minor, she was incapable in law of giving any consent. Again it is not sufficient in a case of this kind to prove that the real owner of the property merely kept silence and advanced no claim. The legal principle which is embodied in section 41 of the Transfer of Property Act is based upon the doctrine of estoppel, and unless the defendants can point to some positive conduct on the part of Saiyed-un-nisa from which an implied consent could be inferred, they cannot be allowed to avail themselves of the provisions of this section. No express consent is, of course, pleaded in the present case. There is nothing whatever to show that Saiyed-un-nisa took any steps for the purpose of deceiving persons who were dealing with the property. She did not stand by or encourage the dealings of the defendants with her property and it cannot be said that she was under any duty to the present defendants to come forward and tell them at any time that she had a claim to the property, even if we are to suppose that a lady in her position had the means of knowing that her property was being alienated. On the facts it would be difficult to assume that she had any knowledge of what was going on. Silence or acquiescence on the part of the owner only amounts to deception where there is a duty to speak. All that the defendants can point to here is that Musammât Saiyed-un-nisa never came forward to claim the property between the date of her father's death in 1893 and the year 1908 or 1909 when she brought her suit against her brothers and Khurshed Qadar Begam. If the view of the law accepted by the lower Appellate Court is recognized as correct, there is an end to the doctrine of adverse possession, for, if, as the learned Judge supposes, a person, who is dispossessed of property, must be deemed to be consenting to the continuance of the possession of the trespasser during the interval he remains quiescent and does not advance any claim, it necessarily follows that the possession of the trespasser is not adverse possession but possession with the consent of the true owner.

Another point which has been raised on behalf of the appellant, is that the defendants also failed to show that in taking this mortgage they had acted with reasonable care for the purpose of ascertaining that their mortgagor had power to make the transfer. As regards this, it seems to me unnecessary to discuss the matter, for in view of what I have said, it must be held in the appellant's favour that there was no proof whatever that she consented either expressly or impliedly to Khurshed Qadar's posing as the ostensible owner of Chak Naya Gaon. Section 41, therefore, did not apply to this case.

The result is that I allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the Court below and direct that the plaintiff's claim be decreed with costs in all three Courts.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XVII, r. 3 —Appeal—Default of appellant in paying translation and copying fees—Procedure.

A Court does not act ultra vires in dismissing a suit or appeal where materials essential for the progress of a suit or appeal such as translation of vernacular documents, preparation of Bench copies, etc., are wanting owing to the plaintiff's or appellant's default. [p. 692, col. 1.]

Mr. Robertson, for the Appellant.

Mr. Giles, for the Respondents.

ORDER.—In Civil Miscellaneous Appeal No. 161 of 1917 time was allowed to the appellant to pay translation and copying fees by the 25th February. The fees had not been paid on that date and there was no appearance on behalf of the appellant before the Assistant Registrar although the case had appeared on the warning list on the 22nd February and on the daily list of the 25th February. The Assistant Registrar ordered that the Advocate should be reminded and that the case should be laid before the Bench on the 4th March. When the case was called on the 4th March no cause was shown for further extension of time. It was admitted that no intimation had been sent to appellant up to that date. The Court thereupon directed that the appeal should be dismissed for default.

Subsequently an application was made to review the order of dismissal on the ground that the Court had exceeded its jurisdiction under Order XVII, rule 3, in making the order of dismissal. The application was admitted and notice was issued to the respondent. The learned Advocates on both sides have now been heard. Mr. Robertson for the appellant cites the Allahabad case of Sitara Begam v. Tulshi Singh (1). In that case it was held that a Court had no power to dismiss summarily a plaintiff's suit merely because the plaintiff had failed to comply with an order of the Court directing him within a certain time to pay in a sum of money as the cost of preparing a map which the Court considered to be necessary for the decision of the suit. But the learned Judges remarked that the Munsif in that case was certainly not bound to adjourn the hearing of the suit, that it was for the plaintiff to establish her claim by such evidence as she was in a position to adduce on the date fixed and if that evidence failed to substantiate the claim, it should, of course, be dismissed. It is true that Order XVII, rule 3, does not expressly authorise the Court to dismiss the suit where the party to whom time has been granted, fails to produce his evidence or to cause the attendance of his witnesses or to perform any other act necessary to the further progress of the suit. What the rule says is that the Court may, in those circumstances, proceed to decide the suit forthwith notwithstanding the party's default. Mr. Giles argues that this is intended to be a concession to the party who is at fault inasmuch as it permits the Court to pronounce a decision there and then on such deficient materials as it may have before it. The wording of the rule certainly favours this view. We have to consider what course remains for the Court to follow when it does not or cannot on the materials before it, pronounce a decision. It is certainly not bound to grant an adjournment to the party at fault for the purpose of doing that which he has already had sufficient time to do. The wording of the rule shows that the default of the party may be such as to prevent the suit from proceeding any further. In such circumstances it seems reasonable to infer that the suit must be struck off or dismissed. The default in the present case consisting in omitting to take necessary steps for the preparation of Bench copies and translation of vernacular documents without which it was obviously impossible that the case could proceed, it was not a case in which the Court could proceed to decide the suit forthwith, the materials before the Court being insufficient for that purpose. In the Allahabad case it was no doubt possible for the Munsif to decide the case without the aid of the map which he had called for, but if Bench copies and translations are not provided for a Bench appeal, it is obviously impossible for the case to proceed at all.

(1) 23 A. 462; A. W. N. (1901) 149.

Two Madras cases of Shaik Saheb v. Mahomed (2) and Pethaperumal Chetti v. M. Servaigaran (3) were also cited on behalf of the applicant. These cases are authorities for holding that an order of dismissal for default does not always operate as a bar to a subsequent suit. But they do not show that a Court acts ultra vires in dismissing a suit when materials essential for the progress of the suit are wanting owing to the plaintiff's default.

We are of opinion that the order dismissing the appeal in the present case was a lawful order and we dismiss the application for review with costs, Advocate's fee 3 gold mchurs.

Application dismissed.

JUDGMENT:—In this case a revenue sale was held, in which 1st defendant's land was sold under Revenue Recovery Act (II of 1864). A petition under section 37A of that Act to set aside the sale, was dismissed and also a petition under section 38 (1), Act II of 1864. These two orders were passed by the Deputy Collector, and his order of confirmation of sale, was approved by the District Collector under the powers conferred on him by section 3 of the Madras Regulation VII of 1828. By this confirmation the order of confirmation under section 38 (3) of Act II of 1864 became final. Later on, however, the Board of Revenue directed the Collector to cancel the sale and he cancelled it accordingly. Plaintiff's suit to set aside this last order and to recover possession of the property purchased by him at the revenue sale, has been decreed by the Subordinate Judge. The first objection taken is that under Madras Regulations I and II of 1803 which gave the Board of Revenue power of general superintendence over Collectors, the Board had the power to set aside the sale. When a certain power is given to the Collector by Statute it is not open to the authority having only general powers of revision over him, to direct him to pass a special order contrary to what he had already done. In this case the order cancelling the sale though purporting to be passed by the Collector was really the order of the Board of Revenue who had no such power under Act II of 1864. We have not been referred to any authority in support of this contention and we cannot accept it.

It is next argued that as the District Collector has powers of revision over Assistant Collectors exercising the powers of a Collector, under Madras Regulation VII of 1828, he had under section 38 (3) of Act II of 1864 power to pass the final order cancelling the sale. The order under section 38 (3) of Act II of 1864 was, however, passed in this case by the Deputy Collector, and when his order was confirmed by the District Collector, it became a final order passed by the Collector within the meaning of section 38 (3) and neither he nor the District Collector had himself power under the Act to pass any further order. We cannot accept a further contention that the proviso to clause (3) of section 38 gives power to set aside a sale after it has been confirmed under the first part of the section. The power given under that clause is one that must be exercised in lieu of the confirmation of the sale.

The third point is that this suit is barred by limitation under section 59 of Act II of 1864, as it has not been brought within six months of the order complained against. The order setting aside the sale, was in effect a review of the previous order confirming the sale and, therefore, following Damodra Nadar v. Municka Vachaka (1), we think that section 59 is inapplicable, for it was an order passed wholly without jurisdiction, and not under any power conferred by the Act. In this view Venkata v. Chengada (2); Raman Naidu v. Bhasoori Sanyasi (3) and Iswara Pattar v. Karuppan (4) can be distinguished.

The last argument is that, on the merits, the sale should have been set aside. The finding of the Subordinate Judge that no substantial injury was proved to be due to the only irregularity in the conduct of the sale, concludes this point.

The second appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs of the 1st respondent. The memorandum of objections is dismissed.

Mr. Mohammad Wasim, holding brief of Mr. Mohammad Nasim, for Respondents Nos. 1 to 4.

JUDGMENT.—The suit out of which this appeal has arisen, was brought for the purpose of recovering a 10-biswa share in the village of Muradnagar, the plaintiffs claiming title as heirs of one Murtaza Beg to whom it is alleged the property once belonged. One of the plaintiffs, Ali Husain, a son of Murtaza, subsequently withdrew from the suit: the result of this is that the remaining plaintiffs claim to recover a one-third share of the property in question.

The defendants were the heirs of one Asad Beg, the brother of Murtaza, and certain others claiming under them by transfer, and various pleas were raised for the purpose of defeating the plaintiffs' claim: such of them as require to be discussed at this stage, will be referred to in the course of this judgment.

Meantime a short statement of the facts will serve to elucidate the points which arise for determination in this Court.

It is now admitted that Murtaza Beg was at the time after the history of the property in suit begins, a Government servant in the district of Sitapur where he was employed as a Sadr Munsarim in the Settlement Department. In this capacity he was subject to certain orders of Government published in a Resolution No. 1252 A, dated the 17th September 1870, prohibiting servants of Government from acquiring landed property in the districts in which they were employed under pain of dismissal from service.

It has been found by the Courts below and the matter is no longer in dispute that Murtaza Beg in contravention of these orders, acquired this 10-biswa share in Muradnagar by means of three sale-deeds executed in the year 1871. The transactions were benami, the object of Murtaza being to conceal from Government the fact that he had acted in defiance of its orders. One of the deeds was drawn in favour of Asad Beg, the brother of Murtaza; a second was in favour of his brother-in-law, Muhammad Jafar, who was also a son-in-law of Asad Beg, the third deed was in favour of Murtaza's son Abul Hasan.

The finding is that Murtaza paid the price in each instance and that he was the real purchaser and this disposes of the defence set up to the effect that the property was in fact acquired by Asad Beg for himself.

Murtaza Beg died in the year 1875 and there is evidence on the record to show that at the time of his death, he was actually in possession of this property the rents of which were collected on his behalf by an agent of his named Ahmad Khan.

At the time of Murtaza's death, his children were young, and there is evidence, accepted by the Courts below, to show that Asad Beg assumed management of the property at the request of Murtaza's widow.

In the year 1877 Asad Beg made a mortgage of this Muradnagar property in favour of Mehrban Khan to secure a loan of Rs. 250 which, according to the recital in the deed, was borrowed for the purpose of paying Government revenue due in respect of the estate. Asad Beg then died in the year 1880 and mutation was thereafter effected in favour not of Asad Beg's heirs but in favour of Abul Hasan who was Murtaza's eldest son and soon after this on the motion of Abul Hasan himself, mutation was made in favour of the other heirs of Murtaza as well. After this had been accomplished, we find that in the year 1881 Abul Hasan executed three deeds of further charge in favour of Mehrban who had taken the mortgage above referred to from Asad Beg in the year 1877, and later on the equity of redemption was transferred to this mortgagee by the heirs of Murtaza.

In the year 1907 Sajjad Mirza, the son of Assad Beg (the first defendant in the present suit), sued for redemption of the mortgage executed by his father in 1877 and obtained a decree in spite of the mortgagee's defence that he had no real title to the property and that the equity of redemption had passed to him by a transfer from the true owners, i. e., the heirs of Murtaza Beg. It was held that the mortgagee could not be permitted to deny the title of his mortgagor Asad Beg. The result was that Sajjad got possession in 1908 by virtue of the decree for redemption.

Having lost the property, the representatives of the mortgagee brought a suit against the vendors of the equity of redemption and succeeded in recovering the purchase money on the ground that consideration for the transfer had failed.

These are the circumstances which have led to the filing of the present suit.

I have now to notice the pleas which have been urged here in second appeal, premising that the trial Court has given the plaintiffs a decree for recovery of a one-third share of the 10 biswas of Muradnagar subject to payment of a one-third share of the money which Sajjad Mirza had to pay for redemption; this decree has been upheld in appeal by the District Judge.

The first point urged is that the plaintiffs have no right to recover on the ground that the transfers of the year 1871 now found to have been made in favour of Murtaza Beg, were void as being opposed to public policy. Another point of a kindred nature is that the transfers were fraudulent in the sense that Murtaza Beg worked a fraud upon the Government which employed him by concealing the fact that he had acquired property in contravention of Government orders and thereby avoiding the dismissal from service which would have ensued had the real facts been known.

This latter aspect of the case does not seem to have been presented in either of the Courts below: the other argument was advanced, however, and repelled on the strength of two Full Bench rulings of the Allahabad High Court reported as Bhagwan Dei v. Murari Lal (1) and Kamala Devi v. Gur Dial (2) respectively. The judgments in these cases overrule two previous decisions of the same Court reported as Shiam Lal v. Chhaki Lal (3) and in Sheo Narain v. Mata Prasad (4).

I may say at once that I am unable to accept the doctrine laid down in the Full Bench judgments just mentioned and that if the decision of this case turned solely upon the question of the validity or invalidity of these transfers to Murtaza Beg regarded from the point of view of public policy, I should have had no difficulty in finding that Murtaza acquired no title under the three benami deeds of the year 1871.

However, I need not go into this question for the purpose of deciding this appeal.

Let it be assumed that the deeds did not operate to transfer any title to Murtaza Beg either on the ground that the transactions of transfer were against public policy, or constituted a fraud upon the Government.

The findings of fact are that Murtaza actually had possession of this Muradnagar property from the time of its acquisition till the time of his death and that his heirs were in possession after his death as far as it was possible for them to be. The Courts below hold that Asad Beg's ostensible possession after Murtaza's death, was in reality possession on behalf of Murtaza's heirs and that he was acting for them when he made the mortgage with possession in favour of Mehrban in the year 1877. The possession of the mortgagee from that year up till the time of redemption in 1908 was the possession of the real owners and no possession adverse to them began to run prior to the latter year when Sajjad Mirza got redemption and began to assert an adverse title.

On these facts it appears to me to be impossible to argue that Murtaza's heirs have still no title to the property. If their father began to hold without any title in the year 1871 and if after his death, his heirs have held proprietary possession till the year 1908 (actual possession having been with their mortgagee from 1877 till 1908) a good title to the property has been acquired by prescription. It could not for a moment be contended that the persons who sold this Muradnagar property in 1871 and who, if it be assumed that the transfers were void, continued to be the true owners, could have successfully maintained a suit against Murtaza's heirs after the lapse of twelve years' possession on their part: the title void in its inception became a good title by virtue of more than twelve years' adverse possession.

These being the facts, the heirs of Asad Beg, the defendants to this suit, cannot claim that they have a title to this Muradnagar property. They have failed to prove that the property was acquired by Asad Beg in 1871 as they asserted: and at the most they can only show about eight years' adverse possession for they came into possession only in 1908 and the present suit was brought in 1916.

I am clear, therefore, that title to this property is with the plaintiffs and that the suit was brought within limitation. This finding disposes of the pleas raised in the first, second and fourth grounds of appeal.

There remains to be noticed only the point taken in the third ground it is pleaded that the judgment in the redemption suit brought by Sajjad Mirza operates as res judicata on the question of title.

It was admitted before me that this point was not taken in the Courts below. There the argument was that the judgment which barred the present suit, was the one which was delivered in the suit brought by the ex-mortgagee after redemption to recover from the heirs of Murtaza the money which he had paid to them for the equity of redemption. That plea was bound to fail because the present defendants were no parties to that suit.

As for the plea of res judicata now raised, if it is possible for the defendants to raise it for the first time in second appeal, I am of opinion that it cannot prevail.

In the first place the heirs of Murtaza were not and could not have been parties to the redemption suit for at the time that suit was brought, they had lost all interest in the mortgaged property as they had conveyed the equity of redemption to the mortgagee. The suit was not, therefore, one inter partes and it cannot be said that the present plaintiffs claim through the mortgagee who was the defendant in that suit. On the contrary, it has been explained that after the mortgagee was obliged to submit to redemption and lost the property he compelled the present plaintiffs, by means of a suit, to refund to him the money which he had paid to them as the price of the equity of redemption.

Further it was never decided upon the merits in that suit that the present plaintiffs had no interest in the property now in dispute. It is true that the mortgagee tried to put forward the defence that they and not Sajjad Mirza were the real owners, but the defence was ruled out on the ground of estoppel as the mortgagee who had taken the mortgage from Asad Beg, the father of Sajjad Mirza, could not be heard to allege want of title in his own mortgagor. The result was to prevent the mortgagee defendant from raising a question of title to the mortgaged property and consequently there was not and could not be any determination of that question. There is nothing, therefore, arising out of the litigation in the redemption suit to bar the claim now put forward by the plaintiffs. I have now disposed of all the pleas raised in second appeal. The decree of the Court below is right and is affirmed.

I dismiss the appeal with costs.

JUDGMENT.

ROE, J.—The plaintiffs in this case are aggrieved by a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Darbhanga, dismissing their suit for a declaration that certain agreements entered into by a Hindu widow with regard to the estate to which they are reversioners, be set aside as fraudulent and collusive. The facts of the case and pleadings thereon, have been clearly set forth in the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge. On the 18th July 1895 the former holder of the estate, Brij Mohan Lal, brought a suit against the defendants Brij Bihari Lal and Gobind Lal to recover Rs. 44,893 with interest upon two mortgage bonds, dated 23rd June and 30th December 1894. During the pendency of the suit Brij Mohan Lal died and his widow, the present defendant No. 1 Musammât Shyam Kumari, was substituted as plaintiff. The suit was not defended by Brij Bihari Lal and Gobind Lal, but a claim was made by the Maharajah Bahadur of Darbhanga upon a prior mortgage. The learned

Subordinate Judge in decreeing the suit against the mortgagors made an order that the prior mortgage of the Maharajah should be redeemed by deposit of nearly Rs. 25,000 before the mortgaged property could be brought to sale on the mortgage of Brij Mohan Lal. The matter was taken to the Judicial Committee and in 1904 the decree made by the learned Subordinate Judge was upheld. The widow Musammât Shyam Kumari made the necessary deposit and proceeded to take steps to bring the mortgaged property to sale. Finally on the 20th June 1912, all the mortgaged properties, ten in number, were put to auction and purchased by the decree-holder Musammât Shyam Kumari herself for Rs. 65,075. At this stage the sum due under the mortgage amounted to Rs. 1,41,959-2-6. The mortgagors Brij Bihari Lal and Gobind Lal were connections of the late Brij Mohan Lal. They approached the widow for a lenient treatment of their case. They had put in an application for the setting aside of the sale on the ground of fraud and irregularity and had also put up a minor member of their family to bring a suit contesting the mortgage decree. The widow apparently was tired of the litigation which had been going on for eighteen years, but her main idea in compromising the matter was to spare as far as possible Brij Bihari Lal, her husband's relative. She says in her evidence that her main reason for compromising the suit was to avoid further expenses in litigation; but this statement seems to have been put into her mouth by her own Pleader. The arrangements for the settlement of the dispute were as follows:—

The widow was to allow the sale to be set aside, and private purchasers, one of whom was the widow's own brother, were to purchase eight of the mortgaged properties for some Rs. 69,000. Of this Rs. 66,000 was to be paid to the widow in cash and the balance Rs. 3,000 was to remain with Brij Bihari Lal. On receipt of the Rs. 66,000 in cash the widow was to certify full satisfaction of the decree. The two properties not sold to private parties, were to remain in possession of Brij Bihari subject to a mortgage lien to the widow to the extent of Rs. 5,000. When these negotiations came to the ears of the present plaintiffs, the reversioners to the estate, they put in a petition praying that the widow be restrained from settling the matter on these terms and asking permission to contest the judgment-debtors' application to set aside the sale. This petition was refused. The arrangements made with the widow were carried into effect. The sale was set aside and full satisfaction certified. On the following day, the reversioners put in the present suit asking for a declaration that all the defendants, that is to say, the widow, the judgment-debtors and the purchasers of the property, have in collusion and concert with one another, with a view to make wrongful gain and to deprive the plaintiffs of their reversionary rights quite improperly and without any right and lawful necessity, caused the sale of the properties mentioned, to be set aside by means of collusive and fraudulent proceedings and that the plaintiffs are not bound thereby. To this plaint there was a note or postscript added, that in case the defendant first party, that is the widow, intentionally fails to take out execution of the decree on the mortgage, the plaintiffs will bring a suit for the appointment of a Receiver and get the said decree executed through the Receiver. The learned Subordinate Judge devoted his attention to two main issues in the case. Firstly, whether the parties were governed by the Mitakshara or Mithila Law and secondly, whether the compromise made by the widow was fraudulent and collusive. He decided the first of these issues in favour of the plaintiffs, and it is admitted at the Bar on behalf of the respondents that he could not on the evidence have arrived at any other decision. Upon the question of fraud and collusion, he was of opinion that the plaintiffs had not made out their case. He summarises his conclusions on the evidence as follows:—"I, therefore, find that in compromising the case, her intention was far from injuring the plaintiffs' reversionary rights in any way, but she was moved by pity towards the condition of Lala Babu and while she was so moved, she did not forget the interest of the estate which was duly protected."

If we could agree with the learned Subordinate Judge that this was the logical conclusion to be drawn from the evidence, the case would, of course, be at an end. For my own part I entirely fail to see what benefit the reversioners got out of this arrangement. The difficulty that confronts us is that there is on the record no tangible evidence upon which we can satisfy ourselves as to the actual value of the property that had been sold in execution of the decree. There is a great deal of evidence to show that in the circumstances of the case no one was prepared to give more for it than was obtained. But this unwillingness to buy the property at a higher figure was due less to considerations of the value of the property than to considerations of the somewhat complicated legal position that would arise from the setting aside of the sale and the disposal of the properties by private treaty. It would have been easy for either side to have produced the papers of the recently completed Record of Rights as the basis for an accurate computation of the value of the property. But neither side took this step. We must assume that if it had been possible for the plaintiffs to have proved that the sale by private treaty was at prices grossly inadequate, they would have produced these papers. On the other hand, it may be equally said that if the prices paid actually represented the value of the thing sold, the defendants would have put these papers upon the record. The whole question, therefore, seems to me to be one of the burden of proof.

That it was accepted in the Court below that the burden of proof lay upon the plaintiff, is clear from the frame of the 6th and 8th issues. Are the applications for setting aside the sale and also the applications dated the 19th August 1912, filed in Execution Case No. 179 of 1910, certifying satisfaction of the decree under execution and agreeing to the sale being set aside fraudulent, collusive and illegal? If not, whether the order setting aside the sale will stand good?

Whether the sale of the properties by defendants second party to defendants third party was fraudulent and invalid? and have the purchasers acquired a valid title to them against the reversioners?

In dealing with the decisions of the Judicial Committee upon the right of a Hindu widow to compromise litigation which is in her charge as representing the estate, the Courts in Calcutta have taken two broad lines, the one based on the decision in Imrit Konwur v. Roop Narain Singh (1), the other on Katama Natchier v. Rajah of Shivagunga (2). And the broad line of decisions has been that a widow has no right to bar the succession of the reversioners to the estate as a whole but is entitled to release a part of the estate by compromise of a bona fide claim, provided that the compromise is not shown to be unfair or made solely for her own benefit to the prejudice of the interests of the reversioners. The whole case law was reviewed in the arguments in Khunni Lal v. Gobind Krishna Narain (3). The standpoint from which compromises such as the compromise before us, have been attacked, has invariably been that the release of a part of the estate by the widow is in fact an alienation, and the conclusion of their Lordships was upon a review of the case law "That the true test to apply to a transaction which is challenged by reversioners as an alienation not binding on them is, whether the alienee derives title from the holder of the limited interest or life-tenant. In the present case," they say at page 367*, "Khairati Lal acquired no right from the daughters of Daulat, for 'the compromise,' to use their Lordships' language in Rani Mewa Kuwar v. Rani Hulas Kuwar (4), 'is based on the assumption that there was an antecedent title of some kind in the parties, and the agreement acknowledges and defines what that title is.'"

The parties in the case before us whose purchase is challenged, derived their title not from the widow but from the owners, Brij Bihari Lal and Gobind Lal. Their rights to hold it free of all incumbrances was not derived from the widow, but from the right of the mortgagor judgment-debtor to set the property free from the mortgage by a deposit of the whole decretal amount at any time prior to the confirmation of the sale. This right was established in the Calcutta High Court by the decision in Bibijan Bibi v. Sachi Bewah (5). A right to redeem is not extinguished until the sale has been actually completed and the proceeds of the sale dealt with. The learned Chief Justice at paragraph 868 quotes the views of the Courts of Madras, Bombay and Allahabad as consistent with his own. The question before us, therefore, is whether the widow was competent to compound with the mortgagor judgment debtor upon his right to redeem by accepting in full satisfaction of her claim less than half of the amount actually due upon it. It is immaterial in my view whether we regard the subsisting mortgage decree as moveable or immoveable property. If by the composition made, she was wasting it to the detriment of the reversioners, her action would not be binding upon them. But I hold that the burden of proof is on the reversioners to show that this composition entailed waste of the property. A widow's power to compromise has frequently been compared with the powers of a guardian to compromise and the power of the Karta of a Mitakshara family to effect a settlement. In Baboo Lekraj Roy v. Baboo Mahtab Chandra (6) it was said that the interests of infants would seriously suffer if a notion were to prevail that guardians were bound for their own security to contest all claims against an infant's estate, whether well or ill-founded; and such a notion might prevail if the compromise of a claim of debt confirmed by a decree of a Court were to be set aside after sixteen years without distinct proof of fraud, and at page 615* of the same Volume dealing with an order treating the widow as the sole representative of an estate it was said: "From the above statement it is clear, that unless there be some fatal irregularity in the mode in which the decree of the appellant was obtained or drawn up, or some fatal irregularity in the mode in which that decree has been prosecuted, the estates have been regularly sold, and that the suit of the respondent, seeking to set aside the order for sale must fail." These cases, however, do not deal directly with the power of the widow to settle disputes. The basis of all decisions upon the effect of a contested decree against a widow is to be found in Katama Natchier v. Raah of Shivagunga (2): "The same principle which has prevailed in the Courts of this country as to tenants-in-tail representing the inheritance, would seem to apply to the case of a Hindu widow, and it is obvious that there would be the greatest possible inconvenience in holding that the succeeding heirs were not bound by a decree fairly and properly obtained against the widow." In Tarinee Churn Gangooly v. Watson & Co. (7) Markby, J., said at page 417, column 2: "It seems to us much more reasonable to hold that, as representative of the entire estate in the litigation, she has the same control with respect to compromise as she has with respect to the assertion of rights and with respect to appeal against an adverse decision. It is, of course, possible that the trust thus reposed in the widow may be abused without detection, as may the very large discretion which, as the law now stands, she undoubtedly possesses in other matters. But, on the whole, we think it will be found most favourable for the heirs that she should have the power of compromise at every stage of the proceedings."

And in Karimuddin v. Gobind Krishna Narain (8) it was said that the preservation of the estate and the costs of litigation for that purpose, are objects which justify a widow incurring debt and alienating a sufficient amount of property to discharge it. It seems to me clear that if a widow is entitled to encumber the estate for the purpose of carrying on a litigation, she is equally entitled to avoid the expenses of litigation by compromising a bona fide claim. Mookerjee, J., in Mohendra Nath v. Shamsunnessa (9), referring apparently with approval to the decision of Markby, J., above quoted, lays down the rule that the principle in Katama Natchier's case (2) is not limited to decrees in suits contested to the end and is subject to the qualification that the compromise was made for the benefit of the estate, and not for the personal advantage of the limited owner. Upon consideration of this point he held that "the decree which has not been successfully impeached on the ground of fraud, coercion, collusion or any like reason, operates as res judicata between the parties to the present suit."

I hold that in the case before us the burden of proof was on the plaintiffs to show that the compromise entered into by the widow Musammam Shyam Kumari was entered into collusively for the purpose of conferring upon herself a benefit at the expense of the estate. All that has been shown, is that instead of stripping the judgment-debtors, near connections of the family, of every item of property which they possessed, they were allowed to retain a sum of Rs. 3,000. The litigation had already lasted 18 years; there were cases pending which might prolong it for many years further. It is our common experience that though there may be nothing valid in the objections taken to an auction sale, the judgment-debtors will almost invariably carry on their objections to the sale from Court to Court merely for the purpose of holding on to the property for a few more years. The widow would no doubt have succeeded in the end, but she would have spent perhaps Rs. 3,000, perhaps Rs. 10,000 in the ensuing litigation. The compromise of the claim whereby she avoided this expense, seems to me to have been a fair and reasonable settlement. The whole facts of the case were clearly before the Court. The Court was aware from the petition of the present plaintiffs that there were reversioners to be considered. There was no fraud upon the Court. There is nothing to indicate that the widow proposes to waste the money that has gone into her hands or to give it away. If it remains in the estate, or if it remains in her hands, it will come to the reversioners in due course, and in the absence of proof that the sum obtained by the compromise was grossly inadequate, it cannot be said that it has been proved that there was a fraud on the reversioners. The relief which the reversioners might and should have applied for, was a declaration that the widow be required to pay into Court the sum received upon the compromise in order that it might be invested for their own benefit. This relief they have not asked for. Instead they seek to make the property, which purchasers have taken in good faith, free of all encumbrances on payment of Rs. 69,000 (as far as we know its full value), subject to the residue of the mortgage debt, another Rs. 75,000. In asking that this compromise be set aside, the reversioners are seeking to impose upon the purchasers of this property a loss of Rs. 75,000 to which they should not be held legally liable, and a gain to themselves of Rs. 75,000 to which they are certainly not in equity entitled. The compromise made by the widow was at least a far fairer arrangement than that by which the reversioners seek to set it aside. In my view the learned Subordinate Judge was right in refusing to the reversioners the declaration which they sought. I would dismiss these appeals with costs.

ment to date of realisation—Contractual rate of interest, whether can be allowed—Discretion of Court.

The rate of interest which a Court can allow in a mortgage decree from the date fixed for payment to the date of realisation, is in its discretion. In exercising its discretion, however, the Court will ordinarily refer to the contractual rate, if it be a reasonable one. [p. 701, col. 2.]

Appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Fyzabad, dated the 23rd April 1915.

Mr. Har Narain Dass, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—The suit out of which this appeal has arisen, was brought on a registered mortgaged deed for Rs. 3,500. Interest at 10 per cent. per annum was provided for in the deed. The suit was undefended. The lower Court decreed principal and interest to the date of suit and costs. Six months were allowed for payment; and for that six months the lower Court decreed the contractual rate of interest, but decreed it only upon the principal sum. It further decreed interest at 6 per cent. per annum from the date of payment till realisation, but this again only on the principal sum of Rs. 3,500. Hence this appeal.

Respondents have not appeared.

There was no reason whatever why the contractual rate of interest should not have been decreed upon the decretal amount from the date of the decree to the date of payment.

The rate of interest which the Court can allow from the date fixed for payment to the date of realisation, is in its discretion. In exercising its discretion the Court will ordinarily refer to the contractual rate, if it be a reasonable one. It was laid down by Lindsay, J. C., in Allahabad Bank, Limited, Lucknow v. Rani Suraj Kuar (1) that according to the practice of this Court, the interest at the contract rate can be awarded in cases of this kind up till the date of realisation, provided the rate is deemed to be reasonable. I do not find that the rate of interest in the present case can be termed unreasonable.

I, therefore, allow this appeal and pass a decree for Rs. 5,628-13-6 and costs. If this amount with interest at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum be not paid within a further period of 3 months of this date,

JUDGMENT.

SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—Plaintiffs sue for a declaration that a Will said to have been made by their brother, the deceased husband of the defendant, authorising her to adopt a boy, was never executed. The defendant pleaded in limine that such a suit is incompetent. The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit; the only question in appeal is whether this decision is right.

The diversity of judicial opinion on the construction of section 42 of the Specific Relief Act is so great that I have resolved upon confining my citations to the cases decided in Madras and to the decisions of the Privy Council. If I may say so with respect, the consideration of this question has been rendered difficult by mixing up two distinct issues. Section 42 of the Specific Relief Act, while indicating the character of the right which may be declared by a Court of Law, leaves it to the discretion of such Court to grant or refuse the relief claimed. In arguments addressed to Courts, and not infrequently in decisions also, the question of the right of suit has been mixed up with the question of exercising discretion in regard to the relief.

If I had only the language of the section to guide me, I would have little hesitation in holding that suits like the present are within section 42 of the Act. There can be no doubt that the plaintiffs are entitled to protect their alleged legal right as surviving co-parceners to their deceased brother's estate. It must also be admitted that the defendant is denying that character by setting up the Will which, if true, would deprive the two plaintiffs of a third of their property. There is a further consideration: in seeking the aid of section 42, a plaintiff may consider that if time elapses, the pretensions of the defendant who is interested in denying the plaintiff's title, may gain momentum and may in the course of years render the task of refuting those pretensions very difficult. In fact, as I said in Gandla Pedda Naganna v. Sivanappa (1), whenever a cloud is cast or attempted to be cast on the title of a plaintiff, he is entitled to come to Court under section 42.

It may be that, in many instances, the apprehended danger or the cloud on title may be of such a shadowy character and so flimsy that the Court in its discretion might refuse to grant the relief prayed for. But that is no ground for saying that the suit is not maintainable.

There have been numerous instances in which notwithstanding an undoubted right to litigate, Courts have refused in their discretion to grant relief. The object to be borne in mind in such cases is to see that the machinery of the Court is not utilised for unnecessarily harassing the defendant.

With these preliminary observations, I shall proceed to consider the decisions bearing on the section. In Madras there are cases which hold that where the plaintiff is not likely to be immediately affected, the suit should be dismissed as incompetent. Apparently the old English doctrine which prevailed before the enactment of the Specific Relief Act, to the effect that a declaratory decree ought not to be made unless there is a right to some consequential relief which, if asked for, might have been given by the Court, has been accepted as a correct interpretation of section 42 of the Act. In Kathama Nachiar v. Dorasinga Tever (2), Sheo Singh Rai v. Dakho (3), Nogendro Chundro Mittro v. Sreemutty Kishen Soondery Dossee (4) and Sadut Ali Khan v. Khajeh Abdool Gunnee (5), the Judicial Committee enunciated this view with reference to cases which arose before the passing of the Specific Relief Act. In Madras even after the Act, that view was adopted. Govinda v. Perumdevi (6) is one of this class. The decision which the Subordinate Judge has relied on, viz., Sreepada v. Sreepada (7), belongs to the same category. On the other hand, we have Govinda Pillai v. Thayammal (8) and Chinnasawmy Mudaliar v. Ambalavana Mudaliar (9), which seem to take a broader view of the section. It is true in the latter case an adoption was set up; but apparently no hostile act followed upon the setting up of the adoption. In Puttanna v. Ramakrishna Sastri (10) the learned Judges held that the relief under section 42 is not restricted to cases covered by illustrations (e) and (f) to that section, and granted a declaration that a Will alleged to have been made by the last male owner, was never made. There are three recent Madras cases which may be shortly noticed. In Ramakrishna Pattar v. Narayana Patter (11) all that was laid down, was that section 42 is not intended to enact a declaration in respect of a personal contract. In Muchirazu Ramachandra Row v. Secretary of State (12) Mr. Justice Ayling with Mr. Justice Tyabji held that a declaration can be given against an order debarring a person from acting as a Vakil to another in a village Court. My learned colleague there said that even if the suit may not be covered by the Specific Relief Act, the relief can be granted. These are the only Madras cases which need be considered.

Now as regards the Privy Council cases, reliance was placed by both the parties on Pirthi Fql Kunwar v. Guman Kunwar (13). The real decision in that case was that in the exercise of the discretion vesting in the Court below, it had rightly refused to grant the prayer. It was a suit in which the son's widow in possession sued for a declaration that an adoption by the father's widow was void and ineffectual. The Judicial Committee did not say such a suit would not lie. They said that they saw no reason to interfere with the discretion exercised by the Court below. In Janaki Ammal v. Narayanasami Aiyar (14), which was relied on by Mr. Narasimha Row, it was pointed out that a cause of action with which the plaintiff came to Court, namely, waste by the widow, having been found to be untrue, it was not open to the plaintiff to ask that his right as reversioner to succeed at some future time should be declared. In the last but one paragraph of the judgment, it is said that if the plaintiff came to Court for a bare declaration of his rights without alleging that there was any infringement of such a right, the Court would reject such a suit, and the fact that a false cause of action was alleged in the plaint, was no ground for deciding the contingent title of the plaintiff. I do not think that this decision helps the respondent. In another Privy Council case, Sheoparsan Singh v. Ramnandan Prashad Narayan Singh (15), Sir Lawrence Jenkins sounds a note of warning against the machinery of the Court being abused by suits under section 42 of the Specific Relief Act. Here again it was decided that a mere declaration of the right of the plaintiffs to succeed at some future time should not be granted. In Saudagar Singh v. Pardip Narayan Singh (16) Lord Parker in delivering the judgment of the Judicial Committee says: "It appears to their Lordships to be clear on this section that where any deed is executed, the result of which may be to prejudice the interests of the reversionary heirs, those heirs, though still reversionary and though they may never get any title because events may preclude them from doing so, may have a declaration as to the effect of the deed." Applying that principle to the present case, it may be said that where a Will is set up the result of which may be to prejudice the interest of the plaintiffs, though ultimately the adoption referred to in the Will may not take place, the plaintiffs are entitled to the declaration they have claimed. In my opinion this latter pronouncement of the Judicial Committee which is binding on us is decisive of the question; and if I may say so with the greatest respect, gives effect to the true intent of section 42 of the Specific Relief Act.

An examination of some of the Madras cases to which I have referred, notably Govinda v. Perumdevi (6) and Sreepada v. Sreepada (7), tends to show that where there is no possibility of immediate injury flowing from a contemplated act, deed, or other instrument, the Courts should not allow a suit to be instituted. With all respect I should like to point out that instead of saying that a suit does not lie under such circumstances, it would be more correct to say that Courts should not grant relief in such cases. Govinda v. Perumdevi (6) and Sreepada v. Sreepada (7) are really instances of cases in which the Courts in their discretion would have been justified in refusing the relief: and I do not think any harm will be done by interpreting them in the way I have indicated.

In the present case it may be open to the lower Court to find on hearing the evidence that the allegations are not of such a character as to compel the Court to grant the relief. In my opinion the conclusion come to, that the suit is not within the meaning of section 42 of the Specific Relief Act, is wrong. I would, therefore, reverse the decree of the Subordinate Judge and remand the suit for disposal on the merits. Costs to abide the result.

AYLING, J.—I am in entire agreement with the conclusion arrived at by my learned brother, whose judgment I have had the advantage of perusing, and to which I can add little. It seems to me that the defendant in this case (widow of plaintiff's undivided brother) was interested in setting up and utilising the power to adopt contained in her late husband's alleged Will, in other words, in denying plaintiffs' right of succession by survivorship to the whole joint family property. In such circumstances, the present suit would appear to be under section 42 of the Specific Relief Act. I can see nothing in the section to justify the view which seems to have been taken by the learned Judges in Sreepada v. Sreepada (7) and having regard to the other rulings quoted in my learned brother's judgment, and in particular to the spirit of the latest Privy Council case of Saudagar Singh v. Pardip Narayan Singh (16), I think we are justified in declining to follow it. It seems to me that there can be no question of the expediency of allowing the genuineness of such documents as the present to be tested as early as possible. The difficulty of ascertaining the truth, tends in almost every case to increase with the lapse of time, we have recently heard arguments in a case in which an adoption was made, based on a disputed authority to adopt said to have been given 28 years before. A view of the law which in such a case precludes the possibility of determining the facts as to the alleged authority until so late is one which I should be loth to adopt unless compelled by irresistible reasoning to do so.

I concur in the order proposed by my learned brother.

JUDGMENT.

JWALA PRASAD, J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiffs who are proprietors of a firm in the town of Ranchi, called the firm of Hukami Chand-Hardatt Rai. Hardatt Rai is dead, and the plaintiffs, his sons, are now the proprietors of that firm. They brought a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Ranchi for recovery of Rs. 48,225.1-10 principal and interest, on the basis of a hand-note, dated the 4th May 1911. The hand-note is said to have been executed by Raja Raghubar Sahi Deo, father of defendant No. 1 and grandfather and great-grandfather of defendants Nos. 2 and 3 respectively.

The hand-note in question is said to have been executed in respect of Rs. 31,315, which was found due from Raja Raghubar Sahi Deo to the plaintiffs' firm on the date of the hand-note.

The Raja was the owner of the Zemin-dari known as Burway Estate, and defendant No. 5, Manmotha Nath Chatterji, was the manager and agent holding general power-of-attorney. Manmotha Nath Chatterji executed the hand-note on behalf, and with the permission, of Raja Raghubar Sahi Deo. The Raja died in January 1914. The defendants are the heirs and surviving members of the family. The present suit was accordingly brought against them on the 4th of May 1914.

The defendants in their written statement took all possible pleas, the most important of which was that the Raja was a disqualified proprietor under the Chota Nagpur Encumbered Estates Act (VI of 1876 B. C.) and was, therefore, incompetent to incur debt or to enter into any contract involving pecuniary liability, and that the debts for which the hand-note in suit was executed, were all incurred during the said disqualification of the Raja and therefore the plaintiffs are not entitled to recover anything on the basis of the said hand-note.

The defendants denied that the Raja ever borrowed any money from the plaintiffs' father, or that there was any necessity for the debts, or that the defendant No. 5, the Manager had any authority to execute the hand-note in question.

The Court below, however, held that the hand-note was genuine and was executed by Manmotha Nath Chatterji as a duly constituted agent on behalf of the Raja, and that the loans were taken from time to time for valid purposes of the Raja and the family. The entire sum with the exception of Rs. 533.2.0 was advanced by the plaintiffs' firm between December 1907 and 1st October 1908 and on an adjustment of account, Rs. 17,790 was found due from the Raja to the firm on 1st October 1908, on which date a hand-note was executed for the said sum. Thereafter Rs. 533.2.0 was borrowed. The total sum, principal and interest, amounted to Rs. 21,999.8.6 on 26th July 1909 for which another hand-note was executed. On the 4th of May 1911, the amount due from the defendants' father came to be Rs. 31,315, for which the present hand-note on the same date was executed. The Court further held that "the debts were contracted for the purposes of the management of the estate and the estate was certainly benefited." Upon these findings, the Court below held that "the debts are binding upon the defendants unless by law they are not recoverable."

As to the question of limitation raised by the defendants, the Court below held that the suit was brought within 3 years from the date on which the hand-note in question was executed and hence it was not barred by time, although the debts were actually contracted long before the execution of the hand note. This view appears to be correct inasmuch as the hand-note in question created a new contract between the parties and affords a new starting point for the purposes of limitation.

The Court below gave a decree to the plaintiffs for Rs. 533.2.0 with interest, against all the defendants and dismissed the suit in respect of the rest of the claim on the ground that the debts were incurred during the period that the Raja was a disqualified proprietor under the protection of Act VI of 1876 of the Chota Nagpur Encumbered Estates Act and was, therefore, incompetent to enter into any contract involving him in pecuniary liability under section 3, clause (c) of the Act, and hence the suit of the plaintiffs is barred by section 12A, added to the Act by virtue of the Amending Act III of 1909 B. C.

The plaintiffs have appealed to this Court and contend that the Court below is wrong in dismissing any portion of their claim. On the other hand, the defendants have appealed against the order of the Court below giving a decree to the plaintiffs in respect of Rs. 533.2.0 with interest.

The principal question that arises in connection with the plaintiffs' appeal is, whether the debts incurred by the Raja covered by the hand-note in question are recoverable or not from the defendants. The Court below has held that the debts were all incurred (with the exception of Rs. 533.2.0) between December 1907 and 1st October 1908. This finding is borne out by the evidence on the record and in fact it has not been seriously challenged. The Burway Estate belonging to the Raja was brought under the operation of the Chota Nagpur Encumbered Estates Act, on the 29th September 1897 and was released on the 16th July 1909 (Vide Exhibits D and 4) with a cash balance of Rs. 12,000 after discharging all the liabilities of the estate. The aforesaid debts, therefore, were incurred while the Raja was under the disqualification imposed by the said Act. The disqualification is contained in section 3, clause (c) of which enacts "so long as such management continues, the holder of the same property and his heir shall be incapable of entering into any contract which may involve them or either of them in pecuniary liability." The Raja and his heirs, the present defendants, were, therefore, incompetent to enter into any contract involving them or either of them in pecuniary liability up to the 1st October 1908. The disability ceased on that date.

It is contended on behalf of the plaintiffs that the hand-note in question of the 4th of May 1911 was executed long after the Raja had emerged from the disability and was free to enter into any contract. It is said that the hand-note in question is not only a ratification of the original contracts when the debts were actually incurred, but was also a new contract. Reliance is placed upon the case of Gregson v. Udoy Aditya Deb (1), where their Lordships held that "It is quite competent to a person emerging from a state of disability to take up and carry on transactions commenced while he was under disability in such a way as to bind himself as to the whole," and at page 233*: "He became as free to manage his affairs as any other person." Upon the principle of ratification their Lordships held that the plaintiff in that case was entitled to the specific performance of the agreement to lease entered into by the defendant while under the protection of the Encumbered Estates Act, which was not only confirmed by him but that benefits were obtained by him from the plaintiff on the basis of the agreement after the lease of his estate. The same principle was applied in the case of Roy v. Thakur Ram Jiwan Singh (2) and in the same volume Jagadis Chandra Deo Dhabal v. Satrugan Deo Dhabal (3).

In Raja Satrugan Deo Dhabal v. Raja Jagadish Chandra Deo Dhabal (4), Rampini, J., held that "The intention of the Act was to render the holder of an estate so taken charge of entirely capable of contracting, and that a void contract cannot be revived." This is based upon section 11 of the Indian Contract Act, according to which a person is competent to contract provided he is not disqualified from contracting by any law to which he is subject. To remove the doubt created by the conflict of authorities and to prevent the disqualified proprietors from confirming or ratifying any contract entered into by them during the period of their disqualification, or from entering into any new contract in respect of the aforesaid debts, section 12A was added to the Act in 1909. This section enacts that "no suit shall be brought to charge any person to whom property is restored (1) upon any promise made after such restoration to pay any debt contracted while the management of the property was vested in the Manager, or (2) upon any ratification, made after such restoration, of any promise or contract made while the management of the property was vested in the Manager." The Amending Act was brought into force on the 24th March 1909 and it is, therefore, contended that it could not have the retrospective effect of taking away the right of the Raja, which he, as a disqualified proprietor, had before the release of his estate, to confirm or ratify any debt incurred by him during the disqualification or to enter into any contract in respect thereto. It is more than doubtful whether he had any such vested rights. Even if he had any, the Raja ceased to be a disqualified proprietor on the 16th July 1909 and, therefore, when the Act came into force (24th March 1909) the right to enter into any contract in respect of the debts in question had not accrued at all. Besides, the Amending Act does not at all purport to take away the right, if any, in the disqualified proprietor to confirm, ratify or deal with the debts incurred by him during the incompetency and, therefore, does not destroy any existing vested right that a disqualified proprietor may have. The section simply bars a suit in respect of the debts incurred during the disqualification by reason of any promise or ratification subsequent to the cessation of the disqualification. The bar in the section affects a creditor, and not a debtor (disqualified proprietor). The contention, therefore, of the plaintiffs fails. They are not entitled to enforce their claim by means of a suit. In other words, their suit is incompetent.

It is then contended that the section bars the suit against only the "person to whom the property is restored." In the present case it is said that the property was restored to the Raja, and not to the present defendants, who are his heirs, and hence the suit against the heirs is not barred. It may be conceded that the Act being a penal one, must be strictly construed and that no bar can be placed upon the plaintiffs' suit unless it comes within the express terms of the section. We have, therefore, to see whether the section contemplates any bar against the present defendants. The estate of the Raja was taken under the Act. The Raja and his heirs were disqualified from entering into any contract involving them or either of them in pecuniary liability; vide section 3 (c). The notification, Exhibit C, will show that the estate was restored to the owner thereof, and in Exhibit D the name of Raja Raghubar Sahi Deo is mentioned as the person to whom the estate was restored. From Exhibit A, report of the Manager, paragraph 12, it is clear that the members of the family, namely, the defendants were maintained at the expense of the estate. In fact they claim to be the heirs of the Raja and that the estate has devolved upon them as such. Therefore when the estate was restored to the Raja, in effect it was restored to the defendants who are the son, the grandson and the great-grandson of the Raja and were fully represented by him. I, therefore, hold that section 12A bars the present suit against the defendants. The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs.

As to the Appeal No. 76 of 1916 I am also of opinion that it should be dismissed with costs. This appeal relates to the sum of Rs. 533-2-0 which the Court below has decreed with interest against the defendants. This sum was borrowed at the time when the hand-note of the 26th July 1909 was executed, and hence after the Raja ceased to be a disqualified proprietor. The Court below has found it as a fact and I agree with that finding. It has also been held by the Court below that the debt was contracted for the family purposes which benefitted the defendants. There is no substance in this appeal and it is accordingly dismissed with costs.

IMAM, J.—I agree.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 92 OF 1917.

February 26, 1918.

Present:—Mr. Justice Phillips and Mr. Justice Krishnan.

Maistry RAJABHAI NARAIN OF CUTCH, ANJAR—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

versus

Haji KARIM MAHOMED OF BOMBAY
THROUGH HIS RECOGNISED AGENT HUSSAN
IYOOD SALT—PLAINTIFF—
RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 20—'Cause of action', meaning of—Carriage by sea—Short delivery, damages for—Freight illegally collected, suit for return of—General average contribution, claim for—Jurisdiction—Peril to crew and cargo—Jettison—Principles governing general average—Municipal Courts, jurisdiction of, over foreigners.

The term 'cause of action' as used in section 20, Civil Procedure Code, means the whole bundle of material facts which it is necessary for a plaintiff to allege and prove in order to entitle him to succeed. [p. 709, col. 2.]

A claim for general average contribution can be sustained only when the voyage has been completed and the vessel has reached its place of destination or some other port safely. If there are several general average acts during the same voyage the principle is to make each owner of a sacrificed interest contribute to all the sacrifices in whatever order of time they may have occurred. The time of jettisoning cannot be taken as the time when the value of the goods is to be ascertained because the whole adventure may afterwards be brought to an end by the total loss of the ship and cargo when there can be no contribution at all. [p. 710, col. 1; p. 709, col. 2.]

A claim for general average may be laid at the place where the voyage has safely ended. [p. 710, col. 1.]

A Municipal Court is entitled to exercise jurisdiction over a non-resident foreigner where the cause of action arises within its jurisdiction. The question whether its decree can be enforced against him in the foreign State is a question for disposal for the Courts of that State. [p. 710, col. 2.]

Plaintiff chartered 1st defendant's vessel to sail from Cutch to Basra; where it was to take 700 bundles of dates and discharge them at Calicut. First defendant was a resident of Cutch where the charter party was entered into. The ship experienced rough weather on her way from Basra to Calicut, in consequence whereof the master (2nd defendant) had to jettison 165 bundles. The ship, however, reached Calicut in safety. The master refused to deliver to plaintiff any of the goods till the whole freight was paid. Plaintiff paid the freight under protest and sued the owner of the ship and the master in the Calicut Munsif's Court for (1) the return of the excess freight collected, and (2) the price of the bundles short-delivered, or (3) the amount due on a general average contribution. The defendants objected to the jurisdiction of the Court:

Held, (1) that the claim for return of freight was properly laid in the Calicut Court as the freight was collected at Calicut; [p. 709, col. 2.]

(2) that, as Calicut was the place of performance of the contract, the Calicut Court had jurisdiction to entertain the claim for the price of the short-delivered goods. [p. 709, col. 2.]

(3) that as the voyage safely came to an end at Calicut, plaintiff's cause of action for general average arose in Calicut. [p. 710, col. 1.]

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court of South Malabar, in Appeal Suit No. 274 of 1916, preferred against the decree of the Court of the Principal District Munsif, Calicut, in Original Suit No. 1035 of 1913.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. T. R. Ramachandra Ayyar (with him Messrs. A. Sundaram, T. R. Krishnaswamy Ayyar and V. A. Krishna Ayyar), for the Appellant.—The Munsif's Court at Calicut had no jurisdiction to entertain the claim for general average. The jettisoning was not in Calicut. As soon as the sacrifice was made and the peril ended, the cause of action for contribution was complete.

The Calicut Court could not also exercise jurisdiction over 1st defendant who was a subject of a foreign State. Any decree that it might pass, could not be enforced against him. The vessel against which the claim was made, was a foreign ship.

The Hon'ble Mr. T. Richmond, for the Respondent.—The vessel landed at Calicut, the port of destination and the cause of action for general average arose only on the date of its arrival. No claim of that nature could be sustained while the ship was still on its voyage.

Though the 1st defendant was a resident of a Native State, he submitted to the jurisdiction of the British Court and is bound by its decree, though it is a question whether it can be enforced against him in Cutch.

JUDGMENT.

KRISHNAN, J.—The question raised before us in second appeal is one of jurisdiction. The facts necessary to be stated for the decision are these. The plaintiff chartered a vessel named "Ganga Patharath" belonging to the 1st defendant to sail from Cutch to Basra and there to take on board 700 bundles of dates and to discharge the same at Calicut. The charter-party was entered into at Cutch, the 1st defendant being a resident of that place and a subject of the State of Cutch. Second defendant is the tindal or the master of the ship. The ship sailed to Basra and took on board 651 bundles of date, but on her voyage to Calicut she met with rough weather in the Arabian Sea and to save her and the cargo the master had to jettison 165 bundles of dates. On her subsequent arrival in Calicut the master refused delivery of any of the plaintiff's goods till the freight for the whole consignment was paid and the plaintiff thereupon paid it under protest and took delivery of the remaining bundles. He has now sued in the Calicut Court for the return of the excess freight collected and for the price of the bundles short-delivered or in the alternative, for what is due to him on a "general average" account.

The objection as to jurisdiction was taken in the first Court but it was overruled and a decree was passed against the 1st defendant for the refund of the excess freight and for money due as "general average contribution." The 1st defendant has appealed to us and has again raised before us this question of jurisdiction.

The plaint, as I read it, combines 3 claims based on three different causes of action; the first, for the refund of freight, based on the fact that it was illegally collected from the plaintiff and this took place in Calicut; the second for the price of goods short-delivered which, according to the contract in the charter-party, were to be delivered in Calicut and the third, in the alternative, a claim for "general average"

if the Court found that the goods were properly jettisoned. The cause of action for the first arose wholly in Calicut and for the second, in part in Calicut, as that was the place of performance. It is clear that as regards these two causes of action, the Calicut Court had jurisdiction but, as to the cause of action for the 3rd claim, the learned Pleader for the appellant had argued that no part of it arose in Calicut. It is, therefore, necessary to see what exactly is the plaintiff's cause of action for his claim for general average. It is now settled that the term 'cause of action' as used in section 20, Civil Procedure Code, means the whole bundle of material facts which it is necessary for a plaintiff to allege and prove to entitle him to succeed. To sustain the plaintiff's claim in the present case, it was necessary to establish that his goods were properly on board ship, that they were properly jettisoned to avert a danger which threatened the whole adventure and that, as a result, the ship and cargo against which contribution is claimed, were saved from damage or destruction. As laid down by Bovil, C. J., "The whole law on the subject is founded on the principle that the loss to the individual whose goods are sacrificed for the benefit of the rest, is to be compensated according to the loss sustained on the one hand and the benefit derived on the other." See Fletcher v. Alexander (1). To decide the extent of such sacrifice and the amount of contribution properly claimable, the voyage must have been completed or must have been definitely brought to an end at another port. See Carver on Carriage by Sea, section 416. Before the claim for contribution can arise, the ship and cargo must have been brought to a safety in port for as observed by Bovil, C. J., in the case above cited, page 383*, the time of jettisoning cannot be taken as the time when the value of the goods is to be ascertained because the whole adventure may afterwards be brought to an end by the total loss of the ship and cargo when there can be no contribution at all. To complete, therefore, the cause of action for "general average" it is necessary to allege that the voyage has ended and the ship or the goods against which it is claimed, had been brought to safety in port. In fact it was held in Whitecross Wire Co. v. Savill (2) that a maritime adventure is not at an end till all the goods are delivered. At any rate it is clear that it cannot be ended till the ship reaches its destination or if the voyage be abandoned, some other place of safety. Appellant's Vakil relied on the observations of the Privy Council in Strang, Steel & Co. v. A. Scott & Co. (3), viz., "In jettison the rights of those entitled to contribution, and the corresponding obligations of the contributors, have their origin in the fact of a common danger which threatens to destroy the property of them all; and these rights and obligations are mutually perfected whenever the goods of some of the shippers have been advisedly sacrificed and the property of the others has been thereby preserved," and argued that as soon as the particular peril which necessitated the sacrifice passed away, the cause of action for contribution was complete. But it seems to me that it cannot be predicated that the property of the others has been preserved till the maritime adventure has come to an end. Their Lordships' observations are, therefore, not against the view I am taking. If there are several general average acts during the same voyage, the principle is to make each owner of a sacrificed interest contribute to all the sacrifices in whatever order of time they may have occurred. See Carver, section 417. This can hardly be correct if the right to contribution regarding any one sacrifice is to be taken to be complete as soon as the particular peril is past. I am, therefore, of opinion that the fact that the voyage safely came to an end, is a part of plaintiff's cause of action for general average and as that took place in Calicut the Calicut Court had jurisdiction under section 20, Civil Procedure Code, to try the suit so far as it referred to general average as well.

The learned Vakil for the appellant raised a further objection to jurisdiction on the ground that his client was a foreign subject, residing in Cutch and not in British India and that the vessel itself against which the claim was made, was a foreign ship.

(2) (1882) 8 Q. B. D. 653; 51 L. J. Q. B. 426; 46 L. T. 643; 43 W. R. 588; 4 Asp. M. C. 531.

This objection is not valid, as a Municipal Court is entitled to exercise jurisdiction over a non-resident foreigner where the cause of action arises within its jurisdiction. The question whether its decree could be enforced against him in the foreign State, is a question for disposal for the Courts of that State. If the 1st defendant did not wish to be bound by the decree, he should not have appeared and pleaded to the cause and appealed and filed a second appeal as he has done; he has clearly submitted to the jurisdiction of the British Court. This objection must also be overruled.

It may be mentioned that the respondent urged that, under section 21 of the Civil Procedure Code the objection as to jurisdiction could not be urged before us without showing that there was a failure of justice. In the view I am taking it is not necessary to discuss the scope of this section.

No objection has been urged on the merits. The second appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

PHILLIPS, J.—I agree. Plaintiff's cause of action against the ship-owner with whom he contracted, is primarily the non-delivery of the goods contracted to be delivered, and it is only in order to meet the defence of 'jettison' set up, that he has to rely on the doctrine of "general average" according to which the ship-owner is still liable to contribute to the loss sustained although to a limited extent. In this view at least a part of plaintiff's cause of action arose at Calicut and the suit was rightly filed in the Court there.

Appeal dismissed.

JUDGMENT.

JWALA PRASAD, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff for a declaration that a sale-deed dated the 8th January 1915 executed by Musamat Sakalbasi Kuer, defendant No. 1 in favour of the appellant is invalid and inoperative as against the plaintiffs that the appellant did not derive any title thereunder, and that it cannot in any way be binding upon them.

The plaintiffs are agnatic relations or reversioners of Hiabal Singh who died in the month of Fagoon 1309 Fasli without any issue. The defendant No. 1 is his widow. The defendant No. 2 the appellant purchased from the defendant No. 1 the properties in question by a sale-deed dated the 8th January 1915 which is the subject-matter of the suit. Shortly after the death of Hiabal Singh, the plaintiffs and defendant No. 1 applied to the Collector for registration of their names in respect of the properties left by Hiabal Singh under Act VII of 1876 (Land Registration Act). The plaintiffs who are the reversioners claimed to have succeeded to the properties by right of survivorship. The defendant No. 1 the widow on the other hand said that her husband was separate from the plaintiffs and that she inherited the properties as an heir under the Hindu Law. The land registration dispute was settled between the parties and a compromise petition embodying the terms of the settlement was filed before the Land Registration Deputy Collector. On the 1st of December 1902 the Deputy Collector passed an order in the following words: "Petition of compromise filed. Draw up decree accordingly and put up on 3rd instant." On the latter date the order was "No objection filed; decree recorded, make entry in revised Register D etc." By the terms of the compromise the widow defendant No. 1 was registered in the Collectorate Register D as a proprietor of the properties and accordingly she was in possession until the 8th January 1915 when she executed the sale-deed in question in favour of the appellant. The reversioners, therefore, brought the present suit for a declaration referred to above. There were other reliefs also sought in the plaint, namely, that the right of the widow to remain in possession was extinguished on account of the invalid transfer and for the immediate registration of the plaintiffs' names. We are not, however, concerned at all with those reliefs, nor are we concerned with the allegations of the plaintiffs in the case that the husband of defendant No. 1 was joint with them and that she had not inherited the property nor was she in possession thereof. The learned Subordinate Judge who tried the case, held that the husband of defendant No. 1 was separate from the plaintiff and that the defendant No. 1 was herself in possession of the property but that the sale-deed in question was executed without any legal necessity. Accordingly he passed a decree in favour of the plaintiffs declaring that the alienation of the properties in favour of the defendant No. 2 is invalid and not binding upon the plaintiffs "after the death of the defendant No. 1." The reversioners felt themselves aggrieved by the last few words, namely, "after the death of the defendant No. 1" and preferred an appeal to the District Judge. The learned District Judge held that it was agreed between the parties according to the terms set forth in the compromise petition filed in the land registration case that "if Musammatt Sakalbasi Kuer (widow) makes any transfer or creates any incumbrance that will be null and void and there will be no injury to the title of Jadunath Singh and Palakhdhari Singh and their heirs and representatives." The learned District Judge accordingly held that the alienation made by defendant No. 1 was null and void and that it conferred no title upon the alienee the appellant. Upon this finding the judgment of the Court below was varied. The transferee of defendant No. 2 has, therefore, preferred the present appeal to this Court.

It is contended on his behalf that the terms of the compromise petition could not be used in evidence inasmuch as it purported to affect immoveable properties of over Rs. 100 in value and, therefore, required to be registered under section 17 of the Indian Registration Act III of 1877. The learned Subordinate Judge had given effect to this contention but there is no reference of this in the judgment of the learned District Judge. Apparently the point was not taken in appeal before him. There is no mention of this plea in the written statement filed by any of the defendants. The plaintiffs based their claim upon the terms of the compromise petition and filed a certified copy of it and also of an order-sheet of the land registration case wherein the Deputy Collector directed a decree to be prepared in terms of the compromise. No decree, however, appears to have been filed and perhaps no decree was prepared by the land registration department, but there can be no doubt that the compromise petition was given effect to inasmuch as the name of the defendant No. 2 was registered. It was in respect of the property about which there was a dispute between the parties in the land registration department that the clause in question was inserted curtailing the right of the defendant No. 1 to transfer or incumber the property. On behalf of the appellant it is contended that the enquiry held by the land registration department for the purpose of registration of the rival claimants, was not a judicial proceeding, or an enquiry by a Court. There does not appear to be any substance in this contention regard being had to the definition of the word "Court" given in the Evidence Act, section 3, which says Court includes all Judges, Magistrates and all persons except arbitrators legally advised to take evidence. Sections 52 and 53 of the Land Registration Act require the officer holding the enquiry under the Act to take evidence. Be that as it may, there can be no doubt that the compromise petition itself purported to give the defendant No. 1 the right of a Hindu widow neither more nor less. The terms of that compromise referred to above namely that the transfer made by her will be null and void and would not in any way prejudice the right of the reversioners and their heirs and representatives, are intended to give her a life estate with such powers and limitations as are vested in a Hindu widow. This is obvious from the position of the parties and from a true interpretation of the terms of the compromise. All that appears to have been intended is that alienation made by the widow should not be binding upon the reversioners at all. There is no intention that the widow shall not be able to deal with the property as a Hindu widow under the Hindu Law. This appears to be the view of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Bili Sahodra v. Rai Jang Bahadur (1) dealing with a compromise petition exactly of the nature that we have in this case. The finding of fact in this case has not been challenged that the alienation by the widow was without any legal necessity. Apart from the compromise petition the result is the same under the Hindu Law that the alienation in question, namely, the sale deed executed by the defendant No. 1 in favour of the defendant No. 2 the appellant is invalid and not binding upon the plaintiffs. This is the only relief that we can give. There is no occasion for adding to the decree the words "after the death of the defendant No. 1" as was done by the learned Subordinate Judge, or in holding that the alienation was absolutely void and conferred no title upon the alienee as held by the learned District Judge. The plaintiffs themselves do not want to disturb the possession of the lady; they simply want a declaration that the alienation is not valid and not binding upon them. This is obvious from relief No. 1 in the plaint.

In supersession of the decree of the Court below, a fresh decree will be prepared in terms of this judgment. The appeal is decreed in a modified form. There will be no order as to costs.

(1) 8 C. 224; 8 I. A. 210; 4 Sar. P. C. J. 294; 6 Ind. Jur. 108; 4 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 143 (P. C.).

The cross-objection relates only to the order of the Court below whereby no costs were given to either party. I think that the learned District Judge is right in holding that no party was entitled to any costs.

Godaveri Agency Rules, rr. 10, 16—Decree of Government Agent, execution of, by Agency Munsif—Order of—Appeal to Government, maintainability of.

The employment of an Agency Munsif by the Government Agent to execute a decree of the latter's Court under rule 10 of the Godaveri Agency Rules does not make the Agency Munsif the incumbent of the judicial office of the Government Agent himself. The Government Agent continues to pre- side in his own Court and the Agency Munsif is only an employee under the Government Agent in the matter of the execution of that particular decree. He occupies the same position as a Commissioner or an Amin or a Ministerial officer employed by an ordi- nary Court to assist it in particular judicial proceed- ings. [p. 715, cols. 1 & 2.]

An order, therefore, passed by the Agency Munsif in the course of execution of a decree of the Govern- ment Agent, is not a decree, and no appeal lies against it to the Government under rule 16 of the Agency Rules. [p. 716, col. 1.]

ORDER.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—This is a petition to the Government under rule 16 of the Godaveri Agency Rules which has been preferred to the High Court for dis- posal. The petition prays to set aside the order of the Agency Munsif of Polavaram, dated 4th October 1916 passed in Execution Petition No. 93 of 1910 on his file.

The appellant was the decree-holder on Original Suit No. 1 of 1897 on the file of the Government Agent's Court, the decree of the High Court in appeal in that suit being dated January 1902.

As regards execution of decrees of the Agency Courts, the relevant rules are as follows:—"Rule 10 (1) with the exception of the Court of the Government Agent, who shall be at liberty, in the execution of decrees, to employ an assistant or Munsif, all decrees of other Courts within his jurisdiction shall be carried into effect by the Court by which the suit may have been decided." "If the person against whom, or the property against which, it is sought to execute any decree resides, or is situated within the jurisdiction of a Court of the same Agency other than the Court issuing the decree, such decree shall be executed in the manner provided in rule 14, clause (2) R" (that is, by forwarding the process in execution to the Court of the Divisional Assistant within whose jurisdiction the person or property resides or lies who shall ordinarily cause the same to be executed). Clause (2) "decrees shall be executed by an order addressed to the proper officer of the

MANAYAM MAHALAKSHAMAMMA GARU v. MUCHIKA APPALARAJU.

Court." In the present case, the Government Agent seems to have employed the Polavaram Agency Munsif to execute the Agency Court's decree of 1902. That decree awarded to the plaintiff possession of the forest lands of Singanapalli. To give such possession in execution, the boundary lines between the Singanapalli forest and Chengondapalli forest had to be demarcated. On the 18th July 1904 the Agency Munsif determined by description on paper the boundary lines as follows: (a) East by a line drawn from Maredukoyya Dimma to the summit of Raaha Kodutula Konda and (b) thence midway between the plateau on the top of the said hill and of Darakonda to the centre of Yerrakonda, (c) summit shall rest in Singanapalli. Then in 1910, the plaintiff applied by Execution Petition No. 93 of 1910 for the cutting of the boundary line as above fixed in the order of July 1904. The Munsif appointed a Commissioner to cut the boundary line and he cut the boundary line according to the best of his ability and according to the three directions (a), (b) and (c) above given in the Munsif's order. While the Commissioner was thus cutting the boundary line, the defendant presented Civil Miscellaneous Petition No. 6 of 1915 against the Commissioner's proceedings to the Agency Munsif, his principal objections to the Commissioner's doings being that Yerrakonada and Darakonada referred to in direction (b) in the order of 1904, were not the hills which the Commissioner thought to be of those respective names but that they were two other hills and that the Commissioner should be directed to draw the boundary line between the tops of the two correct hills and not of the wrong hills. The Munsif practically accepted the defendant's (judgment-debtor's) contention and passed an order accordingly. It is against that order, that the present appeal in the usual form of a petition to the Government under rule 16 has been filed.

It is clear that if this order of the Agency Munsif in execution of the Government Agent's decree is the judicial order of the Agency Munsif's Court itself in execution, no appeal is provided against it under the Godaveri Agency Rules.

Those Rules are published in the Madras Code, Volume II, 1915, pages 1258 to 1263 and it is only against the decree in original suits (see rule 4) that appeals lie from the Munsif to the Assistant Agent, a second appeal from the Assistant Agent to the Agent and a third appeal from the Agent by petition to the Government (which means practically to the High Court) under rule 16. The Civil Procedure Code not applying, orders passed in execution are not decrees. [See Sri Sri Sri Vikramadeo Maharajulum Garu v. Sri Neladevi Pattamadhadevi Garu (1).] Hence no appeal lay even to the Assistant Agent from the order in dispute and much less, of course, a third appeal to this Court. (See Civil Miscellaneous Petition No. 513 of 1911 decided by Sundara Aiyar, J. and myself).

Mr. T. R. Ramachandra Aiyar who appeared for the petitioner-decree-holder, (who might be called the appellant) was, therefore, obliged to argue that though the order purports to be one passed by the Agency Munsif, it is, in the eye of the law, an order of the Government Agent himself and hence rule 16 which allows a petition against all proceedings of the Government Agent (including proceedings in execution) to the Government applies in this case. The sole question, therefore, is whether the order of the Agency Munsif under appeal, is in the eye of the law a proceeding of the Government Agent himself. Mr. Ramachandra Aiyar's arguments, if I followed him aright, were formulated in two ways, (1) an Agency Munsif employed by the Government Agent under rule 10 to execute the decree of the Government Agent's Court becomes himself the Government Agent or the Government Agent's Deputy by delegated authority and his order became a proceeding of the Government Agent himself; (2) even if the Munsif's Court did not become the Government Agent's Court, the Munsif became an officer of the Government Agent's Court and his proceedings as an officer of the Government Agent's Court became the proceedings of the Government Agent himself. On the first branch of the argument, he cited Broom's Legal Maxims, page 655: "It may, likewise, be well to observe, that delegated jurisdiction, as distinguished from proper jurisdiction, is that which is communicated by a Judge to some other person, who acts in his name, and is called a deputy; and this jurisdiction is, in law, held to be that of the Judge who appoints the deputy, and not of the deputy; and in this case the maxim holds, delegatus non potest delegare." "Nor can an individual clothed with judicial functions delegate the discharge of those functions to another, unless as in the case of a County Court Judge, he be expressly empowered to do so. 51 and 52 Vict. Ch. 43, sections 18 to 21." 51 and 52 Vict. Ch. 43, sections 18 to 21 allow a County Court Judge to appoint a Barrister of not less than 7 years' standing to act for him as his deputy when he is temporarily incapacitated through illness etc. It is clear that such a deputy is the only Judge of the County Court during the period of his deputation and his employment does not create another judicial office. Now the employment of the Agency Munsif by the Government Agent to execute a decree of the latter's Court under rule 10 cannot make the Agency Munsif the incumbent of the judicial office of the Government Agent himself. The Government Agent continues to preside in his own Court and the Agency Munsif is only an employee under the Government Agent in the matter of the execution of that particular decree. I at first thought when considering these obscure and unsatisfactory Agency Rules that rule 10 probably meant that the Government Agent might transfer the execution from his own Court to that of the Agency Munsif. But seeing that rule 10, clause 1 does not provide even for the transfer of a decree for execution from one Court under the Government Agent to another Court even under the same Agent but only for execution of processes sent by one such Court to another and that the word 'transfer' seems to have been scrupulously avoided, I think, after the best consideration that I have been able to give to the subject that the Munsif or the Assistant Agent employed by the Government Agent to execute the latter's decree, does not thereby acquire independent judicial powers over the execution proceedings and that he does not become the Government

Agent's Court by and in being so employed, and is only in the same position as a Commissioner or an Amin or a Ministerial Officer employed by an ordinary Court to assist it in particular judicial proceedings. The analogy of a delegation by a County Court Judge to a Barrister who is the sole County Court Judge for the time being cannot, therefore, be invoked so as to make the proceedings of the Agency Munsif the proceedings of the Government Agent himself.

As regards the second branch of the argument, the proceedings of a Subordinate Officer of a Court of Justice do not become the proceedings of the Court itself unless the Statute Law makes them so in respect of particular matters or unless those proceedings are submitted to the Presiding Officer of the Court and adopted or approved of by him. Mr. Ramachandra Aiyar referred us to the decision in Maharaja of Jeypore v. Sri Niladevi Pattamahadevi (2) as supporting his contention. That case arose out of a petition under rule 31 of the Vizagapatam Agency Rules corresponding to rule 16 of the Godavari Agency Rules and there is some obscurity in the statement of facts in the report of that case. The order in execution, in that case is said in the report (preceding the judgment) to have been passed by the Acting Senior Assistant Agent and to have been confirmed by the Agent on appeal against which appellate judgment the petition is said to have been presented under rule 20 which relates, however, to appeals against decrees. This report seems to be a mistake because orders in execution are not decrees. In the body of the judgment, however, rule 31 is referred to and that is also the rule mentioned in the report of the same case as found in 13 Madras Law Journal 151 [Maharaja of Jeypore v. Sri Niladevi Pattamahadevi (2).] Hence we must take it that the appeal in that case was against an order in execution passed by the Government Agent himself and not against an order in appeal from a Senior Assistant Agent. This is also confirmed by the following sentence at page 111* of the report: "It was further urged that the order was not that of the Agent but of his Assistant, and so rule 31 was inapplicable, but we find that the order was passed under the authority of the agent as is expressly stated therein." Thus the order in that case was the order of the Agent himself though signed by the Assistant Agent under the express authority of the Government Agent. That is, the Government Agent applied his judicial mind to the matter, passed an order and asked the Assistant Agent to sign the order for him (the Agent). Hence the High Court held in that case that rule 31 corresponding to Godaveri Rule 16 applied and an appeal by way of petition lay. Similarly in Civil Miscellaneous Petition No 532 of 1911, Sir Sankaran Nair and Sir William Ayling, JJ., treated that petition as an appeal against the order of the Agent directing the Special Assistant Agent to dismiss certain petitions as barred by limitation while conceding that against an order of the Special Assistant Agent himself, no appeal lay. In the present case, the order of the Agency Munsif was not passed with the knowledge or signed under the "authority" of the Government Agent. The Government Agent did not pass the order himself and did not give authority to the Agency Munsif to sign the order for him. I do not, therefore, think that the decision in Maharaja of Jeypore v. Sri Niladevi Pattamahadevi (2) applies to this case.

*Page of 27 M.—Ed,

VENKATA REDDI v. KUPPA REDDI.

In the result, I would uphold the preliminary objection put forward by Mr. Ramesam that rule 16 cannot be invoked in this case as there was no order by the Government Agent himself. I think that where the Government Agent employs the Munsif to execute the Government Agent's decree, the Agent retains full control over the proceedings which are being conducted by the Agency Munsif as the Government Agent's employee and that the appellant's proper course was to have made representations to the Agent against the proceedings of the Munsif and if the Agent passes proceedings on such representations against the appellant, to apply afterwards by petition under rule 16. I would, therefore, dismiss the present petition with costs.

I wish to state in conclusion that it seems to be high time that these unsatisfactory Agency Rules are revised by a proper draftsman. In Rajendra Singh v. Maharaja of Jeypore (3), Seshagiri Aiyar and Napier, JJ., state: "It is somewhat anomalous that the Agent should hear appeals from cases which he alone has power to entertain and which are beyond the pecuniary jurisdiction of the Divisional Assistants. The analogy of the Civil Courts Act in the Presidency is against such a procedure. But we have to interpret the rules as we find them however much we may consider that they should have been different." I find also that in 1863 itself, the rules relating to criminal justice had been cancelled in the Ganjam and Vizagapatam Agency and the Code of Criminal Procedure seems to be now in force in the Agency tracts. It is to be desired that though all the elaborate rules of the Civil Procedure Code may not be made at once applicable to the Agency tracts, the rules actually framed should follow the language of the corresponding sections of the Civil Procedure Code as far as possible, instead of using the loose expressions found in most of the existing rules.

BAKEWELL, J.—I agree with the order proposed by my learned brother.

VENKATA REDDI v. KUPPA REDDI.

The old idea of giving jestabagam or an extra share to the eldest member of a Hindu family has become obsolete and the allotment of such a share at a partition will not be binding on the other shares. [p. 718, col. 2.]

The fact that after partition, the members lived in commensality, incurring marriage expenses indiscriminately will not, under Hindu Law, amount to a re-union. [p. 717, col. 2.]

The joint living of the members after partition, or their failure to keep accounts, or their incurring marriage expenses indiscriminately or making acquisitions jointly or even the throwing in of an extra share by the eldest members into hotchpot will not have the effect of converting separate property into common property. The extra share cannot be given up except by a document duly registered. [p. 718, cols. 1 & 2.]

JUDGMENT.

SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—One Kupa Reddi had four sons. The eldest was Ramasami Reddi the father of defendants Nos. 1 to 3. He died in 1914. The last was one Muthu Reddi, who died fifteen years ago, and the plaintiffs are his sons. There were two other sons. In July 1906 there was a partition among the brothers evidenced by Exhibit U. The family properties were divided into two schedules. Schedule B, was allotted to the second and to third brothers and schedule A was given to the first and the sons of the fourth brother. These latter were represented by their mother as guardian. The document also says that "as No. 1. out of us has been managing the affairs as the head of the family, one share in addition is included."

The present suit is for a half share in the properties which were taken by the first and the fourth brothers. The defendants' case is that the plaintiffs are entitled only to a third share, and that the plaintiff can have no right to the eldest brother's extra share. The Subordinate Judge came to the conclusion that the A schedule properties, which fell to the first and fourth branches, should be shared equally by the two branches. He found that, since the partition, the two branches lived in commensality, kept no accounts and enjoyed the properties as if they were members of an undivided family. This conclusion on facts is not seriously disputed in appeal.

The real question argued before us was whether Exhibit U effected a division in status between the first and the fourth branches of the family, and whether since 1906 their properties were enjoyed by the two branches as tenants-in-common or as co-parceners. There can be no question of re-union because, on the date of the partition, the plaintiffs were minors. That is now settled by the decision of the Judicial Committee in Ram Pershad Singh v. Lakhpati Koer (1), vide also Balabux v. Rukhmabai (2).

There are some outstanding facts which incline me to hold that the first and the fourth branches of the family became divided inter se. In the first place, if the object was to send away the second and the third branches, there was no necessity for the members of the fourth branch being represented by their mother as guardian. Under the Hindu Law although the mother may be the natural guardian as long as the family remains undivided, she has no right of representation in respect of the family property.

Another circumstance is that an extra share was in terms given to the eldest member who was the manager of the family. This, in my opinion, points to the fact that the properties were divided into five shares, that each brother took a share and an extra share was given to the eldest member. The fact that Exhibit U does not say that the properties were divided into five shares, does not, in my opinion, negative this view. The shares of the four brothers under the Hindu Law are well-ascertained and the document speaks of an extra share. It can only mean that an additional fifth share was given to the managing member. This view of mine is strengthened by the (1) 30 C. 231; 30 I. A. 1; 7 C. W. N. 162; 5 Bom. L. R. 103; 8 Sar. P. C. J. 380 (P. C.). (2) 30 C. 725; 30 I. A. 130; 7 C. W. N. 642; 5 Bom. L. R. 469; 8 Sar. P. C. J. 470 (P. C.).

oral evidence given in the case. Three of plaintiffs' own witnesses speak to the properties having been divided into five shares and one extra share having been given to the managing member. P. Ws. Nos. 3, 10 and 32 give definite evidence on this question. D. W. No. 1 says that the property was divided into five shares. D. W. No. 5 who is a paternal uncle of plaintiffs and of defendants says that there was a division into five shares and an extra share was given to the managing member. D. W. No. 7 also gives similar evidence. It may be said that D. W. No. 12 is an interested witness. Apart from his evidence, the evidence I have referred to, is so clear and consistent and fits in so well with the probabilities of the case that I am not prepared to reject this evidence as contended for by Mr. Ramachandra Aiyar. I have, therefore, come to the conclusion that in the partition of 1906, the shares of the brothers were ascertained and that an extra share was given to the senior brother. In that view there can be no doubt that the A schedule properties were held by the two branches as tenants-in-common. The decision of the Judicial Committee in Balkishen Das v. Ram Narain Sahu (3) and Ram Pershad Singh v. Lakhpati Koer (1) are practically on all fours with the present case.

The next question is whether the joint living, the failure to keep accounts and the fact that marriage expenses were incurred indiscriminately without reference to the shares belonging to the two branches and the fact that acquisitions were made jointly, would constitute what was originally separate property into the co-parcenary property.

Mr. Ramachandra Aiyar suggested that it was open to the first branch to throw its extra share into the hotchpot. A transaction of this nature can only be regarded as a gift of a half of the extra share to the fourth branch. Such a transaction must be in writing and registered. It can bear no analogy to renunciations by a member of a joint family in favour of others. Mr. Krishnasami Aiyar quoted the decision in Thyalambal v. Krishna Pattar

(4), where a learned Judge of this Court suggested that, even when members are undivided, in order that the self-acquisitions of any one of them may become joint family property, there must be a document which the law would recognise as a proper conveyance. It is not necessary in this case to go that length. In my opinion, the giving up of the extra share by the senior branch can only be by a duly executed registered document and, as that has not been done, I must hold that that share has not become the common property of the two branches of the family.

Of course the plaintiffs are entitled to an account of the income due to their share from Ramasami Reddi, the managing member and his sons. Whether Article 44 or Article 144 of the Indian Limitation Act applies to the case, it is not necessary to decide at this stage.

The question as to whether more than three years have elapsed since the 1st plaintiff attained majority, has not been put in issue. If the suit was brought within three years of his attaining majority, the question as to whether Article 44 applies, need not be considered.

There can be no question that the act of the mother in consenting to give an extra share to the managing member, is not binding on the plaintiffs. The old idea of Jeshtabagam has now become obsolete and consequently the consent of the mother to Ramasami Reddi taking an extra share could not prejudicially affect the plaintiffs. If there is no bar of limitation, the plaintiffs will be entitled to a fourth of the extra share given to the first branch.

On the question of accountability, Mr. Krishnasami Aiyar suggested that Article 62 of the Limitation Act applied. Here again it is not necessary to express an opinion until the question of the age of the first plaintiff is settled.

The further question as to whether the first plaintiff can be regarded as competent to give a discharge in respect of the rights of his brother who is still a minor, will also have to be dealt with only if the first plaintiff is found to have been more than 21 years of age on the date of the suit.

BRAJA BHUSAN TRIGUNAIT v. SRIS CHANDRA TEWARI.

The decree of the Subordinate Judge must be reversed in so far as it gives to the plaintiffs an equal share with the defendants in A schedule properties. In lieu of that, there will be a declaration that the plaintiffs are entitled to one-third of the properties and to a fourth in the extra share provided that claim is not barred by limitation. There must be a further declaration that the plaintiffs are entitled to an account of the income from the defendants provided that also is not barred by limitation.

As regards the memorandum of objections Mr. T. R. Ramachandra Aiyar confined his argument to five items disallowed by the Subordinate Judge. As regards item 68 we think the conclusion of the Subordinate Judge cannot be supported. P. W. No. 19 gives definite evidence that the money which he borrowed, was from Ramaswami Reddi and that, at the request of the 3rd defendant, he executed a promissory note for the amount of the consideration to Narayanasami Reddi, the brother-in-law of the defendant. The third defendant in the witness-box in a non-committing way says that he did not collect but he does not say that the debt did not exist. We think that the plaintiffs are entitled to their share in item 68.

As regards items 23, 65 and 74 we see no reason to differ from the Subordinate Judge. The original document has not been produced and there is not sufficient evidence to connect the items with moneys belonging to the family. As regards item 35, the evidence of P. W. No. 25 is very definite and clear. The third defendant in his deposition says that he collected item 35. There is no reason for not giving the plaintiffs decree for the balance of Rs. 410 in respect of this item. We must modify the decree of the Subordinate Judge in this behalf.

As regards items 50 and 69 Mr. Ramachandra Aiyar finally admitted that they are not included in the valuation of his memorandum of objections. We must, therefore, confirm the judgment of the Subordinate Judge as regards these items. As a result, in addition to the declaration already indicated, the decree of the Subordinate Judge must be modified by giving the plaintiffs their share in items 68 and 35.

The costs of all the parties here and in the Court below will be provided for in the final decree.

ABDUR RAHIM, J.—I agree.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115—Government of India Act, 1915 (5 & 6 Geo. V, C. 61), s. 107—Receiver, leave to sue, application for—Procedure—Revision—High Court, power of interference of.

The general principle applying to cases in which application is made to sue a Receiver in respect of properties in charge of the Court is that unless the Court is satisfied that there is no question at all to try or there is no legal foundation to the claim, leave should not as a matter of course be refused. [p. 721, col. 2; p. 722, col. 2.]

A petitioner in an application to sue a Receiver is entitled to an enquiry upon the materials furnished by the parties and if he so desires, to ask the Court to take evidence if the Court is not inclined to give leave as a matter of course. If the Court refuses to take evidence and proceeds to dispose of the application summarily, it acts with material irregularity in the exercise of its jurisdiction, and the High Court is, therefore, entitled to interfere in such a case under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code. [p. 721, col. 2; p. 722, col. 2.]

An application for leave to sue a Receiver is a case within the meaning of section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code. [p. 722, col. 2.]

There is no statutory provision which requires a party to take the leave of the Court to sue a Receiver. The rule is based on public policy and the grant of leave is made not in exercise of any power conferred by Statute but in exercise of the inherent power, which every Court possesses to prevent acts which constitute or are akin to an abuse of its authority. [p. 723, col. 1.]

A High Court is entitled in the exercise of its powers of superintendence under section 107 of the Government of India Act to correct and supervise subordinate Courts whenever they appear to have wrongly exercised their inherent powers. [p. 723, col. 1.]

Application for revision against the order of the Subordinate Judge, Manbhum.

Messrs. Hasan Imam, S. M. Mullik and S. K. Mitra, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.

MULLICK, J.—This is an application for revision of an order made by the Subordinate Judge of Manbhum refusing leave to the petitioners to sue a Receiver who has been appointed by the Court in an administration suit between certain members of a family known as the Trigunait brothers.

It appears that so far back as 1894 a Mokarrai lease of certain properties was given by the Trigunait brothers to one Nagendra Nath Mitra. In 1899 Nagendra Nath gave a sub-lease of 101 bighas out of that property to Jogendra Nath Bose, whose interest by subsequent transfers devolved in 1908 upon a company called the Angarpatra Coal Company. Charu Chandra Mitra, the representative of Nagendra Nath subsequently defaulted in payment of rent and royalty upon his lease and in 1914 it became necessary for the Receiver who had, as stated above, been appointed in the administration suit between the co-sharers to sue Charu Chandra Mitra for arrears amounting to something like Rs. 61,000.

On the 4th May 1914, an application was made in the course of that suit by the Receiver for an attachment before judgment and a conditional attachment was in fact issued by the Court.

In the meantime, the Angarpatra Coal Company had gone into liquidation and on the 4th November 1914, Charu Chandra Mitra purchased the right, title and interest of the Company from the liquidator.

On the 6th November 1914, Charu Chandra Mitra executed a sub-lease of those properties in favour of the present petitioners, Braja Bhusan Trigunait and others who were at that time and still are also one-third co-sharers in the property which is the subject of the administration suit.

The case of the petitioners is that the purchase of the 4th November 1914, made by Charu Chandra Mitra was in fact made with the money of the petitioners and in their behalf and that Charu Chandra Mitra was a mere benamidar.

It is contended that by that purchase and the subsequent lease, the petitioners have entered into the shoes of the Angarpatra Coal Company as sub-lessees under the lessee, and that their interest has not merged in the interest of Charu Chandra Mitra, the judgment-debtor in the above-mentioned rent suit, which ended in a decree on the 27th April 1915.

It next appears that when the decree-holders proceeded to bring the leasehold properties to sale, the Executing Court discovered that the conditional order of attachment of the 4th May 1915, was defective and on the 11th June 1917 made the following order:—"Copies of attachment, peon's reports etc., filed. No description or mention of the properties attached given in the writ (copy of which has been filed) under the circumstances ordered: Issue process of attachment of immoveables fixing 3rd July for its return. Decree-holder to file process-fee at once."

Apparently nothing was done before the 3rd July by the decree-holder, but we find that without issuing a fresh attachment, the Court did proceed to issue a sale proclamation fixing the 15th June 1918, for the sale.

Desirous of protecting their leasehold interest, the petitioners on the 18th May 1918 applied to the Subordinate Judge before whom the administration suit was pending, for leave to sue the Receiver or in the alternative, for an order that the Receiver should sell the properties subject to the right, title and interest of the petitioners. The Court called for a report from the Receiver and on the 4th June 1918 recorded an order declining either to sell the property subject to the right of the petitioners or to give leave to the petitioners to sue the Receiver. Against that order the petitioners came to this Court on the 13th June 1918, and obtained a Rule calling upon the Receiver to show cause why leave should not be granted. There was an application for an interim stay of the sale which was refused, but we learn that in fact no sale has yet taken place.

Since the issue of notice upon the Receiver and in anticipation of sanction from this Court, the petitioners have filed their threatened suit.

Now the question for decision is whether or not this Court should interfere with the Subordinate Judge's order refusing leave to the petitioners to sue the Receiver.

It will be convenient to deal with the merits of the case first.

The general principle applying to cases of this kind in which application is made to sue a Receiver in respect of properties in charge of the Court, is that unless the Court is satisfied that there is no question at all to try or there is no legal foundation to the claim, leave should not, as a matter of course, be refused. The onus is, therefore, strongly, on the Court to show that no foundation for any claim has been made out.

In this case the petitioners contend that they are the purchasers of the right, title and interest of the Angarpatra Coal Company and that on the 4th May 1918 when the conditional order of attachment was made, Charu Chandra Mitra, the defendant, had no possession or title thereto. In the second place the petitioners desire to establish that they and not Charu Chandra Mitra are the real purchasers of the interest of the Coal Company. If they can establish that Charu Chandra Mitra is their benamidar and that he acquired that status on the 4th November 1914, then obviously that which can be sold in pursuance of the attachment of the 4th May 1914, must be something exclusive of the right, title and interest of the Angarpatra Coal Company.

It is contended by the opposite party and found by the Subordinate Judge that the petitioners have no bona fide claim, that the allegation of benami purchase is on the face of it false and that on the 4th May 1914, what was attached, was the whole right, title and interest of Charu Chandra Mitra in the 101 bighas of land leased out to Nagendra Nath Mitra. It is also argued as an alternative that if the property purchased by Charu Chandra Mitra on the 4th November 1916, was not included within the property attached on the 4th May, then upon the principle of merger that which was acquired on the 4th November 1916, merely augmented the right, title and interest which Charu Chandra Mitra had on the 4th May 1914, and, therefore, is liable to be sold in execution of the decree, and reliance is placed in support of this contention on Umes Chunder Sircar v. Zahur Fatima (1).

Now if the petitioners can establish as a fact that there was a benami purchase made in their behalf and with their money by Charu Chandra Mitra, then obviously the argument as to augmentation is needless. That contention can only be supported if Charu Chandra was the real purchaser and the true owner of the properties on the 4th November. In the case above cited, the interest of a mortgagor was augmented by a subsequent addition of properties and what was attached, was the whole right, title and interest of the mortgagor judgment-debtor and it was held that it was perfectly competent to the decree-holder to bring to sale by reason of the principle of accession all the properties of which the mortgagor became possessed after the mortgage, and before the sale. That case, however, has no application here. The question of merger and augmentation can only apply if in fact the whole right, title and interest of Charu Chandra was attached on the 4th May and Charu Chandra was the true owner on the 4th November 1916. Now both these points are points which the petitioners desire to establish by a suit.

On what materials then has the Court below come to the finding that there is no shadow of a claim, that there is no legal foundation and that there is no question for trial?

It appears to me that the learned Judge has proceeded on suspicion. He may be right but the petitioners in an application to sue the Receiver, are entitled to an inquiry upon the materials furnished by the parties, and if they so desire, to ask the Court to take evidence if the Court is not inclined to give leave as a matter of course. The question whether there was a benami sale, is a question of fact which cannot be determined without investigation. The question whether the whole right, title and interest of Charu Chandra was attached on the 4th May, is again a question which certainly requires a fuller investigation than that which has been made by the learned Subordinate Judge. From the attachment order it appears that no boundaries are shown to have been published by the Court on the 4th May 1914. But it is contended by the opposite party before us that the Court was subsequently satisfied that the attachment order was sufficient, and on that footing, the Court proceeded to advertize the properties for sale. That again is a question which depends upon evidence. If it should turn out that there was no specification of boundaries which would entitle the decree holder to sell the properties which are now in suit, the petitioners will be seriously prejudiced if the sale is allowed to proceed. The learned Subordinate Judge, however, brushes these considerations aside by the observation that the application is premature and that in any event the petitioners will have ample remedy after the sale by bringing a suit against the purchasers. In my opinion such a course will seriously prejudice the petitioners.

If the properties of the petitioners are about to be wrongfully sold, then it is very little comfort to inform them that they will have ample remedy after the properties have passed to third party purchasers.

It is for these cases that an action in the nature of a "quia timet" is designed so that the party who apprehends injury to his property, may obtain a declaration from the Court as to his interest in the property before any damage in fact takes place. Therefore unless the Court can show strong ground for throwing out the petitioners' application, I think the petitioners are entitled to get leave to sue the Receiver. It is not necessary in this connection to cite many authorities. The principle is well recognised in the Courts in England and has been followed among others in the case of Lane v. Capsey (2) and in Pound, Son and Hutchings, In re (3). In my opinion upon the materials at our disposal there is prima facie evidence of a case to be tried and the foundation of a legal claim.

We will now deal with the legal question which has been raised as to our jurisdiction to interfere with the order of the Subordinate Judge either under section 115, Civil Procedure Code, or under section 107, Government of India Act, 1915. Reliance has been placed by Mr. Hasan Imam on behalf of the opposite party on Balakrishna Udayar v. Vasudeva Aiyar (4), where their Lordships of the Privy Council affirmed the principle that section 115 applies to jurisdiction alone, or the irregular exercise, or the non-exercise of it, or the illegal assumption of it. In other words, where a Court with jurisdiction makes an order erroneous either in law or in fact that order cannot be revised under section 115. To like effect has reliance been placed upon Kumar Chandra Kishore Roy v. Basat Ali (5).

On the point whether the decision in the present matter was a case within the meaning of section 115, Civil Procedure Code, I will assume that it was. An ex parte application or an application to a Court for leave to sue a Receiver may upon the analogy of the case which their Lordships of the Privy Council were called upon to consider in the above cited decision may, I think, be held to be covered by section 115.

Then a more serious question is whether there was material irregularity in the exercise of the jurisdiction which was admittedly vested in the Subordinate Judge. In my opinion the omission of the Subordinate Judge to go into the allegations which were made, was material irregularity. If a Court which has jurisdiction to try a suit, declines to go into evidence when required to do so, but merely proceeds to dispose of the suit upon the pleadings or upon allegations made in petitions, that is material irregularity in the exercise of jurisdiction which is, I think, revisable under section 115, Civil Procedure Code. Upon the view that I take of the proceedings of the learned Subordinate Judge, there was such material irregularity in this case. On the other hand if he had investigated the facts either by taking evidence or by some other adequate mode of enquiry, I should have said that there was no irregularity in the exercise of his jurisdiction and our interference would not have been warranted on that ground.

But apart from section 115, the petitioners are on much stronger ground under section 107, Government of India Act. There is no statutory provision which requires a party to take the leave of the Court to sue a Receiver. The rule has come down to us as a part of the rules of equity, binding upon all English Courts of Justice in this country. It is a rule based upon public policy which requires that when the Court has assumed possession of a property in the interest of the litigants before it, the authority of that Court is not to be obstructed by suits designed to disturb the possession of the Court. The institution of such suits is in the eye of the law a contempt of the authority of the Court and, therefore, the party contemplating such a suit, is required to take the leave of the Court so as to absolve himself from that charge. The grant of such leave is made not in exercise of any power conferred by Statute but in exercise of the inherent power, which every Court possesses to prevent acts which constitute or are akin to an abuse of its authority. Now it is a settled principle that the High Court is entitled in exercise of its powers of superintendence to correct and supervise subordinate Courts whenever they appear to have wrongly exercised their inherent powers. The question is fundamentally one of jurisdiction and, therefore, attracts the operation not only of section 107, Government of India Act, but also of section 115, Civil Procedure Code.

This jurisdiction under section 107 of the Government of India Act must of necessity be vague, but there is no doubt that there is a residue of jurisdiction which the Court will always exercise whenever it appears that there has been something in the nature of a denial of the right of fair trial. In the case before us there has been, in my opinion, such a denial.

As to what the effect of the grant of leave will be, it is scarcely our province to inquire at the present moment, but we may mention that an offer was made by Mr. Das on behalf of the petitioners that he was ready to pay the whole of the decree money into Court pending the trial of the suit. No doubt an application will be made in the Court in which the suit is instituted for an injunction prohibiting the defendants from proceeding with the sale. Whether that injunction will be granted, and, if so, on what terms, are matters for the trial Court. Possibly the parties may be able to arrange that the whole of the decree money or at least that part of it which is due to the opposite party as proprietors of the two-thirds share, may be paid into Court and that those proprietors will be permitted to draw it out on giving adequate security for the same. We have, however, already observed that we cannot at this stage give any directions upon these matters.

The result is that the application is allowed with costs. Hearing fee three gold mohurs.

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Tanjore, in Original Suit No. 28 of 1916.

Messrs. T. K. Muthukrishna Aiyar and N. Muthuswamy Aiyar, for the Appellant.

Mr. A. Krishnaswami Aiyar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of the case are as follows:—One Kuppuswami Aiyar was the last male owner of the properties in suit and of other properties. He made a Will under which his mother, his widow and his natural brother were the legatees. Original Suit No. 27 of 1901 was brought by the widow Minachi against her mother-in-law Seshiammal and against her husband's natural brother Srinivasa Iyer disputing the genuineness of the Will. The suit ended in a compromise Exhibit D. Thus the widow's claims were settled. Thereupon two persons claiming themselves to be the nearest reversioners of Kuppuswami Aiyar sued in Original Suit No. 32 of 1902 the widow, the mother and the natural brother for a declaration that the Will was not genuine. This suit also ended in a compromise, Exhibit F. The present suit is by one of the two plaintiffs in Original Suit No. 32 of 1902 for a declaration that he is solely entitled to the property secured under the compromise. It may be mentioned that the other plaintiff in Original Suit No. 32 of 1902 predeceased Seshiammal. Seshiammal died a few months before the present suit. Plaintiff's case is that as of the two plaintiffs who got the compromise decree, he alone was alive when Seshiammal died, the heirs of the other plaintiff are not entitled to any rights. The compromise provided for the property being taken possession of on the death of Seshiammal. We are unable to agree with the appellant that the two plaintiffs did not take a vested interest in the property. The widow of the last male holder having been bought off by the mother by the compromise of the previous litigation, she was virtually the full owner of the property of Kuppu-swami, with the exception of some of the properties given to his natural brother. It was competent to Seshiammal to have alienated the property in any way she liked. Consequently the compromise which secured to the then plaintiffs rights dependent upon the death of Seshiammal, was a vested interest. See section 19 of the Transfer of Property Act and Rewun Persad v. Musammam Radha Feeby (1) and Bhagabati Barmanya v. Kali Charan Singh (2). This vested interest under the Indian law does not pass by survivorship, but is heritable and divisible between the two donees. We do not think they can be said to have sued or obtained the properties as reversioners because they were not reversioners to Seshiammal. In this view, the Subordinate Judge was right in holding that plaintiff is not the sole owner.

But he was wrong in refusing to give a decree for partition. We must reverse the decree of the Subordinate Judge and direct him to give a decree to plaintiff for one-half of the suit properties including in those words also the properties for which the suit properties may have been exchanged.

Plaintiff is entitled to mesne profits at the rate admitted in Exhibit IIIB. Future mesne profits from the date of Exhibit IIIB up to delivery will also be provided for. Appellant must pay the respondent's costs in this Court. Costs in the lower Court will be provided for in the revised decree.

Where an application under Order I, rule 10 of the Civil Procedure Code asking that a certain person be added as a party defendant to the suit and praying for permission to amend the plaint accordingly is rejected, no appeal lies against the order rejecting the application. Where, however, it appears that the Court has exercised wrong discretion in rejecting the application, the High Court can interfere in revision under section 107 of the Government of India Act.

Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, 2nd Court, Saran, dated the 8th September 1917.

Mr. Muhammad Hasan Jun. for the Appellant.

Messrs Fakhruddin and Panchanan Banerjee, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

MULLICK, J.—The plaintiff brought a suit against the defendants for specific performance of a contract of sale in respect of some immoveable property and the defendants filed written statements between the 4th June and 12th June 1917, although the plaint was filed very nearly seven months before. When the written statements were filed, the plaintiff discovered that the property was alleged to have been sold by the defendants to a lady named Bibi Batul and on the 3rd July 1917, the plaintiff applied to the Court for leave to add Bibi Batul as a party defendant and to amend the plaint by adding a prayer to the Court to declare that the alleged sale in favour of Bibi Batul was fraudulent and not binding upon the plaintiff.

On the 25th July the learned Subordinate Judge declined both prayers observing "the plaintiff wants to kill two birds with one shot, which he cannot be allowed to do".

It is to be observed that the plaintiff purported to make this application for amendment and addition of parties under Order XXII, rule 10 of the Civil Procedure Code, but as a matter of fact, the assignment of the property having been made previous to the institution of the suit, this rule had no application and the proper provision under which the plaintiff should have applied, was Order I, rule 10 of the Civil Procedure Code.

On the 27th August 1917, the plaintiff again repeated his prayer asking substantially for the same reliefs. That second request also was refused. The plaintiff has accordingly filed first of all an appeal against the order of the 27th August 1917 refusing for the second time leave to add Bibi Batul and has also by way of precaution filed an application for revision.

Now it is quite clear that the application having been made under Order I, rule 10, no appeal lies. Appeal No. 293 of 1917 will, therefore, be dismissed with costs.

Let us turn next to the application for revision. Now I fail to see what prejudice would have been caused to the defendants by the addition of Bibi Batul. On the contrary, it is in every way desirable that the litigation should finally end and finality can only be reached by investigating the rights of Bibi Batul in this matter. The learned Subordinate Judge has exercised a wrong discretion in refusing leave to amend as well as in refusing to allow Bibi Batul to be made a defendant. The Courts have always reserved to themselves a residual power of superintendence under the provisions of the Charter Act which are now reproduced in section 107 of the Government of India Act, to interfere in cases of this sort, and in exercise of that power I think we should direct the learned Subordinate Judge to make the additions in the plaint which the plaintiff asked for in his petition of the 3rd July 1917, and to dispose of the case according to law. We also direct the Court to fix an early date for the filing of a written statement by Bibi Batul and to see that the trial is prosecuted more expeditiously than it has hitherto been.

As these alterations in the plaint are indulgences, which the plaintiff is obtaining, he will have to pay to the defendants the costs of this hearing, which will be assessed at one gold mohur.

It appears that in the matter of the appeal the learned Vakil for the plaintiff has already paid the costs for the appointment of a guardian to the minor defendants. This item will be excluded from the costs which will be payable by the plaintiff to the defendants in the appeal.

PLAINTIFFS—APPELLANTS

NAJA SURA—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Gujarat Talukdars' Act (VI Bom. of 1888), s. 29 E—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 182 (5)—Decree against talukdar—Execution, application for, unaccompanied by certificate of managing officer, whether "in accordance with law"—Time between date of decree and submission of decretal claim, exclusion of.

The plaintiff obtained an instalment decree on the 16th September 1910 against the defendants who were talukdars. The first instalment became payable on the 1st April 1911, and in consequence of the default in payment, the whole amount became payable on that day. The plaintiff presented an application for execution on the 1st April 1914, but it was rejected on the 15th June 1914 as the certificate of the managing officer required by section 29 E of the Gujarat Talukdars' Act was not produced. Subsequently the plaintiff applied to the managing officer for a certificate in August 1914 and obtained a certificate on the 29th August 1914. He then made the present application for execution on the 28th February 1916 accompanied with the certificate of the managing officer:

Held, that the plaintiff was entitled under section 22 F, sub-section (3) of the Gujarat Talukdars' Act to exclude the period from the 16th September 1910, the date of the decree, to August 1914, the date of the submission of the claim under the decree, from the period allowed for the execution of the decree, and that, therefore, the application of the 28th February 1916 was within time. [p. 732, col. 1.]

Per Shah, J.—The application of the 1st April 1914 was in accordance with law within the meaning of Article 182 (5) of Schedule I of the Limitation Act and operated to save limitation, although no certificate of the managing officer was produced as required by section 29 E (1) of the Gujarat Talukdars' Act. [p. 729, col. 1.]

The words "in accordance with law" in Article 182 (5) of Schedule I of the Limitation Act refer to the form and procedure relating to the application, unless there is a clear and definite prohibition outside the Act which would render an application not in accordance with law within the meaning of the Limitation Act. [p. 727, col. 2.]

Section 29 E of the Gujarat Talukdars' Act does not lay down any prohibition against execution, but only provides a method of securing the result that execution shall not be proceeded with until the certificate that the decree-claim has been duly submitted, is produced or until the prescribed period has expired after the decree-holder has made a proper effort to obtain the certificate. Therefore in spite of the provisions of section 29 E it is permissible to a decree-holder to apply in accordance with law for execution in order to save limitation under Article 182 of the Limitation Act without obtaining the certificate under section 29 E, though it is not permissible to proceed with the actual execution in the absence of the certificate. [p. 729, col. 1.]

Per Marten, J.—An application for execution of a decree against a talukdar which is not accompanied by the certificate required by section 29 E (1) of the Gujarat Talukdars' Act, is neither "in accordance with law" nor made to the "proper Court" within the meaning of clause (5) of Article 182 of Schedule I of the Limitation Act and does not, therefore, operate to extend the limitation under that clause. [p. 732, col. 2.]

Appeal from the decision of the District Judge, Ahmedabad, in Appeal No. 344 of 1915, confirming the order passed by the Subordinate Judge, Dhandbuka, in Darkhast No. 94 of 1916, dismissing the application.

Mr. G. S. Rao, for the Appellants.

Mr. H. V. Divatia, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

SHAH, J.—The facts which have given rise to this second appeal, are few and undisputed. The plaintiff obtained an instalment decree on the 16th September 1910 against the defendants, who are Talukdars. The first instalment became payable on the 1st April 1911, and in consequence of the default in payment, the whole amount became payable on that day. The plaintiff presented an application for execution on the 1st April 1914, but it was rejected on the 15th June 1914 as the certificate of the managing officer required by section 29 E of the Gujara

HABGOVIND FULCHAND V. NAJA SURA.

Talukdars' Act was not produced. Subsequently the plaintiff applied to the managing officer for a certificate in August 1914 and obtained a certificate on the 29th August 1914. He then made the present application for execution on the 28th February 1916 accompanied with the certificate of the managing officer.

Both the lower Courts have dismissed this application on the ground that it has been made more than three years after the amount became payable under the decree, and that the intermediate application of the 1st April 1914 cannot save the bar of limitation as it is not in accordance with law within the meaning of Article 182 of the Indian Limitation Act, the certificate under section 29E not having been produced with it.

This appeal was adjourned to ascertain the dates of the notice under section 29B and of the submission of the 'decree-claim'. It is now admitted that the notice under section 29B was published on the 5th November 1908, and the claim in respect of which the decree was subsequently passed, was submitted on the 27th April 1909. It is not disputed before us that apart from the submission of the claim before the date of the decree, in fact there was no submission of the decree-claim before August 1914, when the application for the certificate under section 29E was made.

On behalf of the appellants two points are urged in support of the appeal: first, that the Darkhast of the 1st April 1914 was in accordance with law within the meaning of Article 182 in spite of the absence of the certificate under section 29E, sub-section (1), and secondly, that under sub-section (3) of section 29E the appellant is entitled to exclude the time from the date of the decree to the date of the application for the certificate, which must be taken to be the date of the due submission of the decree-claim within the meaning of that sub-section. It is common ground that if either of these contentions is allowed, the present application would be in time.

As regards the first contention, I am of opinion that it should be allowed. The expression used in Article 182, clause 5, in the third column of the Schedule of the Limitation Act is "applying in accordance with law to the proper Court for execution." In the present case in form the application was in accordance with law, i.e., in accordance with the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure relating to such an application, and it was an application to the proper Court for execution. Unless the words "in accordance with law" are to be very widely construed, I think that a person applies 'in accordance with law', when he makes an application in the prescribed form, and asks for the execution of the decree, i.e., for relief granted by the decree and not for any relief outside the decree, nor for any relief which is prohibited by law. I think that sufficient meaning is given to the expression by interpreting it in that way.

It is clear that the Limitation Act must be construed strictly, and any provision, in the nature of an exception, should be liberally construed. The expression, in my opinion, is fairly susceptible of a limited construction, and for the purposes of the Limitation Act, the "applying in accordance with law" may fairly be understood to refer to the form and procedure relating to the application, unless of course there is a clear and definite prohibition outside these Acts, which would render such applying not in accordance with law within the meaning of the Limitation Act.

It is contended for the respondents that section 29E of the Gujarat Talukdars' Act contains such a prohibition. That section provides that on the publication of a notice under section 29B no proceeding in execution shall be instituted or continued until the decree-holder files a certificate from the managing officer that the decree-claim has been duly submitted or until the expiration of one month from the date of receipt by the managing officer of a written application for such certificate, accompanied by a certified copy of the decree. No doubt the expression "no proceeding shall be instituted" if literally construed, is susceptible of the interpretation that there is a prohibition to make any application for execution until the proper certificate is produced or the prescribed period of one month has elapsed after the written application is made. But these provisions, in my opinion, should be read in the light of the scheme and the main purpose of these groups of sections in the Act. The scheme is to secure a due submission of all the claims to the managing officer with a view to ascertain and liquidate the liabilities of a Talukdari estate which is taken under management, and in the case of decree-claims to secure their due submission before the execution is proceeded with. The purpose is not to prohibit the filing of any suit or the execution of a decree, but to give the managing officer an opportunity of considering the claim before the claimant or the decree-holder pursues his usual remedy in the Civil Courts. This is clear from sub-section (3) of section 29D and sub-section (2) of section 29E. In sub-section (3) of section 29E the proceedings have been referred to as "stayed or temporarily barred by reason of the claim not having been duly submitted." It shows that the effect of sub-section (1) is not to prohibit the making of any application, which may be necessary to keep alive the decree for the purpose of the Limitation Act, but to insist upon a clear proof of the due submission before the execution is proceeded with or to allow the execution to be proceeded with after one month has elapsed from the date of the application for a certificate of the due submission of the decree-claim. It seems to me that the certificate is entirely extraneous to the application contemplated by the Limitation Act, and its production is undoubtedly a condition precedent to the actual execution of the decree but not necessarily to the making of the application.

The use of the expression 'in accordance with law' in Order XXI, rule 17, sub-rule (2) of the Code of Civil Procedure lends some support to the view that the same expression in Article 182 may be appropriately construed as referring to the application itself and not to any extraneous accompaniment like the certificate under section 29E of the Gujarat Talukdars' Act.

It has been urged with some force by Mr. Divatia that the section provides that no proceedings in execution shall be instituted or continued without the certificate or without allowing the necessary period to lapse. But, in my opinion, in effect it means no more than this that the execution shall not be proceeded with unless the necessary certificate is produced or unless the prescribed time has elapsed after the application for such a certificate. In the Code of Civil Procedure and the Limitation Act the word 'institute' is used with reference to a suit, and in the course of the argument no instance of its use with reference to an application, has been pointed out to us. Taking the meaning of the word with reference to the context in section 29E it seems to me that sufficient effect is given to it by reading it in the sense I have just mentioned.

I am fortified in this view by the consideration that there is no provision allowing the decree-holder any deduction of the time between the date of his application for such a certificate and the date of the certificate or of the month which must elapse before an application for execution can be filed. It may happen in some cases that the period of limitation prescribed by the Limitation Act may expire during this interval; and it is not reasonable to attribute to the Legislature the position that while the filing of an application for execution within the period prescribed by the Limitation Act, may be practically prohibited, no provision should be made for deducting the time taken up in obtaining the certificate which is rendered obligatory by the Act. It is noticeable that under sub-section (3) the time up to the date of "due submission" can be excluded, and not the time taken up in obtaining the certificate. Further unless the due submission of the decree-claim, and the application for a certificate under section 29E, were intended by the Legislature to be simultaneous, there would be some provision excluding the time that may be reasonably allowed after the due submission of the decree claim and before the application for the certificate under section 29E in order to enable the managing officer to deal with the claim. But there is no such provision.

I do not say that the expression "no proceeding shall be instituted" is not susceptible of the construction put upon it by the lower Courts and urged by Mr. Divatia with ability before us. But on the whole I think that in spite of the provisions of section 29E it is permissible to a decree-holder to apply in accordance with law for execution in order to save limitation under Article 182 of the Limitation Act without obtaining the certificate under section 29E, though it is not permissible to proceed with the actual execution in the absence of the certificate.

I have not so far referred to the various cases which have been cited on either side. No case has been cited to us in which the effect of section 29E of the Gujarat Talukdars' Act has been considered with reference to the meaning of the expression 'in accordance with law'. I do not consider it necessary to refer to cases which deal with the provisions in other Acts, as they would have a bearing on the point only by way of analogy. I may, however, observe that the case of Chatur Kushalchand v. Mahadu Bhogaji (1), which has been relied upon for the respondents, is clearly distinguishable, because the applications in that case were held to be not in accordance with law as they were forbidden by section 22 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act; the expression then used in section 22 was that "no agriculturists' immovable property shall be attached or sold." The case of an express prohibition stands on a different footing.

I do not read section 29E as laying down any prohibition against execution, but only as providing a method of securing the result that the execution shall not be proceeded with until the certificate that the decree-claim has been duly submitted, is produced or until the prescribed period has expired after the decree-holder has made a proper effort to obtain the certificate.

I am, therefore, of opinion that the application made on the 1st April 1914 was in accordance with law within the meaning of Article 182 though no certificate of the managing officer was produced. The present application is, therefore, not barred by limitation.

The second point urged on behalf of the appellant in the course of the argument has not been considered by the lower Courts. It is really a new point; but as the facts relating to it are not in dispute, and as it is a point of limitation, we have heard the Pleaders on the point fully; in fact we invited arguments on the point in view of the difficulty and the doubt that we felt on the first point in the course of the hearing. The point is whether apart from the intermediate application for execution, the present application is within time by reason of the exclusion of the time from the date of the decree to the date of the due submission of the decretal claim, i.e., on the facts of this case to the date of the application for the certificate. Mr. Divatia has argued that sub-section (3) has no application to the present case as the original claim was duly submitted before the decree was passed and that no further submission of the claim was necessary under the decree.

(1) 10 B. 91; 5 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 445.

It may be that the Legislature did not contemplate what in substance would be a second submission of the same claim to the managing officer. But the fact remains that section 29E clearly refers to the due submission of the 'decree-claim' which would mean the decretal claim or the claim under the decree and not the original claim in respect of which the decree has been subsequently passed. Now in this case we are not concerned with the submission of the claim before the decree but with the due submission of the decree-claim. Mr. Divatia's contention must, therefore, be disallowed.

On the facts either admitted before us or appearing on the record, the decree-claim was brought to the notice of the managing officer when the decree-holder applied in August 1914 for a certificate of the due submission thereof. The officer has given the certificate under section 29E and the fact of the due submission of the claim in respect of the decree, is beyond dispute. But whether the officer had in view the submission of the claim in 1909 before the decree was passed or the submission of the decretal claim when the application for the certificate was received, is a question which it is by no means easy to decide. From the terms of the certificate, however, it can be inferred that the managing officer had in view the due submission of the decretal claim after the date of the decree. In the absence of any further information, on the facts of this case, it is a fair inference that the decree-claim was submitted when the application for the certificate was made. There is no particular form prescribed for the submission of the decretal claim and if the certified copy of the decree with a proper certificate from the Court as provided in section 29C, sub-section (1) is sent to the managing officer, it may be a due submission of the claim. This was done in August 1914, and the managing officer has certified that the claim in respect of the decree was duly submitted to him. It follows, therefore, that the appellant is entitled to exclude the time from the date of the decree to some period in August 1914.

No doubt this view involves the result that in such a case as we have here, the decree-holder may practically extend the time for execution according to his own choice by making the application for the certificate at any time. It is probably a result not contemplated by the Legislature, and it may not be desirable that it should be possible to extend the time in that manner. It constitutes a difficulty in the way of the appellant on this point. But if the Legislature will insist upon certificates in all cases of decretal claims without any exception and if cases of this kind are not provided for in any other way, I do not see how sub-section (3) can be held to be inapplicable to the present case; and after all it has no further effect than that of saving limitation.

After giving the point my best consideration I am of opinion that the decree-holder is entitled to exclude the time from the date of the decree up to August 1910. On this ground also the present application for execution would be within time.

I would, therefore, allow this appeal, set aside the orders of the lower Courts and remand the Darkhast for disposal according to law.

Costs throughout to be costs in the Darkhast.

MARTEN, J.—The respondent is a Gujarat Talukdar whose estate is being managed under the Gujarat Talukdars' Act, 1888, in pursuance of a Government Notification dated the 5th November 1903. The appellant is the holder of a money-decree, against the respondent, dated the 16th September 1910. In endeavouring to execute this decree under a Darkhast, presented on the 28th February 1916, the appellant has been met by Article 182 (5) of the Indian Limitation Act and section 29E (1) of the Gujarat Talukdars' Act and has failed in both Courts below.

Before us the appellant has re-argued the points on which he failed in the Courts below and has also urged an alternative point, suggested to his Pleader by my brother Shah, viz., that his Darkhast is saved on the facts of this particular case by section 29E (3) of the Gujarat Talukdars' Act. I propose to deal with this alternative point first. Section 29E (1) and 29E (3) run as follows:—

"Section 29E (1). On the publication of a notice under section 29B, sub-section (1), no proceeding in execution of any decree against the Talukdar whose estate is taken under management or his property shall be instituted or continued until the decree-holder files a certificate from the managing officer that the decree-claim has been duly submitted, or until the expiration of one month from the date of receipt by the managing officer of a written application for such certificate, accompanied by a certified copy of the decree."

"Section 29E (3). In computing the period of limitation prescribed by the Indian Limitation Act, 1877, or by section 230 of the Code of Civil Procedure for any application for the execution of a decree, proceedings in which have been stayed or temporarily barred by reason of the claim not having been duly submitted, the time from the date of the notice published under section 29B, sub-section (1), or of the decree if it was passed subsequently to the publication of the notice, to the date of due submission, shall be excluded."

I think the words 'decree-claim' in sub-section (1) mean "the claim under or by virtue of a decree." In other words a decree is essential, and consequently it is not sufficient to submit the claim to the managing officer before any decree is obtained. This construction is, I think, borne out by the concluding words of sub-section (1), which require the written application for a certificate to be accompanied by a certified copy of the decree. It is the decree and the execution thereof which is particularly important to the managing officer. A suit may or may not end in a decree. It is the decree and above all the execution of it which effects a practical alteration of the position.

For the purposes, therefore, of sub-section (1) I disregard the respondent's submissions of his claims to the managing officer in April 1909 as they were prior to the decree and for the matter of that to the suit as well. Further, his Pleader before us has formally admitted that there was no submission between the date of the decree (16th September 1910) and some date from 11-29th August 1914, and that the submission, if any, made after the decree was in August 1914 when the managing officer gave his certificate. I have already said that the Government Notification was published on 5th November 1908. Consequently sub-section (1) prevented the appellant from instituting execution proceedings till August 1914 when he got the requisite certificate.

This brings one to sub-section (3). That sub section is still dealing with proceedings for the execution of a decree and, in my opinion, the word 'claim' means the same as 'decree-claim' under sub-section (1). This is, I think, borne out by the context, viz., the words "application for the execution of a decree proceedings in which have been stayed or temporarily barred by reason of the claim not having been duly submitted." On my construction of sub-section (1) no bar can arise from a non-submission before decree, and consequently the above words in sub-section (3) must refer to a bar arising from a non-submission of a decree-claim.

Further, in the present case, time has to be calculated under sub-section (3) from the date of the decree, as it was passed subsequently to the Government Notification, and under sub-section (3) this time has to be calculated up "to the date of due submission." I think the words "due submission" refer again to due submission of the decree-claim. I do not accept the respondent's contention that the due submission in the present case was in April 1909 before the decree and consequently that sub-section (3) has no application. On the contrary, I think, the Legislature intended the exemption in sub-section (3) to apply to all execution proceedings barred under sub-section (1) and did not intend to omit one branch of them; viz., proceedings in which a submission had been made before decree of a claim which might or might not correspond to the amount awarded by the decree itself.

Respondent's Pleader has urged that the above construction of sub-sections (1) and (3) would unduly favour a decree holder in the matter of limitation. That, however, is for the Legislature to decide on. The Gujarat Talukars' Act is an Act of a special nature. Its details may cause difficulty owing to the drafting. But in its broad outlines the scheme of the Act seems to me as follows. For certain reasons a Talukdari estate may be attached and managed by a Government Officer (section 26). In that event all creditors must submit their claims [section 29B (1)], which are then investigated [section 29D (1)] and may be compromised [section 29D (2)]. If the estate appears to be hopelessly involved or there is any other sufficient reason, then Government management may be withdrawn and possession of the estate restored to the owner (section 29).

How then does the Act deal with the claims of creditors in the event of such withdrawal, e.g., (1) creditors who have submitted their claims and been paid nothing; (2) creditors who have submitted and compromised their claims and been paid an instalment; and (3) creditors who have not submitted their claims?

As regards class (2), the proviso to section 29D (2) would apparently prevent claims being time-barred prior to the withdrawal of management. Similarly as regards class (3), it would seem from section 29F (2) (c) and (3) that on the withdrawal their claims would revive and that the period of Government management would, be excluded in calculating the periods of limitation. The words "during the continuance of the management or afterwards" in section 29B (3) cause some difficulty in this respect but as the cases provided for by section 29F (2) (c) are expressly saved, presumably the latter section is intended to have some operation. Counsel have not, however, referred me to any clause keeping alive expressly the claims of class (1) of creditors unless it be by the joint operation of sections 29D (3) and 29E (1) and (3).

Be that as it may, I think that section 29F (3) shows that in certain cases the whole period of Government management is to be excluded in reckoning limitation. That being so, I see nothing strange in the Legislature saying in section 29E that in certain other cases, a portion of the period of Government management is to be excluded, viz., down to the date of the submission of the claim under the decree.

In the view, therefore, which I take of section 29E (3), the period from 16th September 1910 (decree) to August 1914 (date of submission of claim under decree) must be excluded in the present case. Consequently in my judgment the Darkhast of 28th February 1916 was in time, and, therefore, this appeal ought to be allowed.

Apart then from costs, it is unnecessary in the view I take, to consider the other branch of the appellant's case, viz., that time should run from another Darkhast which was presented on the 1st April 1914 and which in the absence of any certificate, was dismissed. But as the point was argued and has a bearing on costs I ought perhaps to state the view which I take. Mr. Rao contended that this Darkhast was an application "in accordance with law to the proper Court for execution" within the meaning of Article 182 (5) of the Indian Limitation Act. He had to contend that on the one hand this was an application by the appellant for execution under Article 182 (5) of the Indian Limitation Act, and that on the other hand, the appellant had not in so doing instituted proceedings for execution within section 29E of the Gujarat Talukdars' Act. "Institution," he said, did not begin till the application was admitted under Order XXI, rule 17 (4). The ordinary meaning, however, of "institute" is to begin or to commence. Accordingly, I think that execution proceedings were instituted, i. e., begun or commenced when the Darkhast of 1st April 1915 was presented to the Court. This is in accordance with the explanation to section 3 of the Indian Limitation Act which states that a suit is instituted in ordinary cases when the plaint is presented to the proper officer. But this institution of execution proceedings was contrary to the express provisions of section 29 E for no certificate had been obtained or even applied for. I do not think those provisions are directory merely, or that we can read "instituted" as meaning proceeded with. I think, therefore, the application was not in accordance with law.

Further, I doubt whether the application was "to the proper Court" for execution within the meaning of Article 182 (5). Explanation II says that the 'proper Court' means the Court whose duty it is to execute the decree or order." At the date of this Darkhast, it was the duty of no Court to execute the decree or order for there was no certificate from the managing officer; and in fact the Darkhast was dismissed for want of such a certificate. The contention of the appellant really amounts to this that this utterly irregular application of his prevented time running. I do not think this is the case. Nor do I think it correct to say that provided the application fulfilled the formal requirements of the Civil Procedure Code, it did not matter that it was contrary to the Gujarat Talukdars' Act.

Certain authorities were cited to us but I do not propose to discuss them as they were on other Acts and depended on different expressions e. g., "entertain." "Institute" is, I think, a stronger and more definite word than "entertain." I may refer to section 18 of the Religious Endowments Act, 1863, as an instance of both words being used in the same section.

It was argued that hardship might result if the period of limitation expired during the month after the application for a certificate. However, on my construction of section 29E, this would be extremely unlikely to happen. Even if it did, I see no particular hardship in giving a creditor a delay of say two years and eleven months instead of three years.

On the points, therefore, argued before the lower Court I agree with the findings of the learned Judges in the Courts below. On the new point taken before us the appellant succeeds. On the other hand, he did not take this point in the Courts below. I think, therefore, on the whole that in allowing the appeal we should direct that the costs throughout up to date of both parties should be costs in the Darkhast of 1916. The actual order of this Court will be as indicated by my learned brother.

The omission to issue or the delay in issuing a sanad under Regulation XXV of 1802 finally settling the peishcush payable by the holder, will not affect the alienability of such lands after the abolition of the services. [p. 743, col. 2; p. 744, col. 2.]

The effect of section 5 of the Regulation was to release the lands forthwith from the condition of rendering Police service or at any rate that was the policy of the Government and there is nothing in the Regulation to prevent effect being given to that intention without the grant of a permanent sanad. The prohibition against alienation of the lands on the grounds of public policy definitely ceased after the passing of Madras Act III of 1895 which has repealed Regulation VI of 1831 except to a limited extent [p. 742, cols. 1 & 2.]

A mere transfer of a spes successionis in property does not operate on the transferor's interest when he gets possession of the property. [p. 745, col. 1.]

Obiter—Where a poligar or zemindar who ordinarily represents the estate is dispossessed and fails to sue for possession, the person dispossessing him gets an indefeasible title after 12 years and the successor of the dispossessed zemindar cannot claim a fresh starting point from the date of his succession unless he shows that the previous holder had effectually debarred himself from suing and there was no one who could have sued successfully. Appeal against the decree of the District Court, Madura, in Original Suit No. 5 of 1915.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. Eardley Norton (with him Messrs. T. R. Venkatrama Sastriar and S. Varadachariar), for the Appellant.—The plaintiff having abandoned his contention that the Palayam was inalienable by the custom of the family, the only question is, whether it was alienable by reason of its having been impressed with Military and Police services. Even if such conditions existed originally, the services were abolished by Regulation XXV of 1802 and by the disarmament proclamations, Exhibits XXVI and XXVI (a) in the case. The Peishcush was settled in 1804 on the basis of the Permanent Settlement. The sanad, however, was not issued, but that is not conclusive of the retention of the services. It is only evidence of enfranchisement which was effected virtually by the Regulation.

Though it is an unsettled Palayam till the issue of a sanad, the estate is liable for the debts of the holder. In Arbuthnott v. Oolaguppa Chetty (1) an unsettled Palayam was held liable for debts contracted by a Poligar in the hands of his successor. It follows, therefore, that an unsettled Paliyam is alienable.

No appreciable services of a Military nature were rendered by the Kannivadi Zamindar after the establishment of British rule, especially after the Permanent Settlement Regulation. The Police services had become obsolete. Fifth Report, pages 101 and 102, Regulation XI of 1816, sections 38 and 39 and Madras Act III of 1905.

There was no differentiating feature in regard to services rendered by the Zamindar. They do not relate to the land and only pertain to the duties of citizens generally under the Criminal Law.

In 1905 the sanad was issued under Regulation XXV of 1802 by which the services were abolished. Plaintiff's claim, therefore, to sue as an office-holder, is not maintainable. Rudhabai v. Anantrar Bhagvant (2).

A holder of an office has a qualified power of alienation. The reported decisions do not go beyond that. The alienations by the father are in the nature of antecedent debts and are binding on the son.

The suit is barred. Plaintiff's father was dispossessed in 1900 and the suit should have been brought within 12 years of that date. Assuming that the mortgagor was a life-tenant, still he represented the estate. He was certainly entitled to impeach the transaction as his interest was only spes successionis. Ramasami Naik v. Ramasamy Chetti (3), Sham Sundar Lal v. Achhan Kunwar (4) and Kunjaru Venkatramanayya v. Dejappa Konde (5).

The Hon'ble Mr. S. Srinivasa Aiyangar, Advocate General, (with him Mr. A. Krishnaswami Aiyar), for the Respondents.—Military and Police services were attached to the grant of this Palayam. Being a service tenure, the estate could not be alienated beyond the lifetime of the holder. That is an incident irrespective of Statute. That is the common law of India. The Military services continued to be rendered even after the Permanent Settlement. Apart from Statute, Military service imports impartibility and inalienability except for the holder's lifetime. The cessation of service or the enhancement of the Peishoush does not affect these incidents. The effect of the disarming proclamation was only to suspend the service, but the services were not released except by the issue of a sanad. The sanad fixes the Peishoush payable finally and, till that is done, the old tenure continues, Kachi Yuva Ringappa Kalakka Thola Udayar v. Kachi Kalyana Ringappa Kalakka Thola Udayar (6). The estate continues to be inalienable till the tenure is formally commuted. Exhibit 3 by which the Peishoush was fixed, was only a temporary arrangement. Nelson's Madura Manual, Part IV, pages 20, 21.

Military service imports inalienability. All service tenures import the same. Minakshisundaram Pillai v. Chockalinga Royer (7), Muppidi Papaya v. Ramana (8), *Pakkiam Pillay v. Bukronath Singh v. Nilmoni Singh (19) and Beresford v. Ramasubba (20).

An unsettled Palayam, though hereditary, is not alienable beyond the holder's life-time. In Radhabai v. Anantrav Bhagvant (2), West, J., observed that the tenure continues even if the services had become obsolete.

Regulation XXV of 1802 applies to proprietors who had obtained a sanad by virtue of the Regulation. The Regulation is applicable only to such cases. Where the sanad was not issued, Police services continued to exist. Narayana v. Chengalamm (21), Secretary of State v. Rajah of Venkatagiri (22), Muttu Vaduganadha Tevar v. Dora Singha Tevar (23). In Collector of Trichinopoly v. Lekkamani and Oolagappa Chetty v. Arbuthnot (24), all that the Privy Council laid down was that proprietary right, i.e., ownership might exist even where no sanad was granted.

The enhancement of Peishcush has nothing to do with the nature of the tenure. An alienation void in its inception, cannot be validated by a subsequent sanad. Radhabai v. Anantrav Bhagvant (2) was wrongly decided. Padapa v. Swamirao Shrinivas (25), Kalu Narayan Kulkarni v. Hanmapa (26), Gangabai v. Basvant Ballappa (27) and Vaddadi Sannamma v. Koduganti Radhabhai (28).

No question of limitation arises. Plaintiff's father was personally liable under the mortgage decree. He did not oppose the application for a decree absolute. He could not have sued for possession. The plaintiff could sue at any time within 12 years of his succession.

of January 1918, and having stood over for consideration till this day, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from the decree of the District Judge of Madura in a suit brought by the plaintiff as heir of the late Zemindar of Kannivadi to recover the Zemindari from the 1st defendant, the Midnapore Zemindari Company, and the 2nd defendant claiming under it. The defendant Company, acquired the Zemindari for more than thirteen lakhs of rupees from the Liquidator of the Commercial Bank of India, which in December 1895 had advanced money on a mortgage to which the plaintiff's grandfather the then Zemindar and his son the plaintiff's father were parties, and had subsequently obtained a consent decree for sale, and brought the Zemindari to sale and purchased it after the death of the plaintiff's grandfather and the succession of his father to the estate. At the date of the Court sale in 1900 the Zemindari was an unsettled Palayam, but in 1905 the Bank succeeded in obtaining a permanent sanad under Regulation XXV of 1802 at the same Peishcush as had been paid without alteration for more than a hundred years.

The ground on which the plaintiff has succeeded in the lower Court in recovering the Zemindari from the transferees of the auction-purchaser, is that at the dates of the mortgage and the mortgage decree and of the sale thereunder, which were prior to the issue of the permanent sanad of 1905, the Zemindari was held on the tenure of rendering Military and Police service as well as of paying the Peishcush demanded; and that in these circumstances it was inalienable by the plaintiff's grandfather and his father after him for more than the terms of their respective lives. These contentions the District Judge has accepted. At the hearing of the appeal the learned Advocate General raised the further contention that the Zemindari was made inalienable by the provisions of Regulation VI of 1831.

The appellants did not admit that such services, if they existed, would render the Zemindari inalienable, and contended that even if this were so, this defect in the Bank's title was cured by the grant of the sanad to them in 1905 which admittedly put an end to such services if they were then in existence, and rendered the Zemindari freely alienable. Their main case, however, was that in 1895 the date of the mortgage to the Bank and afterwards the Zemindari was not held on any conditions of Military or Police service. As regards Military service they contended that, when after the cession of Dindigal to the Company by Tippoo in 1792, the then Poligar who had been expelled by Tippoo for failure to pay the Peishcush imposed upon him, was restored by the Company, the incident of Military service was suppressed by the Company in accordance with its settled policy as a necessary preliminary to the introduction of settled Government. As regards the Police or Kaval duties, they admitted that such duties were at first required of the Palayagar by the annual sanads issued to him by the Collector of Dindigal of which several from 1796 to 1804 have been exhibited, but they contended that in accordance with the provisions of section 5 of Regulation XXV of 1802 and the policy declared therein, this Police or Kaval service was abolished before 1812 and referred to the Fifth Report and Regulation XI of 1816. They contended that the Peishcush was permanently settled at the beginning of the last century, and that the delay in issuing permanent sanads in the case of this and some other Palayams was due to other causes and without any idea of claiming Military and Police services from them. As regards the alienability of such unsettled Palayams, they relied upon the decision of the Judicial Committee, in the Gundamanaikanoor's case [Oolagappa Chetty v. Arbutnot and Collector of Trichinopoly v. Lekkamani (24)], not only that such Palayams were hereditary but that debts incurred by the holder for the time being, were binding on the Palayam in the hands of his successors, which could not be the case if they were inalienable except for the lifetime of the holder for the time being. The present contention they contended, was an afterthought. The Zemindari after being held under Government management was restored to the Zemindar in 1843 on payment of a sum of money for arrears which he had to borrow. To discharge this and other indebtedness of his predecessors one of the Zemindars in 1861 granted a thirty years' lease of the Zemindari which was in the nature of a usufruc-tuary mortgage. His successor obtained from this Court a decree in the nature of a redemption decree, and recovered the Zemindari by paying off the sum payable to the lessees under the decree in respect of advances made by him to discharge the indebtedness of the estate. The mortgage to the Commercial Bank in 1895 was in respect of the indebtedness incurred by the Zemindar in redeeming the Zemindari. That it was regarded as binding on the Zemindari was shown from the fact that the next heir, the plaintiff's father, joined in the mortgage and consented to the decree for sale.

As regards the inalienability of lands held on service tenure, it is held in India that, even apart from Statute, they are inalienable beyond the lifetime of the holder, Mayne, section 338, Muppidi Papaya v. Ramana (8), Pakkiam Pillay v. Seetharama Vadhyar (9) and we must so hold. The learned Advocate-General also relied upon the statutory prohibition against the alienation of service lands contained in Regulation VI of 1831, but as will be pointed out later, the general statutory prohibition was repealed before the date of the alienations now in question by Madras Act III of 1895, and the limited prohibition contained in that enactment does not affect the present case. The further contention that the subsequent enfranchisement of the land from service, as by the issue of the sanad of 1905 in this case, would validate alienations previously made, is supported by certain observations of West, J., which appear to have been made obiter, in Radhabai v. Anantrav Bhagvant (2) but is opposed to the recent decision of a Full Bench of this Court in Vaddadi Sannamma v. Koduganti Radhabhai (28) by which we are bound, and also to an express decision of the Privy Council in Padapa v. Swamirao (25) to which our attention was drawn by the learned Advocate-General. This contention of the appellant must, therefore, be rejected.

The further contention that, assuming the Zemindari to have been held at first under the Company on service tenure, the abolition of these services would render it alienable, is supported by the judgment of West, J., in the case already referred to in which Sargent, C. J., and two other learned Judges of the Bombay Court concurred. The learned Judge observed in Radhabai v. Anantrav Bhagvant (2): "So long as lands are assigned by the sovereign to the support of a public office, or the land tax payable on lands is remitted in consideration of services to be performed by a particular family or line of holders, the lands are according to the principles of the Hindu Law and the customary law of the country, incapable of an alienation or disposal, such as to divert them or the proceeds of them, from the intended purpose—Ravlopirav v. Balant-rav Venkatesh (29). This principle has been recognized in many decisions—Musam-mat Kustoora Koomarec v. Monohur Deo (30).

MIDNAPORE ZEMINDARI COMPANY, LTD. v. MALAYANDO APPAYASAMI NAICKER.

* * * * * When an estate is freed from its connection with a public office, the reason arising from that connection for the preservation of the estate, intact and unencumbered, necessarily fails. There is not in the lands themselves, according to Hindu Law, any inherent quality limiting them to special kinds of ownership and devolution. They become subject to the ordinary laws of descent and disposal, just as where a particular custom concerning them has been abandoned; or they have passed into a family not subject to the custom."

It has been held in some later cases that in this case the learned Judges were under a misapprehension as to the service in question in that case having been abolished, but the principle laid down in the above passage was not questioned in any of these cases, nor were we referred to any authority the other way. We entirely agree with the decision of the Bombay Court on this point and have decided to follow it. It is, moreover, the principle to which the Legislature has given effect in section 8 of Regulation XXV of 1802.

In the Naraguntty case [Naraguntty Iutchmeedavamah v. Vengama Naidoo (31)], the Judicial Committee accepted the description of Palayagars in Wilson's Glossary as having been originally petty chieftains occupying usually tracts of hill or forest, subject to pay tribute and service to the paramount power, but seldom paying either, and more or less independent; but as having, at present, since the subjugation of the country, by the East India Company, subsided into peaceable land-holders. There can be no doubt that Kannivadi was a Palayam of this nature. Dindigal, in which it is situated, had formed part of the dominions of Hyder and Tippoo for sometime when it was ceded to the Company by the Treaty of Seringapatam in 1792. At that time the Palayagar was not in possession, having been expelled by Tippoo for failure to pay the revenue demanded from him. The Company restored the Palayam to him; and the first question for consideration, is on what terms this was done. The report of the Board of Revenue, D16, of January 1795 shows that the precise terms on which the restored Dindigal Palayagars were to hold their Palayams, had not then been settled, and that it was proposed to exact certain Kaval or Police services from them which were then necessary for the preservation of order. The Board transmitted a draft sanad defining the position of the restored Palayagars. The annual sanads subsequently issued for some years no doubt follow this draft sanad Exhibit E for 1796, E2 for 1797, E1 for 1800, E4 the corresponding Muchilika for 1801, and E3, the Muchilika for 1803. There can scarcely be any doubt that a similar sanad was issued for 1795 and the intervening years for which no sanad is forthcoming, and these sanads may be taken as containing the conditions which the restored Palayagars were required to observe. Paragraphs 1 to 5 deal with the payment of tribute, and the rendering of Kaval services. Paragraph 6 is important as showing that the Government was already impressed with the necessity of suppressing the Military service of the Palayagars as a first condition of the introduction of orderly Government. It provides that the Palayagar is to render an account of the number of armed men in the Palayam and to abide by the orders of the Government as regards the dismissal of such of them as may appear unnecessary for the performance of the duties of the Palayam, and proceeds: "Since it is the duty of the Circar to protect the country from foreign enemies, you are only to take a few of the inhabitants of the Palayam into your service." We have revised the translation as the result of the discussion during the argument. The Palayagar was again enjoined not to take up arms "because the Company's troops have been specifically appointed for that purpose." Any breach of the conditions was to involve forfeiture. Except as to the amount of the Peishoush, the terms continued the same down to 1803 (Exhibit E3) after which there is no evidence of any exchange of sanads and Muchilikas.

Exhibit XXVI of 2nd of October 1799 is a proclamation by Major Bannerman, addressed to the inhabitants of the Tinnevelly Palayams after the rebellion of the Tinnevelly Palayagars, ordering the surrender of arms and threatening those who retained them, with death. In their Revenue Letter to Fort Saint George of 11th February 1881 (Fifth Report, page 51, Edition of Higginbotham) the Court of Directors sanctioned the gradual introduction of the Permanent Settlement into Madras, but laid down, page 53, that it was of first importance that "all subordinate Military establishments should be annihilated within the limits, subject to the dominion of the Company," and observed that this was so incontrovertible as to preclude all expectations to be derived from an attempt to introduce a permanent system of land revenue or the exercise of a regular judicial authority till this essential preliminary was secured. In conformity with these instructions, Lord Clive on 1st December 1801 issued a proclamation addressed to the Palayagars, Sherogars and inhabitants of the Southern Provinces announcing the determination of the Government to suppress the use and exercise of all weapons of offence without the authority of the British Government. The proclamation went on: "The Military service heretofore rendered by the Palayagars and Sherogars having been suppressed, and the Company having in consequence charged itself with the protection and defence of the Palayagar countries, the possession of fire arms and weapons of offence has manifestly become unnecessary to the safety of the people." General disarmament was, therefore, enjoined, but the Palayagars and Zemindars were permitted "to retain a certain number of persons carrying pikes for the purpose of maintaining the pomp and state heretofore attached to the persons of the Palayagars," but the number was to be fixed and the pikes issued to them stamped and registered. The proclamation concluded by announcing to the Palayagars, "the intention to establish a permanent assessment of revenue on the lands of the Palayams upon the principles of Zemindari tenure, which assessment being once fixed, shall be liable to no change in any time to come, that the Palayagars becoming by these means Zemindars of their hereditary estates will be exempted from all Military service, and that the possessions of their ancestors will be secured to them under the operation of limited and defined laws, etc." The District Judge has read the concluding paragraph, which was merely an announcement of the policy declared in the despatch from the Court of Directors, as limiting the announcement earlier in the proclamation that the Military service hitherto rendered by the Palayagars and Sherogars had been suppressed, and he has held that the intention of the proclamation as a whole was that their Military service was to continue until the issue to them of permanent sanads. Reading the proclamation as a whole and in the light of the despatch from the Court of Directors, we think it is clear that the suppression of Military service was intended to be unconditional.

It has, however, been contended that Military service was exacted from the Zemindar even after the proclamation, and as much importance was attached by the District Judge to the documents exhibited by the plaintiffs to show this, Exhibits D, E, F, G series, it is necessary to refer to them in some details. Exhibits D to D3 (b) are extracts from the Dindigal Diary kept by the successive Collectors. The other Exhibits of importance in this connection are letters written by or to this Palayagar of Kannivadi relating to the events mentioned in the Diary. The District Judge relies on these to show that after the British occupation, Military services were being rendered. Most of these Exhibits relate to the period anterior to 1801, and in many cases relate only to Police duties. Among the latter duties may be instanced the attempts made to seize an outlaw, named Tombu Gour for whose arrest a reward had been offered, referred to in Exhibit D3 (a) under dates September 25th, December 16th, 1796 and January 10th, 1797; and the Collector's warning on June 10th, 1795 to the Palayagar in Exhibit D, which the Palayagar acknowledged in D4 on July 4th, 1795, against harbouring a rebel, named Gopaya Naick; and the Assistant Collector's inayatnamuk, Exhibit D3, dated July 25th, 1799, to the Palayagar directing him to seize some marauders, named Pujari Naick and Alwar Pillay whom the Tahsildar had been endeavouring to capture by placing a guard of peons at the entrance of the Kannivadi District, as appears from the entry of January 18th, 1799, in Exhibit D2. The Assistant Collector's order of July 25th was acknowledged next day by the Palayagar in Exhibit D7, in which he repudiates the idea that he has been friendly with these marauders, and on January 19th in Exhibit D2 he promises the Collector not to assist them.

The Collector's directions to make good property stolen by thieves belonging to his estate in the entries in Exhibit D3 (a) of November 4th, 1796, of March 4th and 7th, April 16th, and September 6th, 1797, and in Exhibit D3 (b) under dates August 29th, September 18th and October 30th, 1797, and in Exhibit D1 under date of June 27th, 1796, merely indicate that the Kaval system, according to which Kavalgars or watchmen are held responsible for tracing the whereabouts of stolen jewels, etc., and, if they fail, are themselves required to make good the value of such articles, existed in those early times. In those days it appears from the entries of April 4th and 5th, 1797 of Exhibit D3 (a), from the entry of July 21st, 1798, of Exhibit D3, and from D16 that there was a Kaval fund for remunerating Kavalgars. This fund is stated in Exhibit D3 (a) to be quite unconnected with the Peishcush or tribute payable in 'Kists' (or instalments) by the Palayagar for his Palayam and it appears from Exhibit D16 that it was a fund raised by contributions of 'watching fees' paid by the subjects of the Crown into the hands of the Palayagars who were held responsible for its administration. This resembles the present day system under which village Kavalgars or watchmen are appointed by the villagers to watch their crops and other property, and every ryot contributes at the time of harvest a few measures of grain from his stock at the threshing floor for the remuneration of the Kavalgars for the current year. If the Zemindar held any lands on condition of rendering Kaval service, they must have been resumed before 1812, as will be shown later.

Again we find the Collector in Exhibit D2 on January 9th, 1799, instructing the Palayagar to arrest any Europeans (presumably deserters from the East India Company's British troops) found straying more than two miles from camp without a passport. Again in Exhibit D17 in October 1797 the Palayagar of Kannivadi is stated to have promised his assistance to the Collector against the Palayagar of Komaravadi, a deposed Palayagar who had escaped from confinement at Vellore. The nature of the assistance to be rendered is not mentioned in this Exhibit, but from Exhibit D3 (b) it appears that he and four or five other Palayagars were to come with their respective men and act as an escort of "Old Lucki Lakshmana Naick" in conducting him from Komaravadi as soon as the arrest of this escaped prisoner was effected.

So much for the records relating to the period before the formal abolition of Military duty.

The District Judge has concluded from certain Exhibits of a later date than 1801 that Military assistance was rendered by this Palayagar during the fighting by the Company's army against Virupakshi Naick, and against the dumb boy called Panchalakurichi Oomayana who led an insurrection against Government, and also in the rebellion of Lakshmana Naicken, in the time of Collectors Hurdis and Parish in 1803 and 1804.

An account of the part played by the Kannivadi Palayagar in connection with the fighting that took place on those occasions, is given in Exhibits F and G. Both of these records proceed from interested sources. Exhibit F is a petition signed by the Zemindar of Kannivadi in 1837 and presented to the Board of Revenue, in which he appealed for the restoration of his Palayam which had been kept under the management of Government and Exhibit G is a genealogical history of the family written by another member of the family. It was to the interest of the writers of these documents to magnify the meritorious services rendered by various

Palayagars of Kannivadi to Government from time to time. G1, G2, G4, G5, G6, G7, and G8 are records similar to G.

Exhibits G and G7 mention the fact that the Palayagar's men were then in 1804 without arms (no doubt in pursuance of Government's declared policy), and thus when they accompanied the Company's sepoys in pursuit of Lakshmana Naicken, it was necessary for Mr. Parish to arm 20 of them before they could be of any assistance to him. At the same time the work that they were expected to perform, seems to have been that of guarding roads . . . and passes, acting as spies of the enemies' movements and as guides to the British troops through the forest tracks and hill passes. They could not fight because they had no arms. A more reliable account of what happened, is to be found in the contemporary document, Exhibit E5, of July 1st, 1804, in which it is stated that 15 men from the Kannivadi Palayagar people were sent as guides to "Captain Hamilton's army because they knew the different routes." In Exhibit D13 the Palayagar of Kannivadi reports in June 1804 to Mr. Parish that he had despatched a spy to bring intelligence regarding the rebels. It would be absurd to treat this Palayam, as a feudal fief held on condition of rendering Military service simply because the holder on one or two occasions assisted the intelligence branch of the Company's regular army.

The allusions in Exhibits D11 and D12 to "our troops" and "our detachment" in the account of the engagement with Lakshmana Naicken only show in our opinion that the Kannivadi men identified their cause with the cause of the Government, and we think that the description of fighting refers to the doings of the Company's soldiers, and does not mean that any Military establishments of the Palayagar were employed in the actual fighting.

Exhibits D10, E7, E8, E13, refer to the supply of bamboos to be paid, for the use of the British troops (evidently in order to provide them and their officers with quarters). Exhibit E6 relates to the supply of cattle (probably for feeding the troops). It was regarded as the duty of the whole population to furnish the necessary supplies against payment to the officers of Government and still more to its armed forces in the field. The practice of making such requisitions for the supply of touring officers, is not yet altogether obsolete. The fact that in the years 1803 and 1804 such requisitions were made and complied with in a few instances, does not, in our opinion, show that the Palayam continued to be held on condition of rendering Military service and still less that it was so held at the time of the alienations now in question nearly a hundred years later.

We have next to deal with the well-known Regulation XXV of 1802 on which the Permanent Settlement rests in this Presidency so far as it affects the present case. It was held by the Judicial Committee in Collector of Trichinopoly v. Lekkaman and Oolagappa Chetty v. Arbuthnot (24) to be clear "that the affirmative words of the second section 'that in consequence of the assessment, the proprietary right of the soil shall become vested in the Zemindars,' etc., did not either give to, or take away from, the former owners of lands not permanently assessed, any right which they then had. It merely vested in all Zemindars an hereditary right at a fixed revenue upon the conclusion of the Permanent Settlement with them. It is a maxim that affirmative words in a Statute without any negative expressed or implied, do not take away an existing right". This interpretation is strongly supported by the title of the Regulation which is "For declaring the proprietary right of lands to be vested in individual persons, and for defining the rights of such persons, under a permanent assessment of the land revenue". As regards the somewhat ambiguous preamble, their Lordships observed that it did not assert a right, on the part of Government to deprive or dispossess Zemindars in their lifetime, or their heirs after their deaths, for the purpose of transferring their rights to Government, or to new holders at the will of Government, independent of any considerations connected with the realization of revenue. They then proceeded to explain the sweeping statement in the preamble to Regulation XXXI of 1802 that the ruling power had in conformity to the ancient usage of the country constantly reserved to itself and had exercised the actual proprietary right of lands of every description, and that consistently with this principle, all alienations of land, except by the consent of the ruling power, are violations of that right, and observed that "the words 'alienations of land' referred not to mere transfers from one proprietor to another, but to grants for holding lands exempt from the payment of revenue". Finally their Lordships observed: "There is no difference in this respect (its hereditary character) between a Palayam and an ordinary Zemindari. The only difference between a Palayam or Zemindari which is permanently settled and one that is not, is that, in the former, the Government is precluded for ever from raising the revenue; and in the latter, the Government may or may not have that power." The latter words appear to mean that Government may in a particular case have precluded itself from raising the revenue, even though it has not issued a permanent sanad.

Applying these principles, their Lordships proceeded to deal with the connected case of Collector of Trichinopoly v. Lekkamani and Oolagappa Chetty v. Arbuthnot (24). The judgment is appended to the judgment in Marungapuri case which follows Collector of Trichinopoly v. Lekkamani and Oolagappa Chetty v. Arbuthnot (24). In the former case, a Razinamah was entered into in the time of the late Zemindar making the Zemindari liable for debts incurred by him. It having been held that the Razinamah could not be enforced except by suit, a suit was instituted but discontinued on the death of the Zemindar by order of the Court which directed a fresh suit to be brought against the heir when nominated. A suit was accordingly brought against the minor Zemindar in which it was claimed that the revenues and corpus were equally answerable (page 270*). The Civil Judge held the debt binding on the revenues of the Zemindari in the hands of the successors and decreed the claim to that extent. The High Court reversed this decision, and held that, as the Palayam in question was only held on life-tenure, it could not be made liable in the hands of the son for the debts incurred by the father. The Judicial Committee held that prima facie the Palayam was hereditary, and that being so, apparently as a matter of course, they held it liable in the hands of the son for the father's debts. If the revenues are liable in the hands of succeeding Zemindars, that is equivalent to saying that the corpus is liable and the decision would be conclusive of the present case, but for the fact that the point that the Palayam was inalienable by reason of its owing Military and Police service, was not raised. It is, however, very significant that it was not raised in that case though the defendant on the record was Mr. Arbuthnot, the Collector of Madura who represented the minor Zemindar as agent of the Court of Wards and would have been likely to know if the holders of unsettled Palayams were liable to render any services such as to render their estates inalienable and an exception to the general rule as to the "free liberty" of proprietors of land to make alienations which is conferred by section 8 of the Regulation. This contention has not been raised in any other case before the present, and this consideration adds to the already heavy burden on the plaintiff of showing the existence of the bar to alienation on which he relies.

The question of the continuing liability of the Palayagar for Police service may now be dealt with in connection with the provisions of section 5 of the Regulation. These provisions show a general intention to release land-holders from the performance of Police services except in special cases to be dealt with in the permanent sanad when issued and to resume all lands and rusums granted for Police service. The first part of section 5 provides as follows: "The Government having charged itself generally with the maintenance and support of such establishments as may be requisite in the several provinces, cities and towns for the better keeping of the Police, no lands shall be considered, as heretofore, to be holden on the condition of performing Police duties, unless the same shall be specially provided for in the sanad-i-milkiyat-i-istimrar." With this must be read section 15, which provides that Zemindars shall aid and assist the officers of Government in apprehending and securing offenders of all descriptions, and they shall inquire and give notice to the Magistrates of robbers or other disturbers of the public peace who may be found, or who may seek refuge in their Zemindaris, an obligation which was not regarded as incompatible with the power of alienation, and is very similar to that imposed on people generally and land-owners in particular by

MIDNAPORE ZEMINDARI COMPANY, LTD. v. MALAYANDI APPAYASAMI NAICKER.

Chapter IV of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Read literally section 5 operated to release all lands forthwith from the condition of rendering Police service. If this be too strict a construction, it at least shows that it was the policy of the Government to release them, and there is nothing in the Regulation to prevent effect being given to that intention without the grant of a permanent sanad. Police services had been required in this case by the annual sanads of which E3 for Fasli 1213, 1803-4 is the last. The issue of these sanads appears to have been discontinued and there is no evidence of any Police service being demanded after 1804. Admittedly Police service was as a rule abolished in all the Palayams and Zemindaris that received permanent sanads; and as will be seen, the fact that no permanent sanad was issued in the case, had nothing to do with the question of Police service. It appears from the Fifth Report that the Kaval lands or lands granted for the discharge of Kaval duties which were quite different from those which the officers of an organized Police force are expected to perform, had been resumed before 1812, but as regards Madras, the Report does not deal with the question of Police. A Police force under officers called Darogas had been introduced but did not work well, and, in accordance with the recommendations of Sir Thomas Munro, the Court of Directors issued instructions which were embodied in Regulation XI of 1816. By this measure recourse was had to the indigenous Police system of the country. Under that system, Police as well as revenue duties had been imposed on the village headman, who was responsible as to both to the Zemindar or Palayagar where there was one. By the Regulation, the headman as regards Police duties, was made responsible to the Tahsildar or Indian Magistrate of the locality, and Zemindars were deprived of all Police powers except in so far as any of the duties of the Tahsildar might be conferred upon particular Zemindars by the Government under section 39. This the Court of Directors considered should only be done in particular cases of approved respectability and willingness to co-operate in promoting the views of the Government. Section 39 was repealed by Act XVII of 1862 as having become obsolete and thus vanished the last trace of the Police powers formerly vested in the Zemindar as head of his district. The Police Act XXIV of 1859, which took away the control of the Police from the Tahsildars and created a separate Police Department, defined Police, in section 1 as including 'general' and village Police, Cuttoobadies, Kavalgars, and all other persons who exercise any Police functions throughout the Madras Presidency. This was before the repeal of section 39 of Regulation XI of 1816, and there is no suggestion that the Kannivadi Zemindars were ever regarded as coming within this definition of Police. Be this as it may, this definition of Police was repealed by section 2 (2) of Madras Act III of 1895, which substituted the following definition. "The word Police shall include all persons appointed under this Act," thus excluding Cuttoobadies, Kavalgars, etc., whose Police functions had become obsolete. The same enactment also repealed Regulation VI of 1831 which made lands held on service tenure, inalienable, and only re-enacted the provision against the alienation as regards village officers, except in the Scheduled Districts. In the Scheduled Districts the prohibition against alienation was continued, not only as regards the emoluments of village officers, but also as regards "other emoluments granted or continued in remuneration for the performance of duties connected with the collection of the revenue or the maintenance of order." In the rest of the Presidency, the Legislature evidently thought that village offices were the only offices the emoluments of which required to be protected from alienation. This enactment, which came into force before the alienation now in question, goes far to show that at the date of that alienation, the services formerly required of the Palayagars and others had become entirely obsolete and that there was no longer any sufficient reason for prohibiting the alienation of their lands on the grounds of public policy.

It is not questioned that the issue of permanent sanads under Regulation XXV in the terms in which they were issued, released the grantees from conditions of Police service and there is no reason to suppose that the delay in issuing the sanads in this and other cases, was due to any design of retaining the right to Police services which were regarded as a thing to be got rid of as quickly as possible. In this connection an observation in Chauki Gounden v. Venkataramanier (32) which was referred to with approval by Scotland, C.J., in Lekkamani v. Sri-mat Ranga Kristna Muttu Vira Puchaya Naikar (33) may be cited again, and with greater force now that the assumption that Palayagars had only life-estates, has been displaced. "The Palayagar of an unsettled Palayam may, according to the generally received theory as to his rights, have only an estate for life in his Palayam; but for such an estate as he has, his relation to the Government on the one side and to the occupiers of lands within his Palayam on the other side, resembles that of a Zemindar." There is really no reason now why an unsettled Palayam should be inalienable any more than a settled one.

As regards the revenue history of this particular Palayam, in 1796, a commission reported that these Poligars should be allowed personally to retain one-third of the computed value of their land. Mr. Hurdis, who was Collector from September 1796 to December 1803, was directed to carry out a field survey and to present to the Board of Revenue a detailed report such as would enable them to arrange a Permanent Settlement (Nelson Manual Part 4, page 31). Unfortunately, as Mr. Nelson observes, he overestimated the capabilities of the District and the Permanent Settlement of Dindigal introduced on the basis of this survey had to be abandoned. Exhibit XXVI 1 (b) shows the total beriz of the Kannivadi Palayam as estimated by Mr. Hurdis. Of this the Palayagar was allowed as before provisionally to retain 30 per cent. leaving a Peishcush of Pagodas 10,897 or Rs. 38, 39 14-2 payable to Government. This Peishcush did not represent 30 per cent. of the real income, or anything like it, and owing to the defective nature of Mr. Hurdis's assessment and possibly other reasons, a permanent sanad was not issued to this and other Palayagars on the basis of his assessment. From 1816 to 1843 in consequence of the Palayagar's inability to pay the Peishcush, Government took the Palayam under its own management and allowed him the 10 per cent. on the net collections. In 1843 the Palayam was restored to the Palayagar. Exhibit XXVI (c). This Muchilika which was then taken from him, appears to proceed upon the footing that all he was liable to do, was to pay the Peishcush demanded of him and that in default of payment the Palayam was liable to be sold. It certainly goes to show that no condition of Military or Police service was recognised as existing at that time. Exhibits XXIIg and XXIIh, dated 9th July 1843 are mortgages of the Zemindari to pay previous debts and save the Zemindari from annexation by Government. Exhibit XXIII is a lease for 30 years, dated 20th July 1861 in discharge of debts which are stated to have been contracted by the Zemindar himself, his father and his ancestors. Exhibit H series show that negotiations went on for some years after this as to the grant of a permanent sanad and that Government were prepared to grant a permanent sanad without increasing the Peishcush, but that this intention was not carried into effect in the supposed interest of the Zemindar himself. Exhibit H5. Nothing is to be found about any Military or Police service in this correspondence. In 1881 on the death of the Zemindar Bangaru, who had executed the lease of 1861, his brother who succeeded, brought a suit to recover the Zemindari from the lessee. In his plaint he raised the contention that the alienations of his predecessors were not binding on the estate in his hands, and this was the subject of the fourth issue. It was not, however, suggested that the inalienability depended in any way on the duty of rendering Military and Police service. The District Judge held that the lease was not binding on the plaintiff as a lease but was binding on him as a mortgage, and gave a decree for redemption. Before the High Court, the Zemindar does not seem to have pressed the appeal on the ground that the alienations by his predecessors were not binding upon him. Probably the decision of the Privy Council in Collector of Trichinopoly v. Lekkamani and Olagappa Chetty v. Arbuthnot (24) was held conclusive on this question. In the High Court the controversy appears to have been as to the amount of the mortgage debt. In connection with this litigation and the subsequent redemption, the Zemindar contracted usufructuary mortgages, Exhibits 7, 3, 5, 9, 6, 7a, 4, 22 series 8 and 10, and lastly a consolidating mortgage Exhibit 2 on 14th December 1895 and a supplementary mortgage Exhibit 18, dated 10th February 1898. Exhibit 2, to which the then Zemindar and his son the father of the present plaintiff were parties, was for upwards of ten lakhs of rupees.

The Bank brought Original Suit No. 23 of 1897 on this mortgage and obtained a consent decree for sale against the Zemindar and his son on 16th August 1898, Exhibit XVI, by which the defendants were to pay Rs. 13,15,000 on or before 15th August 1900 and the estate was to be sold in default. The plaintiff's grandfather died on 16th July 1899. On 14th March 1900, the Bank applied for an order absolute for sale under section 89 of the Transfer of Property Act, and on 21st March 1900 the Court made the order as follows: "Defendant by Mr. Subramania Aiyar does not put forward any objection. Decree made absolute". The estate was subsequently sold and purchased by the Bank, who obtained a sanad in 1905, and then sold it to the present 1st defendant. The plaintiff's father died on 24th May 1911, and it was in the present suit instituted on 23rd July 1914, that the contention that the Zemindari was inalienable on account of the Zemindar's liability to render Military and Police services, was raised for the first time.

In our opinion this contention is only an ingenious afterthought. The liability of these unsettled Palayams for ancestral debts was treated by the Privy Council in Collector of Trichinopoly v. Lekkamani and Oolagappa Chetty v. Arbutnot (24) as necessarily following from the establishment of the hereditary nature of the estate. There are now no Police or Military services to be rendered. In this particular estate there have been continued alienations by way of mortgage which have been treated as binding by succeeding Zemindars. Though the contention that they were not binding, was raised in the litigation of 1881, this was not on the ground of any Military or Police service, and the contention was not pressed in the High Court. Lastly, the fact that the plaintiff's father was a party to the mortgage of 1895 and to the consent decree and did not object to the sale, shows that the alienable character of the Zemindari was fully recognised.

The learned Advocate-General has relied on certain decisions such as Narayana v. Chengamma (21) and Udayarpalayam case [Kachi Yuva Rangappa Kalakka Thola Udayar v. Kachi Kalayana Rangappa Kalakka Thola Udayar (6)] and Ramnad case (34) in which it was held that certain Zemindaris restored by British Government to the heirs of the former Zemindars were restored with the incident of impartibility which had originally attached to them in their character of petty chieftains rendering service to the paramount power, but these cases did not decide or proceed on the footing that any such services were still to be rendered; and, as those were cases in which a permanent sanad had been issued, it is clear that there were no such services in existence at the date of suit. He also relied on certain decisions as to Ghatwal tenures in Northern India, but in these cases the succession is not purely hereditary, and Government by the exercise of the right to choose the successor from and among the heirs, manifests its continued recognition of the office of Ghatwal even though the duties have become nominal. On a full consideration of the whole question, we are unable to agree with the District Judge, and have come to the conclusion that the Military and Police services for which the Zemindar was at one time liable, had been abolished long before the alienations in question, even though Government for quite other reasons had delayed the issue of a sanad under Regulation XXV of 1802 by which the Peishcush payable by him as a peaceable land-owner exempt from such services, would have been finally settled.

The only remaining question is whether the suit is barred on the ground that, when the suit was instituted, more than twelve years had elapsed from the time when the 1st defendant's vendor got into possession under their purchase at the Court auction. There can be no doubt that, assuming the estate of the Zemindar to be for life only as contended by the plaintiff, the Zemindar for the time being would ordinarily represent the estate as held in Radhabai v. Anantav Bhagvant (2) and numerous other cases, and that, therefore, time would have begun to run against the plaintiff's father from the date when the Bank got possession and the suit would be barred as more than twelve years had elapsed before it was instituted. The question, however, arises whether the plaintiff's father had not debarred himself from suing to recover possession and whether time did not begin to run only from the date of his death and plaintiff's succession. As has been already stated, the plaintiff's father joined in the mortgages of 1895 and consented to the decree being passed against him for the sale of the Zemindari and personally for the mortgage debt and did not object to the order for sale. At the date of the mortgage and the consent decree, he was only a reversioner with a spes successionis and had no power to alienate his interest in the Zemindari either by executing the mortgage or consenting to the decree, and these alienations did not take effect against him when he succeeded, as held in Ramasami Naik v. Ramasami Chetti (3), which is in accordance with a very recent decision of the Judicial Committee not yet reported*. At the date, however, of the application for the order for sale, which he did not oppose, the plaintiff's father had succeeded to the estate, and his life-interest in the Zemindari was liable to be attached and sold in execution of the consent decree in so far as it made him personally liable. If the consent decree had been for sale only, it may be that the sale would not have passed his life-interest even though he did not oppose the order for sale, but he was also personally liable on the decree and at the date of the application for the order for sale, he had no answer to an application for the attachment and sale of his life-interest.

*Since reported as Amrit Narayan Singh v. Ganga Singh, 44 Ind. Cas. 408; 7 L. W. 581; 23 M. L. T. 142; 22 C. W. N. 409; 27 C. L. J. 296; 34 M. L. J. 298; 4 P. L. W. 221; 16 A. L. J. 265; (1918) M. W. N. 306; 20 Bom. L. R. 546; 45 C. 592.—Ed.

in execution of the decree against him personally. In these circumstances, it may be that the sale was binding on his life-interest; and, if so, it is argued he was not in a position to sue for possession and that his successor had a fresh starting point. The starting point under Article 142 is the date of the dispossession or discontinuance. To avoid the bar, it would apparently be necessary to hold that the fact that the plaintiff's father had debarred himself from suing for possession, took the case, not only out of Article 142 but also out of Article 144, as the present plaintiff's father would appear to come within the word 'plaintiff' as used in that Article, and to make Article 120 applicable to the case. The starting point in that Article is, when the right to sue accrues, and there would be no difficulty in holding that the right to sue does not accrue until there is some one who can sue successfully. See Murray v. East India Company (35), Musurus Bey v. Gadban (36), and the recent decision of the Privy Council in Soona Mayana Kena Roona Meyappa Chetty v. Soona Navena Suppramanian Chetty (37) in the view we take of the other question, it is unnecessary to discuss or decide the point. In the result the appeal must be allowed and the suit dismissed with costs throughout.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL NO. 905 OF 1915.

April 5, 1918.

Present:—Sir Stanley Batchelor, Kt.,
Acting Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Marten.

DADOO BHAOO AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS

versus

DINKAR VISHNU APHALE—PLAINTIFF

—RESPONDENT.

Bombay Land Revenue Code (Act V of 1879), ss. 3 (20), 27—“Alienated village,” what is—Village in which the entire property in the soil has been granted, whether alienated.

In the definition of the word “alienated” in section 3 (20) of the Bombay Land Revenue Code the words “transferred in so far as the rights of Government to payment of the rent or land revenue are concerned,” prescribe a certain minimum requirement, and where that minimum requirement is satisfied, the definition also is satisfied, notwithstanding that the transfer may cover certain other interests over and above those contained in the minimum requirement. [p. 746, col. 2; p. 747, col. 1.]

DADOO BHAOO v. DINKAR VISHNU APHALE.

Where the Government has transferred to the grantee of a village not merely its own rights to receive the land revenue but the entire property in the soil, the village is an "alienated" one within the meaning of section 3 (20) of the Bombay Land Revenue Code and section 217 of the Code is applicable to it. [p. 747, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decision of the First Class Subordinate Judge, with Appellate powers at Satara, in Appeal No. 122 of 1913, reversing the decree passed by Second Class Subordinate Judge at Karad, in Civil Suit No. 1513 of 1910

Mr. Coyajee (with him Mr. S. S. Patkar), for the Appellant.

Mr. G. S. Rao, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

BACHELOR, ACTING C. J.—The suit out of which this appeal arises, was filed by an Inamdar to eject the defendants. One of his pleas was that the defendants Nos. 1 to 3 were his yearly tenants. The plaintiff's position as an Inamdar was conceded, but his claim to own the Mirasi or occupancy rights in these lands, was denied by the defendants, and the only question which we have to decide, is whether the plaintiff's claim to these Mirasi rights should be allowed.

The first Court held against the plaintiff upon this point, but that decree was reversed on appeal, and the present appeal is brought by the defendants Nos. 2 to 5. It seems clear that prior to 1880, the plaintiff's position as Inamdar was accepted, and gave rise to no disputes. But in 1880 the Survey Settlement was introduced into this village, and in the Settlement Register the present appellants were entered as the Khatedars. Since 1880 admittedly they have been cultivating the lands, paying only a sum equivalent to the annual assessment.

The contention for the defendants is that, by virtue of the provision of section 217 of the Bombay Land Revenue Code, the effect of the introduction of the Survey Settlement in 1880, was that thereafter the defendants had the same rights in respect of these lands in their occupation, as holders of land in unalien-ated villages had, and have, under the provisions of the Bombay Land Revenue Code.

It is not denied by Mr. Rao on behalf of the respondents that if section 217 is to be applied to the facts of this case, then the defendants' contention must prevail. But Mr. Rao urges that section 217 is not applicable to the present facts, because the village in question is not an alienated village within the meaning of that expression as it is defined in clause (20) of section 3 of the Bombay Land Revenue Code.

The sole question, therefore, for our determination in this appeal is whether the village is or is not an alienated village within the definition. The definition runs in these words: "alienated" means "transferred in so far as the rights of Government to payment of the rent or land revenue are concerned, wholly or partially to the ownership of any person." Now the fact which we have found for us here is that, by the grant of this village to the plaintiff's predecessor-in-title, there were transferred to him not merely the Government's rights to receive the land revenue, but the entire property in the soil. That being so, the learned Pleader for the respondents contends that the transfer was not such a transfer as is referred to in the definition, but was a transfer in excess of the definition.

The actual point before us was considered by my learned brother Beaman in Pandu v. Ramchandra Ganesh (1). The decision there being the decision of a single Judge is of course not binding upon us, but equally of course it is entitled to careful consideration at our hands. In that judgment my learned brother referred to the argument that in the definition of "alienated," the greater must include the less, and I must confess that I have never been able to escape from the weight of this argument. It appears to me that the words "transferred in so far as the rights of Government to payment of the rent or land revenue are concerned," prescribe a certain minimum requirement, and where that minimum requirement is satisfied, the definition also is satisfied, notwithstanding that the transfer may

Adapting the words of the definition to the facts of our present case, it seems to me strictly true to say that in the case of this village there were transferred to the plaintiff's predecessor the rights of Government to payment of the rent of land revenue. And I am myself unable to see how that statement becomes less true because over and above those rights, other interests were also conveyed. I cannot but think that if the object of the draftsman had been to exclude all those cases where the transfer involved other interests than those which I have described as the minimum requirement, he would have altered the phraseology of the clause, as, for instance, by the insertion of the word "only" after the words "in so far," or, better, by the addition of clear words expressly excluding the case where other and larger interests were transferred. It appears to me, therefore, on the best consideration that I can give to the actual words of the clause, that those words are in favour of the defendants' argument.

It may also be observed that the Land Revenue Code appears to recognise only two clauses of property of this description, namely, "alienated" and "unalienated." Unquestionably the village in this case is not an unalienated village. I think, therefore, that within the meaning of the Land Revenue Code it must be regarded as an alienated village. That that was the view of the Government itself, seems to be beyond all doubt, for, in 1880, as I have said, the Survey Settlement was introduced into this village under the provisions of section 216 of the Bombay Land Revenue Code as into an alienated village. It has not been suggested to us in argument that Government would have had any title or pretext for introducing the Survey Settlement into this village, except on the footing that the village was an alienated village within the definition in the Land Revenue Code. And though I feel the force of my brother Beaman's argument as to the scope and character of the Land Revenue Code, it may, I think, be fairly stated that the Code, whatever may have been its original intention, is not now confined to a scheme for regulating the rights of Government as against the agricultural payers of assessment. There are many sections of the Code which indicate a somewhat larger object, and among them I may notice sections 83, 86 and 88.

On these grounds, it appears to me that the weight of the argument is in favour of the view that this is an alienated village, notwithstanding that the whole property in the soil was granted by Government to the plaintiff's predecessor. If that is so, then admittedly section 217 applies to the case, and the decree under appeal must be reversed. I would, therefore, reverse that decree and restore the decree of the trial Judge with costs throughout.

MARTEN, J.—I agree. The question in this case is whether the suit lands are in an alienated village within the meaning of the Land Revenue Code. That in its turn depends on the definition of "alienated" in section 3, sub-section (20) of the Code which runs as follows: "Alienated" means transferred in so far as the rights of Government to payment of the rent or land revenue, are concerned, wholly or partially to the ownership of any person."

Now in fact in the present case the rights of Government to payment of land revenue have been transferred to the ownership of a person. Therefore, the definition has been satisfied in the present case, if one regards it as imposing a minimum requirement for "alienation" within the meaning of the Code.

But the rights of Government to the rent or to the soil itself have also been transferred. It is, accordingly, said by the respondents that the above is not the correct view of the definition, and that the intention of the Legislature is to impose not a minimum, but an absolute, requirement. The alienation must be of the land revenue neither more nor less. Consequently the definition must be read just as if the word "only" had been introduced into it so that it would run "in so far only as the rights of Government to payment, etc., are concerned." In my opinion, this view of the respondents as to the meaning of the definition is not correct. I think the definition in its ordinary language merely imposes a minimum requirement, and as that minimum requirement has been satisfied in the present case, it is immaterial that further rights in addition to the mere land-revenue rights were also granted.

It is, however, said that this is contrary to what the Government or the Legislature must be presumed to have intended. I think the best way of gathering those intentions, is to pay close attention to the exact language which is used. But supposing one goes outside the language of the Code, and sees what view Government has taken in practice, one finds that so far from Government thinking that it had no further interest in lands where it had granted the land revenue rights as well as the rights to the soil and that consequently the Code was not to apply to such lands, Government introduced in 1881 at the request of the Inamdar the Settlement Survey under the Code into this very village. Therefore, so far as the intention of Government (if not of the Legislature) can be ascertained, one sees in their acts that they applied, and thought they were entitled to apply, this Code to this particular village, and I think it is an obvious inference that they thought that this particular village was an alienated village within the meaning of the Code.

I think there is also some substance in what Mr. Coyajee has urged before us as to the use of the word "rent" or "land revenue." But I do not base my judgment on that. I rely, so far as the words of the Code are concerned, on the Code itself.

I think it is also noticeable that the plaintiff himself has acted as if the Code applied to this land, for he has put in force certain powers under the Code, or has applied to the Collector to put in force certain powers under the Code, which, as I understand the facts, could not be done unless the village was an alienated village within the meaning of the Code.

One may also observe that, as my Lord the Chief Justice has pointed out, one cannot say that the Code is merely confined to Government lands. At any rate, as a result of later amendments, we have the Record of Rights which applies to all lands. Possibly that point does not apply here, because the material date here is, I suppose, 1881. But as pointed out by Mr. Coyajee, there are certain other sections in the Act which would still apply to land in which the Government would not necessarily retain any rights.

As regards the case of Pandu v. Ramchandra Ganesh (1), I have given it my best consideration, but I think the learned Judge really took the same view, at any rate in the first instance, as we take of the words of the Act. As I read his judgment, he was only perhaps over-persuaded by the possible results that might follow from adopting what is, I think the literal interpretation of the Act. Personally I think it is safer to adopt a literal interpretation of the Act. And if we are really erring in thus ascertaining the intention of the Legislature, then it will be for the Legislature to make an appropriate amendment. If any such amendment is made, or even, if no such amendment is made, I hope the authorities may at some comparatively early date, see their way to have a re-enacting Code which collects in one single Act of the Legislature all those various amendments which have been made since 1879. It is now extremely embarrassing for the ordinary practitioner to try and find his way through these various Acts and amending Acts that have taken place over all these years. And one is almost bound to rely on some text-book which has done this work, which, in my opinion, is more properly done by a consolidating and amending Act. This is, I think, nonetheless necessary, because the Act seems to me to be a particularly difficult one to construe, at any rate, as regards some of its provisions.

I agree that this appeal must be allowed, and that the order of the trial Judge must be restored with costs throughout.

The words 'instrument in writing,' in section 130 of the Transfer of Property Act, do not mean a document couched in technical language or in any particular form. What is intended is that the transfer should be made in writing and it is sufficient if the intention of the creditor to transfer the debt due to him to the transferee, can be gathered from the writing. [p. 749, col. 2, p. 750, col. 1.]

After the date of the transfer, the transferee is the only person entitled to sue for the debt. [p. 750, col. 1.]

An assignment made in a statement of accounts by way of an entry is an assignment within the section [p. 750, col. 1.]

An assignment does not become invalid for want of consent of the original debtor or by reason of the absence of a novation of contract. [p. 750, col. 2.]

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Kumbakonam dated the 31st of August 1916, in Appeal Suit No. 5 of 1916, preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif of Tiruvalur, in Original Suit No. 275 of 1914.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. T. R. Ramachandra Aiyar (with him Mr. T. R. Krishnasami Aiyar), for the Appellants.—The transfer of the debt is contained in a mere entry in an account. The assignment of an actionable claim must be in a formal document signed by the transferor or his agent. A mere entry in an account book is not an instrument in writing.

In this case, the original debtor was not a party to the transfer. There is no novation or substitution of contract as contemplated by section 62 of the Contract Act.

Mr. T. V. Gopalaswami Mudaliar, for the Respondents.—The entry in the account book fulfils all the requirements of section 130 of the Transfer of Property Act. The assignment is in writing, the intention to transfer is clearly expressed and it is signed by the assignor. These are the only requisites for transfer of actionable claims. No particular form of transfer is prescribed by the section.

Section 130 of the Transfer of Property Act is not controlled by section 62 of the Contract Act. This is not a case in which a debtor substitutes a new contract for the old one. Section 130 deals with cases of transfer by the creditor to which the debtor need not be a party.

The second appeal coming on for hearing, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—There was a settlement of accounts between the plaintiff and the guardians of the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 and in that settlement a sum of Rs. 600 due from one Sambamoorthia Pillai, husband of the 3rd defendant, is alleged to have been assigned to the plaintiff by the guardians of defendants Nos. 1 and 2. The first question that arises, is whether there was such an assignment as is contemplated by section 130 of the Transfer of Property Act. There is no question but that the sum of Rs. 600 was in fact due from the 3rd defendant's husband to defendants Nos. 1 and 2. Section 130 (1), Transfer of Property Act says "The transfer of an actionable claim shall be effected only by the execution of an instrument in writing signed by the transferor or his duly authorised agent and shall be complete and effectual upon the execution of such instrument and thereupon all the rights and remedies of the transferor, whether by way of damages or otherwise, shall vest in the transferee, whether such notice of the transfer as is hereinafter provided be given or not." The instrument in writing which is put forward as an assignment in this case is in these words "By way of direction given to receive the principal of Rs. 600 and interest due by Kathoor Sambamoorthia Pillai Rs. 600." It is an entry signed by the guardians of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 in a statement of accounts, and it is argued that this is not an instrument in writing within the meaning of section 130, Transfer of Property Act. The learned Pleader for the 1st respondent has not cited to us any authority in support of the contention. The words "instrument in writing" do not seem to us to mean a document couched in technical language or in any particular form. All that is apparently intended is that the transfer should be made in writing. It is well established law that assignment of a chose in action does not require any particular form of conveyance or words of transfer. It is sufficient if the intention of the creditor to transfer the debt due to him to the transferee, can be gathered from the writing. The fact that the assignment is made in a statement of accounts by way of an entry, would not make any difference and, in the absence of authority, we are not prepared to uphold the contention of the Pleader for the 1st respondent on this point. There being an assignment within the meaning of section 130, Transfer of Property Act, the debt vested in the plaintiff from the date of the assignment and he would, therefore, be entitled to sue for it. The section itself expressly says that all the rights and remedies of the transferor shall vest in the transferee even without any notice of the transfer being given to the debtor though, if no notice has been given and the debtor pays the debt to his original creditor, he will be absolved from liability to the transferee of the debt. This is made clear in a decision of this Court in Gopalakrishna v. Gopalakrishna (1). It was also ruled by a Full Bench of this Court in Muthukrishna Aiyar v. Vera Raghava Aiyar (2) that "the rights of the transferor being vested in the transferee by the express words of the section, the transferee is the only party entitled to sue". In laying down this proposition, the learned Judge followed the ruling of the Privy Council in Shyam Kumari v. Rameswar Singh (3). We cannot, therefore, agree with the lower Appellate Court in holding that defendants Nos. 1 and 2 are solely entitled to sue the husband of the 3rd defendant for the amount due to them; on the contrary they have no interest on which they can sue.

The Subordinate Judge argues that, as there was no novation of the contract in the case inasmuch as the 3rd defendant's husband was not a party to the arrangement between the plaintiffs and the guardians of the defendants Nos. 1 and 2, there is no substitution of the original contract by any new contract. But section 62 of the Indian Contract Act which deals with the effect of novation, is a general provision of law relating to substitution of the contract by another. To such a substitution, all the persons concerned must be parties. But section 130, Transfer of Property Act, providing for transfer of claims is a specific provision which cannot be affected by the general rule relating to novation of contracts as enacted in section 62, Indian Contract Act.

Section 62, Indian Contract Act, covers cases in which the liability of a debtor to pay to his original creditor is extinguished because of a new contract by which he has made himself liable to a third person. But section 130, Transfer of Property Act, provides for transfer of choses in action by the person to whom the amount is due to a third person. It does not deal with cases of transfer of the liability of a debtor to somebody else. The debtor, it is well established, cannot transfer his liability without the consent of his creditor. We are, therefore, of opinion that the Subordinate Judge's judgment is wrong and liable to be set aside as it proceeds upon an erroneous view of the law.

We set aside the judgment of the Subordinate Judge and restore the decree of the District Munsif with costs here and in the Court below.

NIJALINGAPPA NIJAPPA HALAGATTI v. CHANABASAWA SATAVIRAPPA NESARI.

Sections 76 and 98 of the Probate and Administration Act contemplate orders merely directing the exhibiting of accounts in Court. Orders purporting to fix the capital of the trusts and giving directions for their administration are entirely outside the scope of these sections.

Appeal against the order of the Joint Judge, Sukkur.

Mr. Isardas Oodharam, for the Appellant.

Mr. Kimatrai Bhojraj, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against two account orders passed by the joint Judge of Sukkur-Larkana purporting to be under the Probate and Administration Act.

It appears that the appellant Notandas is a trustee under the Will of one Doulumal, who died in 1913, leaving his property in trust for the provision of a small-monthly pension to his widow Kishnibai, and for the distribution of the remainder in charity. The appellant obtained Probate of the Will in Certificate Case No. 37 of 1903 in the District Court of Sukkur-Larkana, and that Probate order was confirmed in May 1906, by the Sadar Court of Sind. The respondent Kishnibai subsequently filed a suit against the trustee claiming the whole of the estate on the ground that the Will was void for uncertainty. That suit was dismissed and the dismissal confirmed on appeal in 1909 by this Court.

The appellant appears, after obtaining Probate, to have submitted accounts from time to time, though the actual accounts have not been placed before us. But such documents as have been included in the paper-book, show that such accounts were filed and examined by the officers of the District Court, Sukkur-Larkana. It is said that these accounts were finally passed on the 2nd December 1911. The respondent Kishnibai will not admit that, though she is not prepared to deny that the accounts were submitted and passed. It is difficult to believe that those accounts were not finally passed in the course of the eight years which elapsed between the death of the testator and the alleged final order of 1911 of the District Court. But, however that may be, it seems to us quite clear that the orders now in question dated the 9th April 1915 and 19th May 1915 were not orders merely exhibiting the accounts in Court as contemplated by sections 76 and 98 of the Probate and Administration Act. These orders purport to fix the present capital of the trust at some Rs. 30,000 i. e., the capital as it stood some 12 years after the death of the testator. They further go on to provide for the future administration of the trust making directions for the manner in which the pensions should be paid out of the trust funds and the repairs effected out of the trust property and finally ordering that further accounts should be submitted half-yearly to the Court. We agree with the decision of the learned Judicial Commissioner in the case of Hemandas Ramrakhimal v. Chellaram Dhalloomal (1) that such orders are entirely outside the scope of sections 76 and 98 of the Probate and Administration Act.

We, therefore, set aside these orders and allow this appeal with costs.

Orders set aside; Appeal allowed.

The Transfer of Property Act is silent upon the question of a mortgagee's right to recover from his mortgagor the reasonable and proper costs of lasting improvements effected by him on the mortgaged property. This, however, does not mean that the intention of the Legislature was that this right should never be recognised. In a proper case, therefore, a mortgagee should be allowed the benefit of money

Mr. H. C. Coyajee (with him Mr. A. G. Desai), for the Appellant.

Mr. Dhurajlal K. Thakore, (with him Mr. K. H. Kelkar), for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

BATCHELOR, ACTING C. J.—This was a suit to redeem a mortgage. The mortgagee, who had gone into possession, claimed to be entitled to recover upon redemption the costs of a certain lasting improvement which, as he alleged, he had made in the property. The property mortgaged was agricultural land, and the lasting improvement claimed by the mortgagee was the sinking of a well in this land. Admittedly the well was sunk, and though the exact effect of the sinking of it on the character of the land, has not been determined, it appears from the judgment of the trial Court that there is good reason to suppose that the profits of the land were increased by reason of the sinking of the well. The mortgagee's claim on this head has been disallowed by both the lower Courts and this appeal is consequently brought by the mortgagee, who contends that, on the facts found, he ought to be held entitled to cast upon the mortgagor the reasonable costs incurred by him in the digging of the well.

The point is not perfectly clear by reason of the silence of the Transfer of Property Act upon the question of the mortgagee's rights to recover from his mortgagor the reasonable and proper costs of lasting improvements. It is consequently contended on behalf of the respondents that a mortgagee in India is not entitled to make any such claim. In support of that argument Counsel cited the decision of the Madras High Court in Arunachella Chetti v. Sithayi Ammal (1). No doubt if reference be made to the phraseology of section 72 of the Transfer of Property Act, there is room for the contention that the mortgagee is not entitled to improve the property, though he may spend money in preserving it, and in managing it, as a person of ordinary prudence would manage it, as he is required to do under section 76. I am also bound to admit that I do not think that the case before us can fairly be brought within the purview of section 63 of the Act, which makes provision for accessions to mortgaged property.

I think we are confronted with the plain question whether the silence of the Transfer of Property Act upon this point should lead the Court to decide that a mortgagee in India is never entitled to recover from his mortgagor the reasonable costs incurred in lasting improvements. In my opinion this question should be answered in favour of the mortgagee. If the Indian Statute had expressly deprived the mortgagee of this right, there would of course be an end of the matter. But the Statute has not done so, and from its mere silence, I am not prepared to infer that the intention of the Legislature was that this right should never be recognised. The right was considered by the Privy Council in Henderson v. Astwood (2), where Lord Macnaghten, in delivering the judgment of the Board, in speaking of the then mortgagee, one Davies, says: "It would be contrary to common justice to deprive Davies of the benefit of the money laid out by him on those improvements, so far as they enhanced the value of the premises". Then reference was made by his Lordship to Shepard v. Jones (3), where the whole law on this subject, as it prevails in England, is expounded by the Court of Appeal. It seems to me probable that the silence of the Indian Legislature upon this point is to be ascribed rather to a desire to confine the codified law to broad general provisions than to a deliberate design to deprive the mortgagee in suitable cases of that which their Lordships of the Privy Council regard as common justice.

I think, therefore, that the lower Appellate Court's decrees must be reversed, and there must be a remand of the case to the District Court in order that all the requisite questions may be considered and decided. These questions of fact will be : (1) What sum of money was spent by the mortgagee on the digging of the well ? (2) Was that a reasonable and proper sum for a mortgagee to spend, having regard to the total value of the property mortgaged ? And (3) Was the well a lasting or permanent improvement enhancing the value of the property ? If all these questions are answered in the mortgagee's favour, then, in my opinion, he is entitled to recover the fair amount of his expenditure from the mortgagor in so far as it has enhanced the value of the property, in addition to Rs. 600 found due at the foot of the mortgage. Costs costs in the suit.

MARTEN, J.—I agree. As regards the point under the Transfer of Property Act, I think that the silence of the Act does not prevent us from doing what is spoken of by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Henderson v. Astwood (2) as common justice, namely, in a proper case to allow a mortgagee the benefit of money laid out by him, so far as it has enhanced the value of the mortgaged property.

As regards the merits of the case, so far as we have them before us, I may repeat what Sir George Jessel said in Shepard v. Jones (3) : "All I can say is, that there being in my opinion a prima facie case that the property was increased in value, it is fair that there should be an inquiry to ascertain whether it was so increased. Of course that inquiry will be whether any and what sum ought to be allowed in taking the accounts of the defendant by reason of lasting improvements, and that will leave the whole case open." I, therefore, agree with the inquiries which my Lord the Chief Justice has directed to bring out these points.

I will only add that in allowing costs of improvements the Court must naturally be on its guard against extravagant or unfounded claims. It was said in argument that if we were to allow a mortgagee to charge for improvements, the Courts might be exposed to all sorts of extravagant demands on the part of mortgagees. The answer is that the Court should inquire strictly into the bona fides and fairness of the claim in each particular case.

Babu Tarakeswar Pal Chowdhury, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff is the Putnidar. The defendant is Darputnidar. Under the terms of the document under which the defendant Darputnidar holds, Rs. 142 was fixed, to use the language of the document as the annual rent. The meaning, therefore, of this description of annual rent is that this money is primarily payable by the Darputnidar to his superior landlord, the Putnidar. But in conformity with a common arrangement entered into, to provide for cases in which the Putni is sold and the Darputnidar's interest thereby is in danger, it was arranged that of the sum of Rs. 142 payable to the plaintiffs Rs. 112 should be paid by the Darputnidar to the superior landlord and the balance Rs. 30 should be paid by the Darputnidar to his landlord, the Putnidar.

Now, the defendant expressly covenanted to pay this sum, and that sum has not been paid. The effect of the document is that the defendant must pay Rs. 112 to the plaintiff unless the defendant can produce a receipt from the landlord for that amount.

It was argued that the sum of Rs. 112 was not rent, because it was assigned to the landlord. There is nothing here which establishes the fact that the landlord released the Putnidar from his liability to pay rent. In the result the first ground upon which the appeal is based, fails.

The second ground, I think, has been made out. It is that the lower Appellate Court is wrong in not giving credit to the defendant for the amounts paid as revenue and cesses on behalf of the Zemindar. The lower Appellate Court rejected the defendant's claim to deduct the sum of Rs. 164-10-4½ on the ground that it was a voluntary payment. This money was, it is said, paid into the Collectorate by the direction of the superior landlord of the plaintiffs. There is a clear finding that the defendant paid altogether Rs. 164-10-4½ into the Collectorate as revenue and cesses due by Biseswari Dasi, the superior landlord of the plaintiffs. Looking at this matter substantially the money was paid to the plaintiffs, for the money was payable in the first instance, as I have already held, to the plaintiffs under the document, though by an arrangement between the Putnidar and the Darputnidar there was a direction that Rs. 112 of this money should be paid to the landlord. In this particular instance this was done, for what was done with the money subsequently and under the orders of the landlord, is immaterial. I hold, therefore, that this was not a case of voluntary payment, and I now proceed to deal with the other objections which have been raised.

It is said that the sum which I have mentioned was the sum due in respect of the 8 annas and not the whole 10 annas. But this argument appears to me to be disposed of by the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge to which I have referred. It has also been said that there is a difficulty in the way of our giving effect to this set-off, because, the kabuliat stipulated that no payments to the superior landlord of the plaintiffs should be recognised unless dakhilas were granted by the landlord; and it is said that there are no such dakhilas in the present case. In this particular case the fact of payment has been otherwise proved and it is found in the judgment that this took place and under the circumstances I do not see that I can or should ignore that fact.

The result is that the appeal is decreed to this extent, that appellant is entitled to a set-off of the sum of Rs. 164-10-4½ against the amount of rent claimed. The decree of the lower Appellate Court will be altered accordingly; in all other respects it will stand.

As regards costs the parties will be entitled to their costs in all the Courts up to the High Court according to the degree of their success in this Court.

Where a person is entered in the revenue papers as an under-proprietor, but it appears from other evidence that he does not hold such a status, the entry in the revenue papers is of no avail to him for the purpose of establishing his title as an under-proprietor. [p. 757, col. 1.]

Appeals from the decrees of the District Judge, Fyzabad, dated the 28th May 1917, reversing the order of the Subordinate Judge, Fyzabad, dated the 29th November 1916.

Mr. A. P. Sen, for the Appellant.

Pandit Harkiran Nath Misra, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—These two appeals have arisen out of a suit for declaration brought by the plaintiff-appellant, Ram Rup Singh,

RAM RUP SINGH v. DEBI PERSHAD SINGH.

The suit related to a number of plots of land situated in the village of Mathani, the area of which is 18 bighas odd. The case for the plaintiff, as set out in his plaint, was that he is the owner of the lands in question. The suit was brought in consequence of a case instituted by the defendants against the plaintiff in a Revenue Court. In these proceedings the defendants succeeded in getting an order from the Revenue Court for resumption of the lands in suit on the ground that they were held as muafi. The Revenue Court assessed rent upon the lands and made it payable to the present defendants.

The defendants denied that the plaintiff was the proprietor of the area in question and a number of technical pleas were raised by way of defence. The first Court held that the plaintiff had failed to show that he had any proprietary title to the lands. The Subordinate Judge, however, was of opinion that the plaintiff had proved himself to be an under-proprietor and he gave him a declaration accordingly.

Both parties appealed to the District Judge, the plaintiff contending that he ought to have been declared the proprietor of the lands in question. On the other hand the defendants maintained that the first Court was wrong in holding that the plaintiff was an under-proprietor.

The result was that the District Judge dismissed the appeal of the plaintiff and allowed the appeal of the defendants, so that the plaintiff's suit was dismissed entirely.

He now has brought these two appeals against the decrees of the learned District Judge and as they both deal with the same matter, so they may be disposed of together. I may say at once that after hearing Counsel in the case, I am satisfied that both appeals must fail.

The whole case of the plaintiff rests upon certain proceedings which were taken in a Settlement Court in the year 1873. At that time one Sarnet Singh who was the plaintiff's grandfather was alive. It is admitted that Sarnet Singh had shares in a number of villages including this village of Mathani. Exhibit 3 is a copy of the application which was made by the plaintiff Ram Rup Singh to the Settlement Court, in which he stated the nature of his claim. He said in that application or plaint that he was entitled to an area of 22 bighas 11 biswas on the basis of Zemindari rights and also on the basis of an occupancy right by which he held the lands free of rent. He stated that the lands were recorded in his name in the settlement papers and he wanted a declaration of his right from the Settlement Officer. It is proved that the dispute between the plaintiff and his grandfather was disposed of by a compromise. A sulahnama was put in, in which it was stated that Sarnet Singh had given the lands in dispute to the plaintiff: the plaintiff informed the Court that he had received full satisfaction of his claim. As a result of this compromise, the Court passed an order consigning the case to records. No formal decree was drawn up nor was any definite declaration of Ram Rup's right given by the Settlement Officer. In short he seems to have treated the case as if the plaintiff had withdrawn it. It is to be observed that the Subordinate Judge who dealt with the present case had the record of the settlement litigation before him. It is apparent from the notes made by the Subordinate Judge that the Settlement Officer who was dealing with Ram Rup Singh's claim in the year 1873 mentioned in the record that the nature of the claim which Ram Rup Singh was making was not very clear. We find that in the year 1876 the share of Sarnet Singh in this village of Mathani was brought to sale in execution of a decree and was purchased by the predecessors-in-interest of the present defendants. Previous to this sale a statement was drawn up and sent for sanction to the Chief Commissioner. Exhibit 4 is a copy of this sale statement, and in it we have particulars of the share of Sarnet Singh which was being offered for sale. It is described as comprising 74 bighas odd of cultivated land. Out of this area 53 bighas odd were said to be in the cultivation of tenants and to yield an annual rent of Rs. 130 odd. It was further stated that the rest of the cultivated area, that is to say 22 bighas odd, was held rent-free by Ram Rup Singh under the decree of the Settlement Court.

It may also be mentioned that in the year 1882 this village was divided by partition, and it is proved by Exhibit

RAM RUP SINGH v. DEBI PERSHAD SINGH.

A-12 that while partition was going on the plaintiff Ram Rup Singh applied to the Court, saying that he was in possession of 22 bighas odd of sir which he held rent-free as "zemindari maurusi." He asked the Court to arrange that his possession over these lands should not be disturbed in the course of the partition proceedings.

From the documentary evidence on record it is established that for a long series of years Ram Rup Singh has been recorded as an under-proprietor of the lands now in dispute, and it further seems that in the Revenue Court from time to time Ram Rup Singh has been treated as a person holding a privileged tenure by reason of the order of the Settlement Court which was passed in the year 1873.

The learned District Judge was of opinion that the plaintiff could not claim to be proprietor of these lands on the strength of the sulahnama, because this deed was not registered and was not embodied in any decree made by the Settlement Court. He further held that as the plaintiff set up the case that he was the full proprietor of these lands the Court of first instance ought not to have given him a declaration that he was an under-proprietor. Further the learned District Judge was of opinion that the Court of first instance was wrong in holding that Ram Rup Singh had acquired an under proprietary title in these lands by more than 12 years' adverse possession. It is argued here that the District Judge was wrong in saying that the sulahnama did not operate to confer a proprietary title. It is argued that on the terms of this document it should be held that a proprietary right was granted to the plaintiff. It is further argued that although there was no formal order or decree of the Settlement Court, nevertheless it should be held that the order passed by the Settlement Officer amounted to a recognition and declaration of Ram Rup Singh's right as a proprietor. In any case it is urged that the District Judge should have allowed the declaration of the first Court to stand, if it was shown that the plaintiff had made out a case of under-proprietary right.

It is not necessary for me to discuss the technical points which were raised in the judgment of the Court below. The learned Counsel for the respondents has argued the case on the merits and his position is that even if full effect be allowed to the language of the sulahnama, no case either of proprietary or under-proprietary right is made out. It seems to me that this contention must be upheld.

In the first place, we have the oral evidence of Ram Rup Singh who was examined as a witness on his own behalf. His story is certainly a very confusing one, and it is very difficult to understand in what way he is trying to make out that he is the proprietor of the lands in dispute. He says that he got these lands in a partition effected between himself and his grandfather, Sarnet Singh. He was unable to explain how if a partition was made he failed to get any share of the property which was held in 28 other villages. Again it is not at all easy to understand in what way this partition was made. At one place Ram Rup Singh says that his father was dead at the time the partition was made and that his father had separated from Sarnet Singh before his death. At another place he says that his father died some 7 or 8 years after the partition took place. He admits that his father's name was never entered in the khewat, and he also says that even after the partition Sarnet Singh used to make all the collections till the time of his death. It is also significant that the plaintiff admits that there was no entry in his favour in the khewat up till the time of Sarnet Singh's death. Altogether this story of the partition is a peculiar one and it is by no means established that the proprietary title which the plaintiff is now asserting regarding these lands was derived by any partition between himself and his grandfather. One statement made by the plaintiff seems to me to be conclusive against his assertion that he is the proprietor of the lands now in question. He states distinctly that he has never at any time paid Government revenue for these lands or paid any rent to the defendants who now represent Sarnet Singh. It is impossible to suppose that if the plaintiff was the owner of these lands he could have escaped the liability of paying the Government revenue for them. It is equally difficult to conceive how he can be an under-proprietary if he has never paid any under-proprietary rent.

VATSALABAI VISHNU SUKHTANKAR v. SAMBHAJI PANDURANG NABAR.

Further, the claim for proprietary rights seems to be unmaintainable in view of the admitted fact that when the village was being partitioned in the year 1882, the plaintiff never put forward his proprietary title, so as to have his share in the village divided off. On the contrary after a perusal of all the documents in the case the proper conclusion seems to be that in some way or other the plaintiff in the year 1873 got a grant of a rent free tenure from his grandfather Sarnet Singh. More than this is not established and I am satisfied that the evidence falls far short of showing that the plaintiff has acquired any under-proprietary title.

On the contrary all the entries seem to me to be consistent with the view that the plaintiff was merely the holder of a rent-free tenure. He certainly was treated on no other footing when the share of Sarnet Singh was sold by public auction in the year 1876 and in spite of the entries in the revenue papers which are in his favour, I think it has been properly contended that his status is not that of an under-proprietary. In the year 1884 when the predecessor-in-interest of the defendants tried to recover arrears of rent from Ram Rup Singh, the claim was dismissed in appeal by the Deputy Commissioner on the ground that Ram Rup Singh was the holder of a rent-free tenure (compare Exhibit No. 31) and the status of the plaintiff has, I think, been correctly described in the order of the Deputy Commissioner of Fyzabad, dated the 17th June 1914. This order, I may state, was restored in appeal by order of the Board of Revenue. The Deputy Commissioner points out in his order that there is no judicial decision according to which the land now in question could be deemed to be held in under-proprietary right. In my opinion the Deputy Commissioner was right in holding that Ram Rup Singh could show at most that he was the holder of a rent-free tenure.

In these circumstances I am satisfied that on the merits of his case, apart from all technicalities, the plaintiff was not entitled to a declaration that he is either the proprietor or the under-proprietary of the disputed land. The result is that both appeals fail and are dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXII, rr. 3, 5—Death of one of several plaintiffs—Legal representative brought on record—Subsequent dispute—Court, duty of—Procedure.

One of several plaintiffs having died one G. was brought on the record as her legal representative, it being alleged that he was the adopted son of the deceased. Subsequently the daughters of the deceased applied that G's name should be deleted from the record and that they should be substituted as the legal representatives of their mother. The Court held that it could not alter its previous order as rule 3 of Order XXI of the Civil Procedure Code provided that after the record had been amended by adding the representative of the deceased plaintiff as a party the Court shall proceed with the suit:

Held, that a question having arisen as to whether G was or was not the legal representative of the deceased plaintiff, the Court was bound to determine it under rule 5 of Order XXII of the Civil Procedure Code. [p 758, cols. 1 & 2.]

JUDGMENT.

SCOTT, C. J.—The question for decision arises with reference to the constitution of a suit No. 205 of 1914 filed by five persons, the fourth of whom was Radhabai. She died after the suit had been filed on the 10th of March 1916 and on the 18th of April, an application was made on behalf of the minor Govind Sambhaji, son of the 1st plaintiff, that he should be brought on the record as heir and legal representative of the deceased Radhabai, relying upon an alleged adoption. The learned Judge acceded and the record was amended by the substitution of Govind Sambhaji's name for that of Radhabai. The petitioners having learnt of the application applied on the 26th of July that Govind's name should be deleted and that the minor daughters of Radhabai should be brought upon the record in his place. The learned

KOMANDAR SRINIVASA SESHACHALU v. KOMANDUR SESHAMMA.

Judge, however, after hearing the evidence adduced by the disputing parties, held that he could not alter his previous order, as rule 3 of Order XXII provides that after the record has been amended by adding the representative of the deceased plaintiff as a party the Court shall proceed with the suit.

It appears to us that this is taking too narrow a view of the provisions of Order XXII. Rule 5 provides that where a question arises as to whether any person is or is not the legal representative of the deceased plaintiff or the deceased defendant, such question shall be determined by the Court. The learned Judge, however, has held that he cannot determine the question.

Now let us consider what injustice that might work in the case of a deceased defendant. There might be a suit filed by the plaintiff against several defendants, and on the death of one of these defendants the plaintiff might apply to have some one substituted as representative who was not really the legal representative and could be relied upon not to put forward any defence on behalf of the deceased defendant's estate. This obviously might lead to grave miscarriage of justice and yet if the learned Judge's view is correct, an order once having been made for adding a bogus representative of a deceased defendant the suit must be proceeded with without any real representative of the estate being brought in, even though the Court is aware that the defendant's interests would not be defended by the bogus representative. In the case of plaintiffs the danger is not so great, for plaintiffs cannot sever in their attack and all are represented by the same legal advisers, and, therefore, one plaintiff can generally be relied upon to protect the interests of all the plaintiffs, even though some have died and are represented by persons who take no interest in the proceedings. Tested, however, from the point of view which I have suggested, it is clear that it would be a very unfortunate reading of rule 3 if we held ourselves bound to accede to the view of the learned Judge and held that once an order, though obviously a mistaken order, has been made, it is not in the power of the Court to correct it notwithstanding the provisions of rule 5. We cannot take that view of the case.

A question has arisen as to whether Govind is the legal representative of the deceased Radhabai, and such question has to be determined by the Court. We, therefore, set aside the order of the lower Court and direct it to determine the issue left undetermined upon the application of the petitioners. Costs costs in the cause.

The general principles of construction governing English Wills are applicable also to Hindu Wills, e.g., where there are no express words of gift but the gift can be implied from the language used in the Will, the Courts should have regard to the dominating intention of the testator and effectuate that intention by ascertaining it from the entire scheme of the Will. There is no positive presumption of Hindu Law that a gift by a person to his daughter is of an absolute estate. [p. 762, col. 1.]

A Hindu testator devised his property to his two daughters, S. and A. A had issue at the time of the death of the testator while S had none. The Will recited that as A was attending to the testator's comforts and had male offspring who would perform karmams (ceremonies after death) to him, he gave her two out of three shares and he gave S. who had no issue, the remaining one share. The Will further recited that any person adopted by S., should not get her share, but that if any male child was born to JUDGMENT.—The point involved in this appeal relates to the construction of a Will executed by a Hindu. The document is marked as Exhibit A in the case. The construction of the document is by no means free from difficulty. But once the rules of construction applicable to such cases are borne in mind, we think that we have enough in this Will from which we can gather the intention of the testator in the events that have happened. He had two daughters, one called Seshamma and the other Andalammal, the younger daughter. Seshamma had no child, but Andalammal had two sons. The question we have to consider is, whether there was any gift to Andalammal's children or whether the gift was to Andalammal of an absolute estate or of a daughter's estate according to the Hindu Law.

The Will starts with saying that the property should be divided into shares; one share should be given to Seshamma and the other two to Andalammal, it having been already recited that the testator's two daughters were alive as his heirs and that, of these daughters, Andalammal had male offspring. The testator says: "Therefore, the remaining half should be divided from the said Varada Reddi and, as out of my above said two daughters, Andalammal has been attending to all my comforts and as her male Santhathi (translated as offspring) are entitled to perform Karmams to me, she should enjoy two-thirds—two of the three shares, and Seshamma should enjoy the third share." Then the testator provides that his daughters should divide and enjoy in three shares in the above-said manner above 60 Ankanams of site. "After her death (meaning the death of his sister-in-law B. Seshamma in whose favour he was making the bequest), "my daughters should enjoy the said land in the proportion of the above three shares." Now we come to the more important clause in the Will: "In enjoying in the above manner as my elder daughter Seshamma has no male issue, she should be enjoying the third share that comes to her without contracting debts and after her death, the said third share should go to my second daughter Andalammal and to her Santhathi (offspring). But if she adopts a son, this property should not go to the adopted son. If a male issue is hereafter born to my daughter, that is, Seshamma, that grandson should, like the Santhathi (offspring) of my younger daughter, enjoy her (elder daughter's) third share, having power of gift and sale from son to grandson and so on from generation to generation." There is only one other sentence to which reference need be made, where the testator provides that the younger daughter alone shall have the right of collecting the said debts and of causing the said Karmams or obsequies to be performed.

The learned District Judge has held that though it was the intention of the testator to make a gift to the children of Andalammal, he omitted to do so and, therefore, the Court cannot carry out what might have been the intention of the testator but which he failed to carry out in the Will. If the District Judge is right in his reading of the Will, no doubt the decree passed by him would be correct. It may at once be said that there is no gift to the children in express and clear terms. The learned Pleader for the appellant, Mr. A. Krishnaswami Aiyar, however, argues that taking the whole Will into consideration, three things are clear:—(1) that it was the intention of the testator to make a gift to the children of Andalammal; (2) that that intention can be gathered as a matter of construction, especially from the words "should, like the Santhathi of my younger daughter, enjoy her third share, having powers of gift and sale from son to grandson and so on from generation to generation;" and (3) at any rate that this is a case of an implied grant. Nothing can be clearer from the reading of the Will than that the testator was extremely anxious that his property should go to his daughters and their natural children. This is to be gathered especially from the fact that in the contingency of Seshamma not bearing a son, the property should not go to any adopted son of hers. It is not suggested that he had any other relatives or kinsmen besides those mentioned in the Will on whom he would like the property to devolve. He starts by saying that he is making provision in respect of all his property moveable and immoveable. The District Judge, however, thinks that what the testator intended was to make a gift to his two daughters of estates corresponding to a Hindu daughter's estate and that he assumed that Andalammal who was the younger daughter would survive Seshammal and himself. That being so, the contingency that actually happened, namely, the death of Andalammal before the death of the testator, was not within his contemplation and he failed to provide for it. All this depends upon what construction is to be placed upon the Will. The learned District Judge does not take all the provisions together in order to arrive at the mind of the testator. He first of all takes into consideration the words in the earlier part of the Will, that is to say, where the testator mentions the disposition into shares— $\frac{1}{3}$ rd in favour of Seshamma and $\frac{2}{3}$ rd in favour of Andalammal, and infers that they are given estates such as a Hindu daughter would take by inheritance under the general Hindu Law. Proceeding upon that basis he construes the other clauses of the Will, and that is exactly the nature of the argument which has been addressed to us by the learned Vakil for the respondents. Now take the case of Seshamma. The testator in the earlier part of the Will contents himself merely with saying that she is to take $\frac{1}{3}$ rd of the properties, but he goes on afterwards to lay down what is to happen in case Seshamma should die without issue and in case she was to have an issue or she was to adopt a son. All these provisions clearly indicate that so far as Seshamma was concerned, she was intended to take only a life-estate and if she left no issue, her share was to go over to Andalammal and to her children. If she were to have male issue, the son or sons were to take directly under the Will on the death of Seshamma. If that was the testator's intention with regard to Seshamma's male issue, it seems to us to be quite clear that similar was his intention with respect to Andalammal's sons. He gives $\frac{2}{3}$ rd to Andalammal as her sons are entitled to perform his Karmams. The scheme of the Will was not to give anything less to Andalammal and her children than what was given to Seshamma and her sons, but to treat the former on the same footing as the latter. Then we have this clause:—"If a male issue is hereafter born to my elder daughter, the grandson should, like the Santhathi of my younger daughter, enjoy her third share.....". "Should like the Santhathi of my younger" can have no other meaning than that it was the intention of the testator that they should take the property given to Andalammal after her death. No doubt this is a case of inartistic careless drafting, but we do not see what other meaning can be given to these words than what we have stated. The learned Pleader for the respondents suggests to us that by these words all that the testator meant to convey was that he expected that his younger daughter's children would, in the ordinary course of Hindu Law, enjoy the property which he was giving to that daughter. But that is not a possible construction, having regard to the fact that the gift over after the life-estate of Seshamma is to her male issue and so it can hardly be contended that in her case the testator did not dispose of the reversion. The reversion in both the cases was intended to be placed on the same footing that is to say, in the case of each daughter, it is to go to her children. Numerous cases have been cited to us, but so far as the construction of this document is concerned, little help is to be derived from the provisions of other Wills. But there are certain general rules of construction which are applicable to this case. They are clearly laid down in the well-known judgment of Right Hon'ble Pemberton Leigh in Towns v. Wentworth (1), extracts from which have been quoted in more than one case as laying down the proper rules for the construction of Wills like this, which do not contain express words of gift but where the gift is to be implied no doubt from the language used, but having regard to the dominating intention of the testator to be ascertained from the entire scheme of the Will. In Sweeting v. Prideaux (2), Hall, V. C., upheld a gift which could only be implied from the general tenor of the entire Will. He cites with approval the proposition laid down by Lord Justice Knight Bruce, in the case of Key v. Key (3), in these words:—"In common with all men I must acknowledge that there are many cases upon the construction of documents in which the spirit is strong enough to overcome the letter; cases in which it is impossible for a reasonable being, upon a careful perusal of an instrument, not to be satisfied from its contents that a literal, a strict, or an ordinary interpretation given to particular passages would disappoint and defeat the intention with which the instrument, read as a whole, persuades and convinces him that it was framed. A man so convinced is authorised and bound to construe the writing accordingly." Then he quotes the passage above alluded to from Right Hon'ble Pemberton Leigh's judgment "..... and, on the other hand, if the Will shows that the testator must necessarily have intended an interest to be given which there are no words in the Will expressly to devise, the Court is to supply the defect by implication, and thus to mould the language of the testator so as to carry into effect, as far as possible, the intention which, it is of opinion, that the testator has on the whole Will sufficiently declared." These rules of construction relating to Wills have not, so far as we are aware, ever been doubted either in England or here. It will not serve any useful purpose to go through the different cases to see how far the Courts have gone to effectuate the intention of the testator in particular cases provided that intention is to be gathered from the entire Will, although the gift is expressed in defective or elliptical form of language. But one of the strongest cases seems to us to be Redfern, In re; Redfern v. Bryning (4). There Bacon, V. C., relied mainly on the scheme of the Will as showing that the testator intended to make an equal division of all his estate among his children and though there was an omission with respect to one of the children, he felt himself justified in supplying that omission, being clear as to the intention of the testator. He says: "I think upon a reasonable construction of the words which the testator has used, the words which are suggested by the statement of claim ought to be read as if they were inserted in the Will." On behalf of the respondents we have been referred to the case of Scale v. Rawlins (5). But all that is laid down there is that the Court is not at liberty to speculate upon the intention of the testator if there is no language in the Will by which that intention is expressed. It does not, in any way, throw doubt upon the other rule to which we have referred.

(1) (1858) 11 Moore P. C. 526; 6 W. R. 397; 14 E. R. 794; 117 R. R. 81.

Mr. K. V. Krishnaswami Aiyar has asked us to say that the general principles of construction such as we have mentioned are not applicable to Hindu Wills. The argument is that under the Hindu Law or under the rules of construction of Hindu Wills, a presumption against partial intestacy has no room and, therefore, the English Law has gone much further than we should be justified in going towards carrying out the intention of the testator. But we do not find that this is borne out by authority. On the other hand there are a number of cases which have laid down that the rule in question applies to Hindu Wills as well [Ellokassee Dossee v. Durponarain Bysack (6), Cheda Lal v. Gobind Ram (7) and Seshayya v. Narasamma (8)]. The learned Pleader for the respondents also enunciated a proposition that in cases of bequest to a Hindu daughter she takes an absolute estate. There again he is unsupported by any authority. On the other hand, the decided cases and certainly the later decisions lay down the contrary proposition. No doubt there are some recent decisions which say that there is no presumption that the gift to a Hindu daughter is only of a life-estate or of an estate which the daughter takes under the Hindu Law of intestate succession. But there is no authority for saying that there is any positive presumption that such a gift is of an absolute estate. We may also mention that it was attempted to be argued that the mention of the 'offspring' of Andalammal was only by way of limitation, indicative of a gift of inheritance. But that does not seem to us to be the proper construction having regard to the entire scheme of the Will. By Santhathi, the testator apparently meant her children or perhaps her sons, because in the Will sometimes the word Santhathi is used by itself, and sometimes the phrase the male santhathi is used. No such question was raised at the trial and there can be no doubt that what the testator meant was the children of Andalammal as the direct objects of bequest.

We allow the appeal and reverse the judgment of the District Judge. There will be a declaration that the plaintiffs are entitled to 2/3rds of the properties claimed in the plaint and Seshammal to 1/3rd for her life. There will be a preliminary decree for partition and there will be an enquiry into the mesne profits to which the plaintiffs are entitled as claimed in the plaint. The appellants are entitled to their costs from the respondents here and in the Court below. Out of the costs payable by the respondents, the Court fees payable by the appellants will be realised.

Appeal allowed.

JUDGMENT.—This suit was filed by the widow of Dhaku Sakharam against the defendant claiming to be entitled to sole possession and enjoyment of the estate of the deceased during her lifetime, subject only to a right of maintenance of the defendant. It was alleged by the plaintiff that the defendant was a woman living with the deceased who was not entitled to the rights of a Hindu wife, and that on the death of the deceased she was only entitled to maintenance out of the property until she formed some other connection. The prayer was that it might be declared that according to the custom of the community the defendant was only entitled to provision being made for her maintenance out of the estate of the deceased; that the plaintiff was solely entitled as a Hindu widow; that the defendant might be ordered to discover and hand over to the plaintiff the property now in her possession or power belonging to the estate of the deceased, including the title-deeds of the Panvel property; and that it might be declared that the ornaments did not form part of the estate of the deceased, but formed part of the stridhan property of the plaintiff. Then there was a prayer for injunction and Receiver.

The defendant put in a written statement claiming to be a co-widow of Dhaku Sakharam, and joint owner of his estate with the plaintiff. An application was made by the plaintiff for a Receiver to take charge of the property in the possession of the defendant and belonging to the estate of the deceased, and it was admitted that the defendant was in possession of certain outstandings recoverable on account of the estate of the deceased. On that application by consent the parties deposited with their respective Solicitors property in their possession pending the hearing and no further order, therefore, was made.

At the hearing the issue was in substance whether the defendant was, as she claimed to be, co-widow of the deceased, and that issue was decided against her.

A reference was then made to the Commissioner to take an account of the estate of the deceased, and an enquiry as to the proper amount to be allowed to the defendant for maintenance. Before the Commissioner by consent it was agreed that Rs. 7.80 should be allowed to the defendant for maintenance and the defendant put in a claim for certain ornaments, five in number, as to which evidence was led before the Commissioner, but the claim was disallowed, and the Commissioner certified and reported that the immoveable properties belonging to the estate of the deceased were as shown in the schedule to his report and that the title-deeds were in the possession of Dubash and Co., Attorneys for the defendant.

The matter then came up as to further directions and costs before Mr. Justice Beaman, who was not the trial Judge. It was represented to him on behalf of the defendant that the issue of marriage had only occupied a short time; that a suit was necessary and that costs should come out of the estate. On behalf of the plaintiff it was stated that the estate was small, the defendant had never any case, and had lost all along the line, but they did not ask for costs against the defendant, because they could get nothing. The learned Judge, however, thought that it was the plaintiff's Attorneys' suit. He characterised the suit in very strong terms, and thought that the plaintiff was more in fault than the defendant.

We have been taken through the whole of the proceedings up to the final decree which are printed in the appeal paper-book, and we have also been taken through various documents printed at the instance of one side or other very unnecessarily at the end of the book; and we have come to the conclusion that the plaintiff's Counsel was right in contending before the learned Judge that the defendant had never any case at all and had lost all along the line. Under these circumstances we have to consider whether the order as to costs out of the estate which belongs exclusively to the plaintiff for her life should stand. In Cooper v. Whittingham (1) Sir George Jessel observed: "Where a plaintiff comes to enforce a legal right, and there has been no misconduct on his part—no omission or neglect which would induce the Court to deprive him of his costs—the Court has no discretion, and cannot take away the plaintiff's right to costs." "It is no answer where a plaintiff asserts a legal right for a defendant to allege his ignorance of such right and to say 'if I had known of your right I should not have infringed it.'" These principles were given effect to in Kuppuswami Chetty v. Zamindar of Kalahasti (2). In Ranchordas Vithaldas v. Bai Kasi (3) an Appellate Bench of this Court laid down that "the principle to be deduced from these decisions is that Appeal Courts should interfere with the exercise of discretion by the lower Courts as to costs when there has been any misapprehension of facts, or violation of any established principle, or where there has been no real exercise of discretion at all." It appears that this is a case in which there has been a misapprehension of facts on the part of the learned Judge who made the order of costs and a violation of established principle by throwing upon the plaintiff the costs of the unsuccessful defendant, where the plaintiff has been guilty of no misconduct. The plaintiff did not ask for costs against the defendant, because she would get nothing. That was what was stated by her Counsel in the lower Court, and we do not make an order against the defendant for the same reason now. But the order as to costs out of the estate must be deleted, for we do not think it is right in principle that the defendant should, under the circumstances of this case, have her costs out of the estate.

It remains to consider the costs occasioned by the unnecessary printing of the affidavit of Laxmibai and certain correspondence printed, it is said, at the instance of the defendant's Attorneys. We think that those costs must be paid by the Attorneys personally and not be allowed to fall upon their clients.

Another matter is the Judge's order obtained for the amendment of the memorandum of appeal by the addition at the instance of the Attorney for the plaintiff of a very unnecessary paragraph, asking for relief in respect of a matter in respect of which relief had already twice been asked for in the unamended memorandum. Costs of the Judge's order must not be costs in the cause, but must be paid by the plaintiff's Attorneys personally. No order as to costs of this appeal. There was a consent order that all the property in the possession of both parties should be deposited with their respective Solicitors. The property in the possession of the defendant's Solicitors will not be subject to their lien for costs. They must, therefore, hand the property over to the plaintiff's Attorneys for and on account of the plaintiff.

Order accordingly.

Jurisdiction, objection to, omission to raise in Trial Court—Appellate Court, power of, to record finding on question of jurisdiction.

Where an objection to the jurisdiction of a Court to try a suit is not taken in that Court at the proper time, the Appellate Court should not allow such objection to be raised before it and record a finding thereon.

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Ramanad at Madura, in Appeal Suit No. 109 of 1916, preferred against the decree of the Additional District Munsif, Srivilliputhur, in Original Suit No. 335 of 1915.

Mr. M. D. Devadoss, for the Appellant.

Messrs. K. S. Ramabadhra Iyer and T. A. Anantha Iyer, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Objection is taken to the dismissal of plaintiff's suit on the ground that the Subordinate Judge, having found that the Sattur District Munsif had no jurisdiction, was bound to return the plaint to be presented in the proper Court and had no power to decide the case on the merits. Section 21 of the Code of Civil Procedure, however, says that no Appellate Court shall allow an objection to the place of suing to be taken unless it was taken before the settlement of issues and unless there has been a consequent failure of justice. These conditions were not present, and so the Subordinate Judge should not have allowed the objection to be taken. We must, therefore, set aside his finding as to jurisdiction and on the finding as to consideration the second appeal fails. As respondents Nos. 1 to 3 took the objection as to jurisdiction in the lower Appellate Court we disallow their costs here. Second and 6th defendants not having appealed against the decree to the lower Appellate Court and here and not pleaded want of consideration, we are not prepared to interfere on their behalf. The second appeal is dismissed.

Within a patni taluk created in 1807 which was purchased by the plaintiff in execution of a rent-decree, there were certain lands in the possession of the defendant which were recorded in the settlement records as rent-free lands. The plaintiff sued to recover possession of those lands by ejecting the defendant on the allegation that the defendant's interest was an incumbrance within the meaning of section 161 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

Held, (1) that the defendant's interest could not be deemed to be an incumbrance unless it was shown that the zemindar was in possession of those lands at the time when the patni was granted; [p. 769, col. 2; p. 770, col. 1.]

(2) that having regard to the provisions of section 103B of the Bengal Tenancy Act and the pleadings of the plaintiff and to the facts that there was no evidence to show that any rent had ever been realised in respect of those lands and that the defendant and his predecessor-in-title had been in possession for a long period without payment of rent, it was incumbent upon the plaintiff to show that the zemindar was in possession of the lands in dispute at the date of the creation of the patni and that the incumbrance of the defendant came into existence after that date. JUDGMENT.

N. R. CHATTERJEA, J.—These two appeals arise out of a suit for possession of 289 bighas and 7 cottas of land situated in Mouza Phulia appertaining to Taraf Santipur.

It appears that Mouza Phulia and 37 other Mouzas constituting Taraf Santipur originally belonged to the Maharaja of Nadia. Before the Permanent Settlement the Raja's successor declined to take settlement of the Taraf and it was, accordingly, let out in temporary ijara by the Government to different persons from time to time. Maharaja Tej Chandra Bahadur of Burdwan purchased the right of the last ijaradar. Ultimately it was permanently settled with the Maharaja about the year 1800 and the latter granted a Patni of the Taraf to one Ramesh Chandra Mukerjee in 1807. The Zemindari interest passed to certain persons who may be conveniently referred to as the Tagores. The Zemindar in execution of three decrees for arrears of rent against the Patnidar put up the Patni to sale and it was purchased by the plaintiff on the 2nd of October 1899 and the sale was confirmed on the 28th November 1900. On the 10th September 1901 the plaintiff applied for settlement and Record of Rights under Chapter X of the Bengal Tenancy Act. In these proceedings the lands were entered as "rent-free." Objections were raised by the plaintiff to the entry: but they were decided against him by the Settlement Officer on the 25th May 1909. On the 27th June 1909 the plaintiff took steps for service of notice under section 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act for annulment of the incumbrance of the defendants. On the 21st July 1909 the present suit was brought on the allegation that the lands formed part of the Mal lands of the Patni which was granted in 1807. The defence was that the lands were revenue-free Lakhraj, that the defendants' predecessors had purchased them from the representatives of one Mr. Broderick, that they and their predecessors had been in possession of the lands without payment of any rent from before the creation of the Patni, and even from before the Permanent Settlement and that the suit was barred by limitation. Several other pleas were taken which will be referred to later.

The defendant No. 1 claimed the lands as Lakhrajdar and defendants Nos. 2 to 5 claimed as Mourasidars under the defendant No. 1. The Court below held that no notice under section 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act had been served upon defendants Nos. 2 to 5 and accordingly dismissed the suit as against them. As against the defendant No. 1, it held that notice had been served, that the suit was not barred by limitation, that the defendant had failed to prove that the lands were held by them from before 1790 and accordingly decreed the suit against her. The defendant No. 1 has preferred Appeal No. 409 of 1911 and the plaintiff has preferred Appeal No. 114 of 1912.

The grounds taken on behalf of the defendant-appellant are, first, that the sale of the Patni having taken place, in execution of three rent decrees, was not a sale under which the plaintiff could annul incumbrances.

Secondly, that the notice which was served upon the defendants, not having been signed by the Collector, was not a legal notice as contemplated by section 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

Thirdly, that the finding of the Subordinate Judge that the plaintiff became aware of the encumbrance of the defendant within one year of the institution of the suit is erroneous.

Fourthly, that the Court below has wrongly placed the onus upon the defendant of proving (a) that the lands in suit were held as valid Lakhraj from before 1790; and (b) that the possession of the defendants commenced from before the creation of the Patni in 1807, and lastly that the question of limitation has been wrongly decided.

In order to show that the lands in dispute formed part of the Mal lands of the estate, the plaintiff produced various documents for showing that there were no Lakhraj lands (except a few bighas) in the Mouza. The quinquennial register mentions the name of Jaga Mohon Roy as the proprietor of Taraf Santipur. That Register, which was for a period of 5 years commencing from 1202

(1795), shows that the area of Mouza Phulia was 1739 bighas, the jama assessed being Rs. 246. Next there is a Dowl of ijara, dated 20th April 1799, in the name of Maharaja Tej Chandra of Burdwan in respect of Taraf Santipur for one year which, however, does not give the area. The evidence does not show exactly when the Permanent Settlement was made, but it appears that it was after 1206 and before 1212. The plaintiff's case is that Taraf Santipur was permanently settled with Maharaja Tej Chandra in 1207 (1800). There is no evidence to show the area which was actually settled at the time of the Permanent Settlement as the papers relating to the Permanent Settlement have not been produced. The plaintiff, however, has produced certain other papers to show the area of the Mal lands of the Mouza. The Mahalwar Register gives the area of the Mal lands of the Mouza as 577 acres odd (about 1,748 bighas) and the Land Registration Act Registers show that the area of the Mouza was 583 acres (Mal lands 577 acres and resumed Lakhraj lands 11 acres). The Revenue Survey Map gives the total area as 655 acres, which includes the 577 acres Mal and the resumed and released Lakhraj land. These documents would go to show the area of Mal lands to be 577 acres, i.e., about 1,739 bighas. In the recent Settlement proceedings the total area of the Mouza is shown as 1,726 bighas, out of which 655 bighas are recorded as Mal, and the rest as Lakhraj. The learned Subordinate Judge was of opinion that the area as given in the Settlement proceedings cannot be correct, and the lands claimed as Lakhraj in those proceedings "must be due to encroachment as otherwise the quantities recorded as Mal in the registers cannot be explained."

Some other registers were produced on behalf of the plaintiff. The Pargana Register kept under Regulation VIII of 1800 does not mention any Lakhraj land in the Mouza and the Kanongoe Register shows only 28 bighas as Lakhraj in the names of certain persons under whom the defendant does not claim. The Thak Map shows only 3 acres odd as Lakhraj, and the Thak statement does not mention any Lakhraj lands in the Mouza. The learned Subordinate Judge held upon these documents that the plaintiff had given sufficient prima facie evidence to show that the disputed 289 bighas cannot be Lakhraj lands of the Mouza, and that the onus had been shifted on the defendants to show that the Lakhraj existed before December 1790. He has found from certain old documents that 85 bighas were purchased as Lakhraj by the Brodericks (the predecessors of the defendants) from time to time, but with respect to 65 bighas (out of the 85 bighas) there was no old document to show that they were Lakhraj before 1790. As regards the remaining 20 bighas there is a Taidad of a date prior to 1790, but there is nothing to connect the names of the persons mentioned in it with the persons who executed the conveyance (Exhibit Q-5) in favour of the Brodericks. There are no old documents with respect to the remaining lands, and the Court below accordingly held that the defendants had failed to show that any of the lands in suit were held in Lakhraj right from before the 1st December 1790, and that, therefore, the lands in suit are Mal lands.

As already stated, there is no direct evidence to show the area of the lands which was permanently settled. But the quinquennial register shows the area of the Manzars to be 1,739 bighas, which is nearly the same as the area which appears from the recent Settlement proceedings. The quinquennial register was for a period immediately preceding the Permanent Settlement; ordinarily, therefore, and in the absence of anything to show that there was any change between the date of the register and the Permanent Settlement, the Court would be justified in holding that that was the area which was permanently settled with the Zemindar in 1800, and having regard to the evidence, the finding of the Court below that the lands were assessed as revenue-paying lands at the time of the Permanent Settlement may be accepted.

The Patni was granted by the Zemindar in 1807. The Patni kabuliyat shows that all the rights (excepting certain rights with which we are not concerned in this case) which the Zemindar had in Taraf Santipur were settled in Patni with the Patnidar. It is contended, however, on behalf of the appellant that the plaintiff must not only show that these lands were included in the area which was permanently settled with the Zemindar, but also that he was in possession thereof at the date of the Patni grant, and that the Patnidar lost possession after the commencement of the Patni, in other words, that the incumbance of the defendants came into existence after the date of the Patni.

The respondent on the other hand contends that if the lands were included in the Permanent Settlement, it is for the defendants to show that the possession of their predecessors-in-title commenced before the date of the Patni, and that the Zemindar lost possession between the date of the Permanent Settlement and the date of the Patni grant. The documents produced by the plaintiff mentioned above with the exception of the extract from the quinquennial register and the ijara Dowls are all subsequent to the date of the Patni grant.

The defendants' predecessor Swarnamoyi purchased the lands from the Brodericks in 1274 (1868), and the oral evidence adduced on behalf of the defendants shows possession for over 60 years; one of the witnesses Chandra Kant Banerjee (83 years old) speaks to the possession of the Saheb from before the Thak survey and Swarnamoyi's possession for the last 40 or 45 years. The Kanongoe Register and the Pargana Register are of the years 1825 and 1843 respectively, but in the case of Bipradas Pal v. Monorama Debi (1) the probative value of these registers was considered and it was held that they were of no evidentiary value. However that may be, they do not prove actual possession of the disputed lands by the Patnidar. The registers under the Land Registration Act would not mention Lakhraj lands which were not valid revenue-free lands, and they and the Thak Map date from periods subsequent to the date from which the defendant has proved the possession of his predecessors-in-title, and all the documents with the exception of the quinquennial register and the Dowls referred to above are subsequent to the date of the Patni grant. These documents, therefore, do not show whether these lands were in the possession of the Zemindar at the date of the creation of the Patni.

We have been referred to three decisions of this Court in which some of the questions raised in this case were considered. They arose out of suits for possession of lands situated in the very same Patni Taluk viz., Taraf Santipur, which were claimed by various persons as Lakhraj. In two of them Biprodas Pal Chowdhury was the plaintiff, and in the third he was the defendant. All the cases were decided against Biprodas Pal Chowdhury. In the first case, Kalikananda Mukherjee v. Biprodas Pal Chowdhury (2), it was laid down that it was for the purchaser of the Patni to show that the possession of the defendants commenced after the creation of the Patni, or that the proprietor of the estate was in possession at the time when the Patni was granted; and that unless he could show that, the interest acquired by the defendant could not be deemed to be an incumbrance which he could annul. It was further held that the doctrine that possession follows title has no application to a case like the present, where the plaintiff has to establish possession at a particular point of time, and that the mere production of the kabuliyat by which the Zemindar purported to let out in the Patni the whole estate (though an ancient document) is not evidence that the Zemindar was in possession of the entire land of the estate, unless there was an assertion in the kabuliyat that the grantor of the Patni at the time was in possession of every parcel of land comprised within the boundaries of the Patni, or an allegation in the document that the grantee of the Patni obtained actual possession of every piece of land within the tenure granted to him. In the second case (Second Appeal No. 2700 of 1915 and analogous cases decided by Fletcher and Newbould, JJ., on the 29th May 1917, unreported) in which the executors of Biprodas Pal Chowdhury were the appellants, the learned Judges held that it was clearly covered by the decision in Kalikananda Mukherjee v. Biprodas Pal Chowdhury (2) and followed the principles laid down in that case. In the third case, Biprodas Pal v. Monorama Debi (1), the probative value of some of the registers produced in this case was considered as stated above.

(1) 47 Ind. Cas. 49; 22 C. W. N. 396; 45 C. 574.

BIPRODAS PAL CHOWDHURY v. KEDAR NATH ROY.

The cases referred to above, however, related to lands in Mouzas other than Fulia, and the evidence is not the same in all the cases, (in particular it may be noted that the quinquennial register was not produced in those cases) though the right of the plaintiff and some of the questions of law raised are common to all the cases.

The case of Kalikananda Mukherjee v. Biprodas Pal Chowdhury (2) was sought to be distinguished on the ground that in that case there was evidence to show that the defendants had been in possession before the date of Patni, but the decision was based not upon that ground, but upon the ground that it was for the purchaser of the Patni to show that the possession of the defendant commenced after the creation of the Patni and other grounds mentioned above. The correctness of some of the propositions laid down in that case has also been challenged, but it is unnecessary to consider in the present case the correctness of the principles laid down in that case as applicable to all cases of this description generally. In the present case the lands were entered in the Record of Rights as "rent-free", and lands though they are not held revenue-free from before the Permanent Settlement, but are held without payment of rent from a period subsequent to the Permanent Settlement and before the creation of the Patni, would come under that description. Under section 103 (B) of the Bengal Tenancy Act the entry in the Record of Rights shall be presumed to be correct. The onus is, therefore, upon the plaintiff to prove by evidence that the entry is incorrect. The plaintiff himself alleged in his plaint that during the period "the Government was realizing revenue by khas ijara settlement, the ijaradars in collusion, with the view of reducing the revenue, caused the creation of Sanads of imaginary revenue-free rights", though he added that "at the time of the inquiry by the Government, the grantees of the Taidads had no possession at all in the lands mentioned in them and they were not registered." Although, therefore, there is no admission that such persons had any possession of the lands, it shows that there had been assertions of hostile title at that time. It is further alleged in the plaint that "until the Thak and Revenue Surveys of 1852 the quantity of the Mal lands was not at all ascertained", that they were ascertained at the time of those surveys, and that the defendants were not in possession of the lands in suit at that time. It is also alleged that Maharaja Tej Chandra Bahadur had khas possession of Taraf Santipur for a short time only. The defendant has produced copies of the quinquennial Terij (Exhibits J1 and J2 of the land and Jama of Mouza Fullia of the years 1207 and 1212). Exhibit J2 was of the year 1207, and it was a return submitted by the Talukdar Maharaja Tej Chandra and while it showed that the total jama of the Mouza was Rs. 298-11-2 the area in possession was only 1,157 bighas. Exhibit J1 was for the year 1212. This also showed the area to be 1,157 bighas and jama as Rs. 298-11-2, and was submitted by Ram Narain Chatterjee as "ijaradar" (under) "Zamindari of Maharaja Tej Chandra Bahadur". The learned Subordinate Judge observes: "the quinquennial register (produced by the plaintiff) was kept under Regulation XLVIII of 1793, while the Terij Exhibits J1 and J2 were only returns to be submitted under the Regulation; that it is not impossible, though it is difficult to be positive about it at this distance of time, that the returns embodied in the Terij might have been submitted with some motive; with regard to Exhibit 41 which is an extract from an authorized register no such suspicion can arise, and as such Exhibit 41 appears to be more reliable than the Terij Exhibits J1 and J2". It is also pointed out on behalf of the respondents in this Court that under section 12 of Regulation VIII of 1800, the quinquennial register was not to show the area of Mouzas, so that in 1212 (1805) when Exhibit J was filed it was no longer necessary to show the area. But no objection was taken to the admissibility of the documents Exhibits J1 and J2, and the Court below considered their comparative value. Although it might have been unnecessary for insertion in the register, they appear to have been submitted to, and accepted by the authorities, and in any case the statements made more than a century ago by persons who are dead are admissible in evidence. If Exhibits J1 and J2 are not returns, but entries in the register, they would be evidence as being entries in a public record made by a public servant in the discharge of his official duty. (Section 35 of the Evidence Act, first portion.) The area (1,157 bighas) given in Exhibit J1 is the same as that given in Exhibit J2 which was filed in 1207 (1800), i.e., in the very year in which the Permanent Settlement of the Taraf is alleged by the plaintiff to have been concluded with the Maharaja; and this return (Exhibit J2) was submitted by the Maharaja and not by an ijaradar. The Maharaja is described in Exhibit J2 as 'Talukdar', which indicates that it was before the Permanent Settlement. It appears, therefore, that the same area (1,157 bighas) which was shown as the area of the Mouza by the Maharaja in 1207, continued to be in the possession of the Maharaja in 1212 when Exhibit J2 was filed by his ijaradar after the Permanent Settlement. The learned Subordinate Judge was of opinion that the quinquennial register Exhibit 41 is more reliable than the returns Exhibits J1, J2; but they refer to two different periods; the register Exhibit 41 was for a period of 5 years commencing from 1202 (1795) which preceded the Permanent Settlement of the Taraf, whereas the Terij Exhibits J1 and J2 were for the years 1207 (1800) and 1212 (1805) respectively, and the latter Exhibit J1 was for a period subsequent to the Permanent Settlement. Exhibit J1 might possibly have been submitted by the ijaradar in order to help persons who were in possession under invalid Lakhraj right. However that may be, the fact remains that in 1205 the return submitted by the ijaradar under the Maharaja showed only 1,157 bighas as in his possession and there is no suggestion in the evidence that there was any other ijaradar. This was 2 years before the Patni was created, and is some evidence to show that a large quantity of land in the Mouza was in the possession of persons other than the Zamindar or the ijaradar under him.

Having regard to the fact that under section 103B of the Bengal Tenancy Act the onus is upon the plaintiff to prove that the entry in the Record of Rights is incorrect, to the facts admitted in the plaint, viz., that "imaginary" Lakhraj rights were set up even before the Permanent Settlement, that Maharaja Tej Chandra Bahadur was in khas possession only for a short period before granting the Patni, that until the Thak and Survey of 1852 the quantity of Mal lands had not been at all ascertained; and also to the facts that there is no evidence to show that any rent had ever been realized in respect of these lands, that the return Exhibit J1 showed only a small quantity of land in the possession of the Maharaja's ijaradar in 1212 (1805) and that the defendant and his predecessor-in-title have been in possession for a very long period without payment of rent, we think it was incumbent upon the plaintiff to show that the Zemindar was in possession of the lands in dispute at the date of the creation of the Patni, and that the incumbrance (the adverse possession) of the defendants came into existence after the date of the Patni. This the plaintiff has failed to show, because the quinquennial register is of a period prior to the Permanent Settlement, and there is no evidence going back to 1807 when the Patni was granted.

But even assuming that the Zemindar was in possession of the lands in dispute at the date of the grant of the Patni, and that the incumbrance of the defendant came into existence after the grant of the Patni, the plaintiff cannot succeed unless the incumbrance of the defendant has been annulled within one year from the date of the sale, or the date on which he first had notice of the incumbrance as prescribed by section 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The sale at which the plaintiff purchased the Patni became final on the 28th November 1900. The notice under section 167 was served upon the defendant No. 1 on the 27th June 1909; the plaintiff, therefore, must show that he had first had notice of the incumbrance within one year prior to the 27th June 1909. The learned Subordinate Judge observes:—"There is no direct evidence adduced on the plaintiff's side, but the circumstances proved would go to show that plaintiff could have no knowledge of the alleged Lakhraj claim before the defendant No. 1 set up that claim during the attestation proceedings. There is no evidence on the defendants' side also to show that at any time before the attestation proceedings, the plaintiff had any occasion to be apprised that the lands were claimed by defendant No. 1 as Lakhraj. I accordingly hold that the suit is not barred by one year's limitation as regards defendant No. 1, the notice having been served within one year from September 1908."

It appears, however, from the evidence of plaintiff's own witness Mangal Sardar, who is the plaintiff's halsana for 11 years, that when the plaintiff attempted to measure the lands of Mouza Fullia in 1307 (1900) the defendants stopped the measurement. This witness was formerly in the service of the Pal Chowdhurys of Baira (the co-sharers of the defendants Nos. 2 to 5) and he speaks to the possession of the said defendants for 40 years, and of the Broderick Sahab prior to that period. In the plaint itself it is stated that "on the plaintiff attempting to measure amicably those Mouzas and by appointing an Amin to determine the areas of lands in the possession of tenants and different persons and to measure the same for the purpose of ascertaining other particulars, the said Dar patnidar, the tenants, and other persons conspired and put obstacles to the measurement. So the plaintiff could not at all ascertain the Mal lands and could not get possession of the lands in claim." This attempt to measure the land as stated by the plaintiff's witness Mangal Sardar took place immediately after the plaintiff's purchase, i.e., in the year 1900. No steps were taken for the service of the notice under section 167 until 1909, although for about 9 years after the plaintiff's purchase, he had been kept out of the lands. The plaintiff, therefore, undoubtedly had notice of the possession of the defendants. It is contended on behalf of the plaintiff that possession for a period less than 12 years is not an incumbrance. But as pointed out in Kalikananda Mukherjee v. Bipro Das Pal Choudhuri (2), "the slightest enquiry such as a prudent owner would in ordinary course have made, would have disclosed that the occupants of the land claimed to hold them without payment of rent to the proprietor or his representatives." The plaintiff himself alleges in the plaint that imaginary revenue-free rights had been set up in collusion with *ijaradar*s from before the Permanent Settlement. He admits that about 9 years before the suit he has been prevented from measuring the land. He has not examined himself to show who he became aware of the incumbrance. Having regard to all the circumstances it is impossible to hold that the plaintiff became aware of the incumbrance of the defendants for the first time within one year before the 27th June 1909. We are accordingly of opinion that the suit is barred by reason of the fact that the incumbrance was not annulled within the time prescribed by section 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. It is unnecessary, therefore, to consider the question raised in Appeal No. 114 of 1912, viz, whether the right of defendants Nos. 2 to 5 is an incumbrance, whether any notice is required to be served upon those defendants and was as a matter of fact served upon them.

In the view we have taken, it is also unnecessary to consider the other contentions raised in the defendant's appeal.

The result is that Appeal No. 409 of 1911 is allowed and Appeal No. 114 of 1912 is dismissed and the suit dismissed with costs. In Appeal No. 409, the appellant will be entitled to half the costs of this Court including the costs of the supplementary paper-book which will be taxed.

Provincial Insolvency Act (III of 1907), s. 16—“Pending”, meaning of—Leave to commence suit, when to be obtained—Court, inherent authority of, to terminable proceedings in insolvency—Interpretation of Statutes—Words and phrases having technical meaning, interpretation of.

The first and most elementary rule of construction is that it is to be assumed that words and phrases are used in their technical meaning if they have acquired one. [p. 772, col. 1.]

A legal proceeding is said to be “pending,” as soon as commenced, and until it is concluded, that is, so long as the Court having original cognizance of it, can make an order on the matters in issue, or to be dealt with therein. [p. 772, col. 1.]

Firm of Gopaldas v. Pahlumal Hemannal, 30 Ind. Cas 37; 9 S. L. R. 34, overruled.

A Court has no inherent authority to terminate the proceedings in an insolvency and deny to creditors and debtors, the exercise of rights clearly conferred by Statute. [p. 772, col. 2.]

Insolvency proceedings would be considered as still ‘pending’ within the meaning of section 16 of the Provincial Insolvency Act where the Receiver has not yet been discharged and the insolvent has not applied for and obtained his discharge. [p. 772, col. 2.]

The ‘leave’ to commence a suit, referred to in section 16 (2) of the Provincial Insolvency Act should be obtained before the institution of the suit, and cannot be obtained subsequently to its institution. [p. 773, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

CROUCH, A. J. C.—This is an appeal against an order of Fawcett, A. J. C., dismissing a suit of the appellant on the ground that no leave to commence the suit had been granted by the Court exercising jurisdiction under the Provincial Insolvency Act.

Ghulam Hussain Sheikh Tayab had been adjudicated an insolvent in Insolvency Proceeding No. 1 of 1911. The insolvent had absconded and the matter proceeded in his absence. Such assets as could be discovered were realized, and a final dividend was declared and paid. On the matter being called up on the 6th August 1913 the insolvent was still absconding, and it was suggested that the matter should be put on the dormant file. The Court (Hayward, A. J. C.) passed the following order: “The insolvent has not appeared to claim discharge. The proceedings should, therefore, be struck off the file and sent to the Record Room.”

The present suit was filed on the 23rd September 1913, in respect of a debt which was proveable in the insolvency proceedings. The plaintiff had not obtained leave under section 16 of the Provincial Insolvency Act to file the suit, and a preliminary issue—“Is the suit maintainable because of the pendency of the insolvency proceedings against the defendant?” was decided in the negative and the suit was dismissed.

In his judgment the learned Judge held on the authority of Hawes, In re, Jeffery, Ex parte (1) and McHenry, Ex parte, McHenry, In re (2) that, as the Receiver had not been discharged, the proceedings were still pending, and that the leave mentioned in section 16 of the Act must be obtained previous to the institution of the suit.

Mr. Dipchand Chandumal, who appears for the appellant, has argued, firstly, that the proceedings were not pending, and, secondly, that in any case the proper order should have been not of dismissal, but of stay of the suit until the necessary leave had been obtained.

Now, the first and most elementary rule of construction is that it is to be assumed that words and phrases are used in their technical meaning if they have acquired one. When the Provincial Insolvency Act was drafted "pending", as applied to a legal proceeding, had been the subject of definition in several cases, and there was then no longer any doubt as to the meaning which Courts attached to it. Stroud, in the edition of 1890, refers to the cases decided up to that date, and states, "A legal proceedings is 'pending' as soon as commenced, and until it is concluded, that is, so long as the Court having original cognizance of it, can make an order on the matters in issue, or to be dealt with, therein." This definition was put in rather more emphatic terms by Jessel, M. R., in Clagett's Estate, In re, Fordham v. Clagett (3) and its correctness has not been impugned. As pointed out in the judgment of the lower Court, there were several orders which the Court could have made in the insolvency proceedings, in particular, the debtor could, at any time, have applied under section 44 for an order of discharge, and the Court could have passed an order granting or refusing it.

I accept Mr. Dipchand's contention that the two cases relied on by the lower Court constitute no safe guide to the construction of section 16, for, there is no provision in the Provincial Insolvency Act for the discharge of a Receiver.

It is clear from the judgment of the learned Judicial Commissioner in the case of Firm of Gopaldas v. Pahlumal Hemanmal (4), on which special reliance is placed by appellant, that it had not been brought to his notice that there was direct authority for construing the word "pending."

Mr. Dipchand urges that a Court has an inherent right to terminate any proceedings before it, and did so in intention and effect when it passed the order of 6th August 1913. He has, however, quite failed to convince me that the Court can arbitrarily terminate the proceedings in an insolvency and so debar the insolvent from obtaining his discharge, an unscheduled creditor from proving his debt, and the Receiver from getting in and distributing property of which he becomes aware at a late stage. He has nothing to appeal to beyond the vague and dangerous phrase "inherent authority", but no Court can have inherent authority to deny to creditors and debtors the exercise of rights clearly conferred by Statute. Nor did the Court in this case purport to finally bar all the rights of creditors or of the insolvent. The effect of the order was merely to strike off the matter from the list of those cases which it was the duty of the office to bring up before the Court from time to time for orders, and to place the record in the place appropriate to files which are not required for reference within any defined time. I would hold that the insolvency proceedings were still pending when the suit was commenced.

If the insolvency proceedings were pending, then section 16, prima facie, constituted a clear bar to the filing of the suit. If the full facts had been disclosed in the plaint itself, it would have been the duty of the Court to reject it under Order VII, rule 11, Civil Procedure Code, and if the plaint was liable to rejection it would seem to follow that the only course open to the Court on being informed of the bar was to dismiss the suit.

If we look exclusively to the clear words of the section, there can be no doubt whatever that in the absence of leave a creditor has no right of suit. This was the view taken by Davar, J., in In re Dwarkadas Tejchandras (5). As soon as the defendant has brought to the notice of the Court that the insolvency proceedings are still pending against him, the statement by plaintiff that he has "the leave of the Court" becomes a material proposition of fact which he must allege in order to show that he has a right to sue, and as soon as the Court realises that the plaint discloses no complete cause of action, dismissal is the only course, for, had the plaint frankly stated the full facts, it would have been rejected in limine, and no plaintiff can obtain a right of suit by deceiving the Court.

Again as pointed out in the judgment in Baloo Piroo v. Aladin Mitha (6), the Court exercising jurisdiction under the Insolvency Act can give leave only to "commence a suit"; it cannot give leave to continue a suit which has been instituted contrary to a rule of law. The Official Receiver and the debtor are, otherwise, amply protected against the final result of any suit; the provision that no creditor shall commence a suit without leave gives protection against a particular form of interference with the winding up of the estate. Under the Act no creditor is bound to prove in the insolvency, and the order of discharge does not release the insolvent from an unscheduled debt. Hence any unscheduled creditor who can obtain a decree can put pressure on the insolvent for the rest of his life, and, where the disclosed assets are insignificant, it may be more profitable to a creditor to institute a suit than to file a claim. But the winding up of the estate would be almost impracticable if a large number of creditors were to institute proceedings. The mere cost of ensuring that the estate was adequately protected in all the suits would waste a considerable portion of the assets, the books of accounts would have to be taken from Court to Court and the Official Receiver might in several cases have to appear in person. Hence if the trying Court condones the unlawful institution and merely stays the suit, while leave is being sought from the Court exercising insolvency jurisdiction, the Official Receiver can fairly claim that he has not received that special form of protection from proceedings in the ordinary Civil Courts to which he is clearly entitled.

The decisions cited by Mr. Dipchand, based as they are on Statutes with provisions essentially different from those of the Provincial Insolvency Act, afford little assistance in solving the problem before us. In Brownscombe v. Fair (7) the defendant against whom bankruptcy proceedings were pending applied that a suit instituted against him might be stayed under section 10 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, and it was held that the plaintiff should not be allowed to continue the action. There was no request that the suit should be dismissed, but the stay order was unconditional. The Provincial Insolvency Act contains no provisions similar to those of section 10 of the English Act and the only procedure by which relief similar to that conferred by an unconditional stay order can be given is dismissal. The decision in Firm of Gopaldas v. Pahlumal Hemanmal (4) followed that of the Privy Council in Mahammad Azmat Ali v. Lalli Bagum (8). That was a case under sections 4 and 6 of the Pensions Act, 1871, and it was held that the provision in section 6 that "A Civil Court, otherwise competent to try the same, shall take cognizance of any such claim upon receiving a certificate from such Collector" justified a Court in proceeding to hear a suit even though the plaintiff had not filed his certificate until some time after institution. "Cognizance" is defined by Webster as (1) "jurisdiction or the power given by law to hear and decide controversies; (2) the hearing of a matter judicially". Hence, the section was clearly open to the construction that a Court might proceed with the hearing on receiving a certificate.

Similarly, the word "entertain", which according to Webster means "(1) give reception to; (2) receive and take into consideration," was construed in Rendall v.

Blair (9) as equivalent to "proceed with the hearing." And this construction was adopted in Bundo Subrao v. Jambu Tarnappa (10) when section 47 of the Deccan Agriculturists' Relief Act was in question. Fernandez v. Rodrigues (11) was a case under section 30, Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), and it was held that the words "One or more of such parties may with the permission of the Court sue or be sued" enabled a plaintiff to obtain the permission after institution. This has been laid down in Srinivasa Chariar v. Raghava Chariar (12), Chennu Menon v. Krishnan (13) and Baldeo Bharti v. Bir Gir (14).

"To sue" is to proceed with an action and to follow it up to its proper termination (Webster) and, is obviously, not the same as "to commence an action."

But the Courts have not hesitated to dismiss any suit that has been instituted in clear breach of a rule of law. Thus, when a suit was brought in defiance of the provision in the Court of Wards Act (Bengal Act IX of 1879, section 55) that "no suit shall be brought on behalf of any ward...unless the same be authorized by some order of the Court", it was dismissed, Dinesh Chunder Roy v. Golam Mastapha (15). So also the terms of section 433, Civil Procedure Code, 1882, were strictly enforced in Chandulal Khushalji v. Awad (16).

I would hold, therefore, that the lower Court had no alternative but to pass the order complained against and would dismiss the appeal with costs.

PRATT, J. C.—I concur and resile from my judgment in Firm of Gopaldas v. Pahlumal Hemanmal (4). The word "pending" should be construed not as I there construed it, but in the sense that it was still possible to the Court to make an interlocutory order in the proceedings. This construction does not involve hardship for, in the circumstances of the present case, leave would have been given as a matter of course. I also agree that the suit could not have been stayed in order to enable the plaintiff to obtain leave. The Privy Council case under the Pensions Act is distinguishable for the reasons given in Chandulal Khushalji v. Awad (16).

The plaintiff should have obtained leave to withdraw from the suit with liberty to file a fresh suit when the bar of section 16 of the Provincial Insolvency Act was discovered. But this procedure cannot be adopted in appeal, Eknath Ranoji v. Ranoji Baraji (17).

The order made by the lower Court was, therefore, correct.

(Case-law considered.)

Appeal against the decree of the District Court, Akyab, in Civil Suit No. 276 of 1916.

Mr. Giles, for the Appellant.

Mr. N. M. Cowasjee (with him Mr. Lambert), for Respondent No. 3.

JUDGMENT.—In July 1910 the defendant-respondent Mg Tha Baw deposited the title-deeds of certain agricultural lands with the Bank of Bengal, Akyab, as security for advances made to him by the Bank from time to time. His indebtedness to the Bank fluctuated from month to month. On April 29th, 1914, he cleared his account with the Bank by two payments of Rs. 5,000 each but he allowed his title-deeds to remain in the possession of the Bank and on May 23rd, 1914, he took a fresh advance of Rs. 10,000. From that time onward his indebtedness to the Bank continued up to the date of the suit, the amount fluctuating between Rs. 10,000 and Rs. 62,500. The Bank admittedly during the whole period of their dealings with Mg. Tha Baw up to May 1916 made no enquiries as to the freedom of the property from encumbrances either at the Akyab Registration Office or at the Sub-Registration Office of the sub-district in which the lands were situated. It, therefore, entirely escaped the notice of the Bank that on the 21st May 1914, i.e., during the period when he was temporarily free from debt to the Bank, Mg. Tha Baw executed jointly with his wife a mortgage of certain of his lands to Rai Gyaw Thu and Co., a firm of money-lenders at Akyab, and that this mortgage was duly registered at the Sub-Registration Office at Myohoung where Tha Baw lives. This registered mortgage included some of the lands of which the title-deeds were with the Bank. The principal money secured by this registered mortgage was Rs. 30,000 but of this amount only Rs. 4,000 or Rs. 5,000—consisted of new money, the remainder representing sums due on a previous mortgage of 1911 to Rai Gyaw Thu & Co. and on certain promissory notes. When taking this mortgage the Company did not call for the title deeds of the lands but were satisfied with the production of some tax receipts and with the mortgagor's assurance that the property mortgaged by him was free from encumbrances, as in truth it was.

The Bank sued Tha Baw in this suit, No. 276 of 1916, for Rs. 20,557 due on two promissory notes, and in the four connected suits Nos. 277, 278, 279 and 281 they sued him for various sums due on other promissory notes; and in each of these five cases the Bank prayed for a mortgage decree against the property of which they hold the title-deeds. Rai Gyaw Thu & Co. as subsequent mortgagees were joined as co-defendants in all these suits. Mortgage decrees have been granted in favour of the Bank, but the District Court has ordered in each case that as regards the property mortgaged to the Bank on 21st May 1914 the mortgage of the Bank shall rank after the registered mortgage. The Bank appeals on the question of priority.

The District Court after referring to the authorities has held on the one hand that the registration of the Company's mortgage was not tantamount to notice to the Bank of the Company's mortgage, but the Court decided on the other hand that the Company had failed to do all that a reasonable and prudent man would have done in omitting to call for the title-deeds. But the Court also decided that the Bank had been wanting in prudence in abstaining from enquiry as to encumbrances before starting the fresh series of advances to Tha Baw, i.e., on May 23rd 1914. And the learned Judge's conclusion is that "as neither of the two creditors can be said to have done all that a reasonable and prudent man would have done to secure his position things must lie as they fall, and as regards the items of lands in dispute between the Bank and the Company the Company has priority."

The learned Counsel for the appellant supports the District Court's decision that registration is not tantamount to notice, but argues that the latter part of the judgment is in the nature of non sequitur for it imputes blame to the Bank for omitting to do what the earlier part of the judgment shows to be unnecessary. We are asked to hold also that Rai Gyaw Thu and Co. were guilty of gross neglect within the meaning of section 78 of the Transfer of Property Act in not demanding and looking after the title-deeds, as their omission to do so left the mortgagor in a position to hold himself out as unencumbered owner of the property.

Mr. Cowasjee for the respondent Company contends that section 78 of the Transfer of Property Act does not apply and that the Court should be guided only by the provisions of sections 79 and 80. Section 80 prevents the Bank from acquiring priority in respect of advances except in the case provided for in section 79, and that the section is clearly inapplicable because no maximum was expressed to be secured by Tha Baw's mortgage by deposit of the title deeds with the Bank. But section 80 does not override section 78. Section 80 merely prevents the Bank from getting priority by tacking its subsequent advances to any prior advance. It does not prevent the Bank from getting priority for its subsequent advances by showing that it was induced to make such subsequent advances through the fraud, misrepresentation or gross neglect of the prior registered mortgagee. No question of fraud or misrepresentation has been raised in this case. The question to be decided is whether in the circumstances described above the Court should impute gross neglect to Rai Gyaw Thu & Co. and whether such neglect on their part was a proximate cause of the Bank's action in advancing money to Tha Baw from May 23rd, 1914, onwards.

In England in former times a mortgagee who left the title-deeds with the mortgagor was liable to forfeit his priority even if there was no imputation of negligence. But this is not the present state of the law. In Northern Counties of England Fire Insurance Co. v. Whipp (1), a much less rigorous rule is laid down. According to that case the Court will not postpone the prior legal estate to the subsequent equitable estate on the ground of any mere carelessness or want of prudence on the part of the legal owner. Lord Justice Fry remarked that the omission to use ordinary care in enquiring after or keeping title-deeds may be, and in some cases has been, held to be sufficient evidence that the owner of the legal estate has assisted in or connived at the fraud which has led to the creation of a subsequent equitable estate without notice of the prior legal estate. But it appears that the English Law now imposes no duty to be careful as between an earlier and a later mortgagee and that the priority of the former can be displaced only where he has assisted in or connived at the fraud committed on the latter. It is obvious that in a country where compulsory registration of assurances is universal, the possession of title-deeds is of less importance as a badge of title than in England where registration is enforced only in certain limited areas. It would be unreasonable, therefore, to construe section 78 of the Transfer of Property Act as involving a more stringent rule than that now enforced in England. Moreover, what may in England amount to gross neglect sufficient to render the first mortgagee responsible for the fraud committed on the second mortgagee, should not necessarily be regarded in the same light where the first mortgage is registered under a system of compulsory public registration. Mortgages are frequently effected in this country without production of title-deeds, the mortgagees depending on the words of their mortgagors as to freedom from previous encumbrances and trusting to registration of their mortgages to protect them as regards future encumbrances.

The Bank in this case acted as if there was no Registration Act in force in this country and as if the mere possession of the title-deeds conferred an impregnable title on the Bank. The Bank continued to advance large sums of money month after month to Tha Baw without ever attempting to ascertain whether any encumbrance on the property was registered.

On the question whether registration of a mortgage is notice thereof to the whole world the Indian High Courts are not unanimous. The Bombay High Court has held that registration is notice.* The Allahabad High Court in Churaman v. Balli (2) held that where a deed of sale had been registered, a subsequent mortgagee who failed to search the register was guilty of gross negligence in not so doing and could not be treated as a bona fide mortgagee without notice. The Madras High Court until recently held that registration was not notice. Vide Damodara v. Somasundara (3), Shan Maun Mull v. Madras Building Co. (4) and Madras Building Co. v. Rowlandson (5), but the later judgment in Rangasami v. Annamalai (6) shows a marked change of opinion on the subject. It was held in that case that the failure of a prior mortgagee to obtain the title-deeds from his mortgagor did not in the circumstances of the case amount to gross negligence within the meaning of section 78 of the Transfer of Property Act, and that in considering what amounts to gross negligence on the part of the prior mortgagee one of the circumstances to be taken into account in this country is that a universal system of registration is established by law. The decision of Mr. Justice Jenkins in the Calcutta case of Monindra Chandra Nandy v. Troyluckho Nath Burat (7) contains an expression of opinion showing that the learned Judge was in favour of the Bombay practice, by which registration is regarded as notice. He said: "The existence of gross negligence must be determined according to the circumstances of each case, and one of the circumstances to be taken into consideration here is the fact that in this country a universal system of registration exists. Registration is prescribed by Statute, and he, who registers his deed promptly, reaps the reward of his care and diligence in the security and priority he thereby gains." He also cited the remarks of Lord Cairns in Agra Bank Ltd. v. Barry (8) beginning with the words, "Has it ever been decided with regard to a Registration Act such as that prevailing in Ireland that negligence in not asking for the title-deeds or not taking up the title-deeds shall postpone...security?" Mr. Justice Jenkins said that though the circumstances of that case differed from those with which he had to deal, the Lord Chancellor was enunciating a general principle which furnished a useful guide on the point which called for his decision. It was a case in which, as in the present case, the subsequent mortgagee had neglected to search for prior encumbrances in the Registration Office. This case has not been followed by the Calcutta High Court in the later case of Nanda Lal Roy v. Abdul Aziz (9), in which that Court re-affirmed the rule which had hitherto been followed in the Calcutta High Court that registration is not per se notice. It is clear, however, that there is now a preponderance of authority in the Indian High Courts in favour of the view that a subsequent mortgagee who has willfully abstained from the obvious course of searching in the Registration Office cannot obtain priority to an earlier registered mortgagee merely on the ground that the latter did not call for the title deeds and retain them in his control.

The appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

The decision in Civil First Appeal No. 111 of 1917 governs also Civil First Appeals Nos. 112, 113, 114 and 115. These four appeals are, therefore, also dismissed with costs.

Appeal against the decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Chitagong, dated the 22nd of May 1916, modifying that of the Munsif, 3rd Court at that place, dated the 20th of August 1914.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Dr. Dwarka Nath Mitter (with him Babu Rishendra Nath Sarkar), for the Appellants.—The plaintiff is the appellant. This was a suit to recover possession of two holdings recorded in the Cadastral Survey as Dags Nos. 3132 and 3125. Certain defendants set up dartaluqs under an estate Taraff Mohamad, Touzi No. 128. Other defendants pleaded that they took as actual cultivators under the taluqdars. The first Court held that the defendants were able to establish durtaluqs and dismissed the plaintiff's suit for khas possession. Appellate Court reversed the decision and gave the plaintiff a decree for possession through cultivators.

In Hajra Sardara v. Kunja Behari Nag (1) it was held that long possession merely would not entitle a tenant to acquire a right of occupancy.

Babu Atindra Nath Mukherjee, for the Respondents.—Finding is that the cultivators are occupancy *raiya*s.

[FLETCHER, J.—You must prove a better title against the landlord as you are a trespasser.]

I am in possession from 1903.

[FLETCHER, J.—That does not matter: possession must be in good faith; you cannot have a right of occupancy if you cultivated the land as a trespasser.]

I was in bona fide possession. I executed a kabuliyat in favour of the landlords and did other acts to show my bona fides. It has been held in Kali Prosanna Das v. Bhagaban Mali (2) that if a person is settled on the land as a raiya by a trespasser, when his name is recorded in the Settlement Record as a raiya he is to be treated as a raiya by the Zemindar and cannot be ejected.

[FLETCHER, J.—You are a trespassing raiya, you hold under a trespasser and it has been held by judicial decisions that if a raiya bona fide believes that he is a cultivator then he is entitled to acquire rights of occupancy. If the finding is not clear on the point as to whether you took settlement bona fide, then the case must be remanded in order to find out whether the cultivator took settlement under a bona fide belief that the alleged taluqdar or dur-taluqdar had a right to make such a settlement.]

JUDGMENT.—The only question raised in this appeal is this: whether the plaintiff is entitled to evict the actual cultivators who are the defendants Nos. 2, 3, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 14 and 15. It is found that the alleged taluqdars and the durtaluqdars have no interest in the property. The actual cultivators claim possession under an alleged settlement from the alleged durtaluqdars. The decisions of this Court show that the actual cultivator who honestly and bona fide believed that the person who settled him on the land had a right to settle him may, after a period of years, acquire a right in the land as a raiya. The learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court in the present case has made no finding as to whether these cultivators defendants bona fide believed that the alleged dur-taluqdars had the right to settle them on the land of which they took settlement. The decree of the lower Appellate Court is accordingly set aside as regards the cultivating defendants, namely, the defendants Nos. 2, 3, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 14 and 15, and the case is sent back to that Court to have the question determined as to the belief of the said actual cultivators as stated above. Costs of this appeal will abide the result of the further hearing by the learned Subordinate Judge as directed.

PUZHAKKAL EDOM V. MAHDEVA PATTAR.

In a suit by the members of a Tarwad to remove the Karnavan from office, the Court passed an injunction restraining the latter from contracting loans to manage the property. The Karnavan nevertheless borrowed money for the necessary purposes of the Tarwad while the injunction was in force. In a suit by the creditor for repayment of the loan:

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of South Malabar at Palghat in Original Suit No. 49 of 1915 and application praying that in the circumstances stated in the affidavit filed therewith the High Court will be pleased to amend the decree in the said Original Suit No. 49 of 1915 in respect of the amount of proportionate costs to plaintiff.

Mr. C. V. Ananthakrishna Aiyar, for the Appellant.

Messrs. T. R. Ramachandra Aiyar and A. S. Venku Aiyar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The first question argued before us is on the merits of the case. As a matter of fact, money was advanced by the respondent as alleged by him, and we think there was necessity on the part of the Karnavan who held the office previous to the appellant to borrow money for Tarwad purposes. As regards the fact of the advances, the only evidence is on the side of the respondent which supports his case, and that case is corroborated by the production of receipts obtained from different persons to whom payments were made either on account of maintenance, or salaries or for payment of kist. No doubt, the respondent himself was in debt to a large extent but he gives evidence that he borrowed money from different persons in order to make a loan to Andi Achan. He brought the loan to the notice of the Court and it must have been known to the appellant in the suit.

On the question of necessity the Edom consists of 160 members and the income, all told, taking it at the highest, does not amount to more than Rs. 12,000 a year, and the admission of the appellant himself is to the effect that unless jungle trees are leased from time to time the income is not sufficient to meet the maintenance charges, after paying the necessary outgoings. There is evidence to show that at the time when Andi Achan borrowed from the respondent he had large payments to make amounting to nearly Rs. 3,000 and he did make this payment in full. We are, therefore, unable to say that the finding of the Subordinate Judge on this point is wrong.

Then it is pointed out that the present appellant and a number of other members of the family had instituted a suit against Andi Achan for removing him from the Karnavan's office and in the course of that suit an injunction was obtained restraining him from managing the property. We take it that the effect of the different orders passed in that connection was to prohibit his contracting loans. Because the injunction seems to be very widely worded—restraining Andi Achan from carrying on the management of the property which would have authorised him to contract loans for the purpose—he however obtained permission afterwards to raise Rs. 3,000 by leasing jungle trees. But then the evidence shows that he was unable to find such a lessee. Therefore he applied to the respondent and obtained from him the amount on the bond in this suit. It has been argued that since there was an injunction restraining Andi Achan from borrowing money, this bond executed to the respondent is not enforceable even though the money was advanced for necessary purposes of the family and was utilised for such purposes. We have not been referred to any authority which supports the proposition, for the English case, Eastern Trust Co. v. McKenzie, Mann & Co., Ltd., (1), cited by Mr. C. V. Ananthakrishna Aiyar does not seem to touch the question at all. On the other hand, the ruling in the Delhi & London Bank v. Ram Narain (2) which has been followed in Manohar Das v. Ram Autar Pande (3) lays down the law to the contrary. We think the effect of an injunction like this is what is laid down in the Civil Procedure Code, and it will be going much too far to say that a person in the position of Andi Achan being so restrained is not liable to repay the money which he has in fact borrowed, and if the money was borrowed and utilised for the benefit of the Tarwad that the Tarwad is not liable. We, therefore, uphold the judgment of the Subordinate Judge and dismiss the appeal with costs.

As regards the application for amendment of the decree we think that it must be allowed. The proportionate cost which the Subordinate Judge has directed as being payable to respondent is Rs. 432-10-1. In this he has proceeded on a wrong basis, because the only amount for which deduction has to be made is the Court-fee; and calculating on that basis, the costs payable in the lower Court to the respondent would be Rs. 573-10-1. The decree will be modified accordingly.

The weight to be attached to a statement in a rent receipt or any other document is a matter within the cognisance of the Court of first appeal, with which the High Court in second appeal is not entitled to interfere. [p. 780, col. 1.]

The mere statement in some rent receipts that a holding is sarasari is not sufficient to rebut the presumption arising under section 50 (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act from the fact that the rent has been unchanged for more than 50 years. [p. 781, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Special Judge of Jalpaiguri, dated the 20th of November 1916, affirming that of the Assistant Settlement Officer of that place, dated the 22nd of September 1915.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Nagendra Nath Ghose, for the Appellants.—The question for determination in this appeal is whether the presumption arising under section 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act by the production of rent receipts for more than twenty years at a uniform rate, has been sufficiently rebutted by the plaintiff landlord. The literal meaning of the word sarasari used in the rent receipts is loose. Even according to the finding of the learned Judge the word sarasari means that the rent is enhanceable. If that is so, when the rent receipts proved by the tenant in support of his case contain the word sarasari, the lower Appellate Court has erred in holding that the presumption under section 50 has not been rebutted. The plaintiff is entitled to make use of that statement in the rent receipts in showing that the tenant cannot claim to hold at fixed rent or rate of rent. If your Lordships decide the case on a proper interpretation of the word sarasari, the judgment of the lower Appellate Court cannot stand.

Babu Jitendra Kumar Sen Gupta, for the Respondents, was not called upon.

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—This appeal is preferred by the plaintiffs against the decision of the learned Special Judge of Jalpaiguri, dated the 20th November 1916, affirming the decision of the Assistant Settlement Officer of the same place. The only question is whether the learned Judge of the Court of Appeal below was right in holding that the landlords had not rebutted the presumption arising under section 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The tenants have proved that their rent has been unchanged for over 50 years, and the learned Judge remarks that it is exceedingly improbable in that view that the tenancy was originally a temporary one. What is relied on is this, that the word sarasari appears in some rent receipts. The learned Judge states that the mere statement in some rent receipts that the holding is sarasari would not be, in his opinion, sufficient to rebut the presumption under section 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The learned Judge, in my opinion, was clearly entitled to come to that conclusion. The weight to be attached to a statement in a rent receipt or any other document is obviously a matter within the cognisance of the learned Judge and, he having arrived at that conclusion, I do not think we are entitled to displace the finding he has arrived at. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

[p. 783, cols. 1 & 2.]

Mr. J. R. Das, for the Appellant.

Mr. Leach, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

ORMOND, J.—The plaintiff petitioner and defendant-respondent were partners in two timber businesses carried on, one at Rangoon and the other at Moulmein. The Rangoon business ceased before the Moulmein business began. The defendant financed the business and kept the books. The plaintiff executed a promissory note for Rs. 4,500 in favour of the defendant as being his share of the loss in the Moulmein business and the note is dated

4th of April 1914. On the 27th of April 1914 the plaintiff executed what has been styled a "release" in favour of the defendant. It is to the effect that the plaintiff had no liability for any loss and no right to any profit in the partnership business. The defendant sued the plaintiff on the promissory note and obtained a decree in Civil Regular Suit No. 125 of 1915. The case of the plaintiff, who was the defendant in that suit, was that the amount due from him on the promissory note was cancelled by the "release." The District Judge found that the promissory note had in fact been made on the same day that the "release" was executed and gave the defendant a decree on the promissory note, i.e., he found that the debt on the promissory note had not been cancelled by the "release" but that the promissory note was executed in pursuance of a settlement of accounts which resulted in the "release". The plaintiff instituted a suit against the defendant (Civil Regular No. 46 of 1916) asking for a dissolution of both partnerships and for accounts to be taken in both the businesses. That suit was dismissed for the reason given in the judgment in Suit No. 125 of 1915. The plaintiff then applied in review against the order of dismissal, and the suit was restored as to the Rangoon business only but remained dismissed as regards the Moulmein business, and the release was taken to refer only to the Moulmein business. The plaintiff then sued to set aside the release dated the 28th of April 1914 on the ground of fraud (Civil Regular No. 86 of 1916). The fraud alleged was that certain items were omitted by the defendant in the partnership books of account, namely, certain sale proceeds and other items which are specified in paragraph 6 of the plaint. Suits Nos. 46 and 86 of 1916 were heard together. On the 8th of March 1917 both parties appeared by Pleaders and the District Judge recorded an order by consent in the Diary which is as follows:—

"By agreement Messrs. Buchanan and Eusoof are appointed Commissioners to examine the accounts, fees Rs. 200 a side, in both cases. The Commissioners will be given access to all documents bearing on the matters at issue. There will be a preliminary decree accordingly, in each suit." On that order a preliminary decree for dissolution of partnership was drawn up according to form 21 of Schedule D of the Code. The date of the dissolution was given as the 8th of March 1917, i.e., the date of the consent order. The defendant made an oral application for the amendment of the decree to alter the date of the dissolution from the 8th of March 1917 to the actual and admitted date of dissolution, viz., 28th of April 1914. On the 7th of September 1917 the District Judge held that there was no necessity to alter the date. Then on the 20th of September 1917 the defendant put in an application with an eight-anna stamp asking the Court "to amend the decree or to review it or to take up the case de novo as it was obvious that there was a mistake or error on the face of the decree." The District Judge held that the application was an application for the amendment of the decree under section 152 of the Civil Procedure Code, and he dealt with it only on that footing. It may be noted that as an application for review the application was clearly barred by limitation and moreover was not properly stamped. On the 14th of December 1917 the District Judge held that the order of 8th March 1917 was a consent order for these Commissioners to be appointed in order to examine the accounts and to report if there was any fraud and that under Order XXVI, rule 16, the Commissioners would have power to examine any witnesses who were necessary, as it was unlikely that fraud could be detected by the mere perusal of accounts. The learned Judge held that he had erred in adopting the form of preliminary decree No. 21, Schedule D, and that instead of the order being for "a preliminary decree" it should have been for "an order". He adjourned the hearing for parties to agree as to the form which the amendment of the preliminary decree should take. On the 18th December 1917 the District Judge heard the Advocates of the parties and on the 28th December he passed an order cancelling the consent order of the 8th March, on the ground that the parties were not "ad idem." From that order the plaintiff-petitioner applies to this Court in revision.

It is clear that the parties had agreed on the 8th March that these two Commissioners should take the accounts and the District Judge so found on the 14th December. In my opinion the District Judge had no jurisdiction, upon an application to amend the decree (or the formal order) so as to bring it into conformity with the judgment, to annul the order.

Mr. Leach, for the respondent, contends that the District Judge having jurisdiction to entertain the application, this Court cannot interfere in revision. He relies upon the recent pronouncement by the Privy Council upon section 115 of the Code, contained in the case of Balakrishna Udayar v Vasudeva Aiyar (1), and he cites a recent case decided by Mr. Justice Rigg, Ko San Hla v. Maung Po Thet (2), in which the learned Judge has apparently held that the decision in Zeya v. Mi On Kra Zan (3) is shown to be not good law by the above Privy Council ruling. The learned Counsel also cites the recent case of Kumar Chandra Kishore Roy Chowdhury v. Basat Ali Chowdhury (4).

Section 115 of the Code allows revision if it appears that the lower Court (a) exercised a jurisdiction which it had not, or (b) failed to exercise a jurisdiction which it had or (c) acted in the exercise of its jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity.

In Zeya v. Mi On Kra Zan (3) it was held by a Bench of this Court, that where the lower Court has applied its mind to the case and duly considered the facts and the law applicable, then, although its decision may be erroneous, the error cannot be corrected on revision, but that if the lower Court has failed to take into account some proposition of law or some material fact in evidence, it has acted illegally and its decision may be revised.

In the Privy Council case above cited the District Judge under section 10 of the Bengal and Madras Native Religious Endowments Act ordered a Committee to elect a member. The High Court on revision set aside the order on the ground that the District Judge had no jurisdiction to pass such an order under section 10. On appeal to the Privy Council the decision of the High Court was upheld. The effect of the Privy Council judgment is that a wrong construction of the section by the District Judge would not have been a ground for revision if it had not involved a question of jurisdiction; but inasmuch as he had by such wrong construction assumed a jurisdiction which he did not possess, the High Court could interfere in revision. The judgment does not deal with clause (c) of section 115, beyond paraphrasing it as "the irregular exercise of jurisdiction." I can find nothing in this judgment which is inconsistent with the decision in Zeya's case (3).

In Chandra Kishore's case (4) the question before the District Judge was whether property which had been sold by the Court had fetched an adequate price. The property was admittedly a 2/3rds share in a certain Taluk, but the District Judge erroneously assumed that it was only a 1/3rd share and upon that assumption he found the price realised was adequate. Upon application in revision to the High Court the two Judges disagreed as to whether an application for revision would lie under section 115. Upon appeal to a Bench of 3 Judges, 2 Judges held that the High Court could not interfere in revision: the District Judge having merely come to an erroneous conclusion of fact. With great respect I do not agree with this decision. Supposing all the facts of a case are admitted but the Judge erroneously assumes them to be exactly the opposite, the injured party would then have no remedy in revision. The question I think resolves itself into this: was the method irregular by which the conclusion of fact or of law was arrived at? If the Judge arrives at a conclusion of law or of fact without having considered the law or a material part of the evidence, or by misunderstanding or erroneously recording the statements of Pleaders or witnesses, the method of arriving at such conclusion is illegal and irregular, and is a ground for revision; provided the irregularity is material and the petitioner has suffered an injustice thereby.

The present case is one of acting without jurisdiction in annulling the consent order upon an application to bring the formal order into conformity with the judgment, rather than of arriving at a conclusion of fact in an irregular manner. I would set aside the order of the District Judge of the 28th December 1917 and restore the consent order of 8th March 1917 for the accounts to be taken by the Commissioners. The costs of this application (5 gold mohurs) should. I think, abide the event.

TWOMEY, C. J.—I concur. The Privy Council case reported as Balkrishna Udayar v. Vasudeva Aiyar (1) does not, in my opinion, restrict the scope of section 115, Code of Civil Procedure, as expounded in Zeya v. Mi On Kra Zan (3).

Order set aside.

JUDGMENT.

PRATT, J. C.—This is an appeal from an order made by the learned Additional Judicial Commissioner staying under section 19 of the Indian Arbitration Act, 1899, a suit filed by the plaintiffs-appellants against the respondents.

The suit was upon a contract under which the defendants had agreed to sell to the plaintiffs cotton at the rate of Rs. 35-2-0 a maund deliverable in January not later than the 25th. The plaintiffs contended that the defendants had committed a breach of this contract by failing to deliver and the suit was for damages for that breach. The contract was on Karachi Indian Merchants Association terms and contained an arbitration clause which was in the following form:—

"Any dispute whatsoever, including construction of this document, arising out of this contract shall be referred to the arbitration of two merchants who are members of the Karachi Indian Merchants Association under the provisions of the Indian Arbitration Act, 1899, as subsequently amended."

"If one party fails to appoint an arbitrator for 7 clear days after the party having appointed his arbitrator has served the party making default with a written notice to make the appointment, the party who has appointed an arbitrator may appoint that arbitrator to act as sole arbitrator in the reference."

"Should the two arbitrators be unable to agree the dispute shall be referred to an Umpire nominated by the said arbitrators. If the two arbitrators are unable to agree to an Umpire, the latter shall be nominated by the Managing Committee of the Karachi Indian Merchants Association. The decision of the arbitrators or the Umpire, as the case may be, shall be final and binding."

To enforce this agreement of reference the defendants applied for stay of the suit. It was prima facie the duty of the Court to act on the agreement and stay the suit and the onus was, therefore, on the plaintiffs to show cause why the suit should not be stayed.

The plaintiffs did show cause and called evidence but the lower Court ordered the suit to be stayed without calling upon the defendants.

The case against stay of the suit was based on two main grounds. In the first place, plaintiffs contended that the tribunal of arbitration constituted under the agreement of reference would not be impartial and that there was the reasonable prospect of bias. In the second place, they contended that there would be difficulties in constituting the tribunal of arbitration as the class from which the arbitrators were to be selected could not easily be ascertained with the result that even if parties went to arbitration, the award might be impeached on the ground that the arbitrators nominated did not belong to the class and were not empowered to act.

Now on the first point the plaintiffs showed to the satisfaction of the lower Court that the market rate of ready cotton on due date was Rs. 57-59 per maund, whereas contracts made on the Indian Merchants Association terms had been settled at Rs. 41 to 43½. Plaintiffs contended that this lower rate was not an actual market rate but an artificial rate under which certain contracts had been settled or compromised by cross-contracts. The plaintiffs urged that the parties would more certainly appoint arbitrators one in favour of the higher and the other in favour of the lower rate and that the final decision would, therefore, rest with the Umpire selected by the members of the Managing Committee of the Karachi Indian Merchants Association. They then gave evidence that the majority of this Managing Committee were either pecuniarily interested in the lower rate or were in favour of the lower rate; and contended that the arbitration would be vitiated by the bias of the Umpire.

The lower Court thought that the arbitration might never reach the Umpire. It expressed a hope that each party would appoint an independent arbitrator and these arbitrators might be able to settle the matter without the appointment of an Umpire. Possibly this pious hope might be realized but that does not conclude the matter. If the agreement of reference provides that the final decision should rest with an Umpire who is biased, that is surely a matter which the Judge should consider when exercising his discretion as to whether or not he should surrender his jurisdiction to try the suit.

Mr. Kalumal contends that the fact that the members of the Managing Committee are in favour of the lower rate is not evidence of bias, for that lower rate is an actual market rate. His case is that cotton delivered under the Karachi Indian Merchants Association terms is cotton of an inferior quality and fetches lower price because the condition as to place of delivery is not so favourable as in the case of cotton bought under the other contract terms prevailing in the market. But this was not the view of the lower Court. The judgment does not proceed on this ground. The learned Additional Judicial Commissioner held that the lower rate of the Association contract is due to the fact that in these contracts there is no intention to give or take delivery. This finding is altogether outside the pleadings. It is not the case of either party that delivery was not intended. Moreover that finding would involve the conclusion not only that the main contract is void as one of wager, but also that the collateral contract of reference to arbitration is equally invalid.

On the question of bias, therefore, it seems to me that there is a case for defendants to rebut.

The second ground arises out of the Rules of the Karachi Indian Merchants Association. The plaintiffs contend that if both the arbitrators and the Umpire are to be appointed from among members of the Association and its Managing Committee, it should be reasonably certain who those members are. The annual report of the Association gives a list of members which includes several firms, implying that every partner of the firm named is a member. On the other hand rule 1 (2) of the Rules of the Association says expressly that not more than one member of the firm shall be admitted as a member. The Judge seeks to reconcile this discrepancy by suggesting that the name of the firm in the list of the members in the annual report is falsa descriptio of the name of the actual partner who is a member. But there is no evidence to support this explanation and it is not that given by the Secretary. Mr. Kalumal seeks to reconcile the list of the members with the rule, first, by suggesting that each firm had a right to appoint a representative who alone is a member; and secondly, by suggesting that all the partners of the firm are members, but that only one partner is an active member while the other members are passive members. With reference to Mr. Kalumal's first explanation if only the representatives were members, their names would appear in the list. But the names of no representatives appear either in the list or in the report of the proceedings. And with reference to Mr. Kalumal's second explanation the rules make no distinction between the active members and the passive members. These different explanations show that Mr. Kalumal himself is in doubt as to who the members are.

GOVERDHANDAS VISHINDAS RATANCHAND V. RAMCHAND MANJIMAL.

They also introduce further elements of uncertainty. Who are the representatives whose names are not recorded anywhere? Are the passive members qualified to act as arbitrators, or to take part in the appointment of the Managing Committee? Again if all partners of the firms are members, the very fact of partnership might be a source of dispute for the constitutions of the firms vary from time to time. This uncertainty as to the membership reflects on the constitution of the Managing Committee, for if that membership is in doubt then the membership of the Managing Committee which is selected by the Association must be equally doubtful. Rule 2 (e) of the rules providing for the appointment of the successor to a member of the Managing Committee appears to assume that all the partners of the firms are members and conflicts with rule 1 (2) which provides that only one partner can be a member.

It is no answer to these objections that the contracting parties are bound by the rules and that their agreement should be construed as referring to de facto members, for the doubt arises as to the meaning of the rules and the fact of membership.

It may be that these matters are capable of being made certain and that the agreement of reference is not void, but the plaintiffs' case is that the rules are so imperfectly drafted and the Association so loosely constituted that the establishment of a valid tribunal of arbitration would be a matter of considerable difficulty and that the Court should for that reason hesitate to enforce arbitration.

On this ground also it seems to me that plaintiffs have made out a prima facie case against stay.

I would also observe that the order of stay made by the lower Court for a period of two months is an order which is not contemplated by section 19 of the Arbitration Act. An order of stay for a limited time involves this difficulty that at the expiry of that time the suit automatically revives although the arbitration may still be pending. There is thus the conflict of jurisdiction which, as pointed out in the case of Doleman v. Osselt Corporation (1), (1) (1912) 3 K. B. 257; 81 L. J. K. B. 1092; 107 L. T. 581; 76 J. P. 457; 10 L. G. R. 915.

the provision for stay of suit is designed to obviate. The Judge has to decide whether the Court or the arbitrator should exercise jurisdiction. If he decides in favour of the arbitrator he declines jurisdiction; and any future revival of the suit should depend on a future order on proper cause being shown.

I would, therefore, remand the appeal to the lower Court with the direction to record the evidence cited by the respondent.

This evidence is embodied in a list of witnesses and documents to be put in by Mr. Kalumal to-day. Evidence to be certified to this Court within a week.

FAWCETT, A. J. C.—There can be no doubt that there is a considerable divergence between the Association Rules, as to membership both of the Association and its Managing Committee, and the practice which appears to have been generally followed. It would certainly seem advisable for the Association to take steps to make either the practice conform with the rules or the rules conform with the practice.

But I think it is important to bear in mind that we are not now considering the validity of some act either of the Association or its Managing Committee to which the doctrine of ultra vires would be applicable. The question of the validity of the present practice arises only incidentally in connection with clause 17 of the contract, and the first thing to be decided is the meaning to be assigned to the words "members of the Karachi Indian Merchants Association" and "the Managing Committee of the Karachi Indian Merchants Association." It is at the present stage desirable to say as little as possible on the main point in controversy and to avoid prejudging any of them. But I think it may safely be said that, at any rate, in my opinion, there are grounds for the contention that what the parties in making this contract had in contemplation was the actual Association and its Managing Committee, as constituted in practice, whether that constitution was actually valid or invalid. If so, the most that could be said is, I think, that both parties were under a mistake of fact as to the validity of their constitution. But, unless it was an implied term of this contract that the members of the Association and its Managing Committee had been validly appointed in accordance with the Rules of the Association, I do not think that the Court could hold that the matter, on which there was this mutual mistake, was one essential to the agreement, so as to make it void under section 20 of the Contract Act. In support of this I may refer to Debendra Nath Dutt v. Administrator-General of Bengal (2). There the sureties who had given a bond for due administration of the estate in a case where the Letters of Administration had been obtained by fraud, were held bound by their bond, although the sureties were unaware of this fraud and were under the mistaken belief that the Letters of Administration had been validly granted. It was held that the liability of the sureties under the administration bond did not depend on the validity or the invalidity of the grant; and this decision was upheld by the Privy Council on appeal, Debendra Nath Dutt v. Administrator-General of Bengal (3). If the real agreement was what I have already stated, then I do not think that this objection is one which can be raised by the plaintiffs, especially as all except one are members of the Association and some of them are also members of the Managing Committee. I am not disposed, therefore, as things stand, to interfere on this particular ground with the discretion exercised by the lower Court. I also do not think that the plaintiffs have shown that it is impossible in any case to obtain two arbitrators, and if necessary an Umpire, from among the members of the Association or the Managing Committee who had been validly appointed under the Rules of the Association. I know of no warrant for saying that a mere possible difficulty on this point would justify the Court in refusing to stay the suit. It is, I think, on a very similar footing to the question of bias, and it has often been held that a mere suspicion of possibility of bias is not sufficient to justify interference with an agreement for arbitration. Similarly, I think that a mere possibility in a technical point of this description is not ordinarily sufficient to justify the Court in refusing to stay a suit under section 19 of the Arbitration Act.

But the other objection raised by the plaintiffs is, I think, on a more substantial basis, and I concur generally with what the Judicial Commissioner has said on that point. I do not think that the assumptions made by the Court below are justifiable in the circumstances of this case. They might be justifiable, if the arbitrators had to be chosen from a body of archangels. But the Court cannot rightly lose sight of the fact that they have to come from a body of traders, with whom their financial interests would generally outweigh any other factor likely to influence them. We have the main fact established that the majority of the Managing Committee are in favour of a lower rate in the neighbourhood of Rs. 40 as opposed to a higher rate in the neighbourhood of Rs. 59, which the plaintiffs say is the proper rate to be fixed. It is, I think, at any rate at the present stage, unnecessary to decide which is the proper rate; that is more for the Court or arbitrators or Umpire who may eventually have to deal with the dispute on its merits. But the fact that the majority of the Managing Committee are in favour of the defendant's contention certainly affords basis for bringing the case within the general rule that an order of stay will not be granted, if it can be shown that there is good ground for apprehending that the arbitrator will not act fairly in the matter (Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume I, page 453). There are abnormal circumstances in this case which differentiate it from the ordinary one, and I think that the plaintiffs have made out a prima facie case in regard to this point, which it is for the other side to rebut, if they can. I, therefore, concur in the order proposed by my learned colleague.

PRATT, J. C.—The evidence of the defendants has now been certified before us and on the question of bias it does not establish the contention raised at the last hearing that there is a different market rate for cotton purchased on Association terms. Such contracts had been settled in January at a lower rate, but a settlement rate is clearly not a market rate, for it is controlled by other factors such as the solvency of the seller or the urgency of the buyer's need for cash.

It is, however, contended that the market rate is for the arbitrator to decide and that if the Court considers the rate as affecting the question of bias it would be usurping the functions of the arbitrator. And further it is contended that the plaintiffs knew that members of the Managing Committee were dealers in cotton and that on the terms of the reference it was a reasonable expectation that a 'bear' might be an Umpire and be in favour of a lower rate. As to these contentions I may remark incidentally that they are diametrically opposed to the defence raised in the lower Court. The defendants' case there was that the Managing Committee were either disinterested or were in favour of a higher rate. But apart from that I do not think the arguments now put forward are sound. It may be admitted that the same strict rule of bias which applies to a Judge does not apply to an arbitrator chosen by parties. If the plaintiff's only complaint was that a 'bear' might be appointed Umpire, he would be estopped for it was a reasonable expectation on the terms of the contract that the 'bear' might be so appointed. It might also have been anticipated that if a 'bear' were appointed Umpire, he would be in favour of the lower rate if there were two market rates. But the defendants have failed to prove that there is a lower market rate and plaintiff could not reasonably anticipate that the Umpire would be in favour of a rate which was not a market rate at all. There is, therefore, no estoppel against the plaintiff. And in considering the question of rate we are not usurping the functions of the arbitrator, for we do not decide which of two market rates is the proper one but merely that a particular rate is not a market rate at all. On this our conclusion is that the class from which the arbitrator is to be selected is interested in declaring that to be a market rate which is not a market rate.

An arbitration tribunal in which the ultimate decision rests with the nominee of the class having such an interest is not an impartial tribunal.

The defendants attempt to meet this objection by undertaking that the members of the Managing Committee who have this pecuniary interest will not take part in the appointment of an Umpire. This seems to me to make their case worse. It is an attempt to improve upon the agreement of reference by amending the procedure for the appointment of an Umpire and it is, therefore, an admission that the arbitration under terms of the reference will not be impartial.

It is also contended that the Court should not interfere unless and until the arbitrators disagree and the reference to an Umpire becomes necessary. But the Court must decide the question of stay when the application is made and on materials before it. When it finds that the agreement of reference to arbitration provides for the appointment of an Umpire who will most certainly tilt the scales against one party, the Court should retain its jurisdiction to try the suit.

It has also been said that it is a serious thing to interfere with a mercantile arbitration which, as Lord Sumner said in the case of Produce Brokers Co. v. Olympia Oil & Cake Co. (4), is a system devised by mercantile men to suit their needs and (which) has been found to be highly beneficial to business. There is a great force in this argument and the Court should always approach the question of stay with a bias in favour of keeping the parties to their agreement to refer to arbitration. But these considerations have less weight with me in this case, for I have great doubt as to whether the form of the contract used here represents a legitimate and bona fide business. I am far from saying that the present contract was one of wager or that the parties had no intention to give or take delivery. That is a matter which may or may not be in issue. But the provision in the contract that the seller should offer delivery; the absence of any clear specification of the quality of cotton or of the place of delivery; the lower rate for which many theories have been advanced but for which no satisfactory explanation is supplied by the evidence; the admission of some dealers that delivery is not expected, all these circumstances do suggest that these contracts are primarily intended to meet the demand of a purely speculative business. And again the interest of the mercantile community cannot require that the settlement of business disputes should be by a tribunal that is not impartial.

It seems to me, therefore, unnecessary to proceed with the consideration of the second point affecting the constitution of the Karachi Indian Merchants Association.

In these circumstances I think the Court should exercise its discretion to refuse the application for stay. I would, therefore, reverse the order of the lower Court and allow this appeal.

Costs to be costs in the cause.

FAWCETT, A. J. C.—I concur that sufficient reason has been shown why the matter should not be referred in accordance with the submission in this case and that the lower Court should accordingly have exercised its discretion under section 19 of Act IX of 1899 by refusing to stay the suit. In coming to this conclusion, I see reason to modify the view expressed by me in my previous judgment as to the inadvisability of this Court entering into the question whether the rate contended for by the respondents is a proper one or not. For the evidence since obtained and certified makes it clear that prior to July 1917 it had never been suggested that there should be different market rates of settlement at due date for the two kinds of contracts, viz., those on European office terms and those on Association terms. And with regard to the subsequent period no evidence has been adduced by the respondents to show that, as a matter of fact, where damages have been duly paid under clause 4 of the Association contract they have been fixed at a rate differing from the market rate for ready cotton with anything like the wide divergence now contended for by the respondents; while in regard to contracts for future delivery in January 1918 (like the contracts in suit) the only evidence adduced relates to cases of "settlement" to which other considerations apply. For the respondents Mr. Deverteuil has not relied on any of the additional evidence that has been adduced as rebutting the appellants' case, but has put forward arguments, which would more appropriately have been addressed to us at the previous hearing. His strongest point is that, for the plaintiffs to succeed, it must be established there is a definite probability that the Umpire appointed will, in fact, be biased, and that until he is appointed any interference with the arbitration is premature. He urges that the most the appellants have done is to show a probability that the electors of the Umpire will be biased and that it cannot properly be assumed that, even if they appoint a nominee, he will misconduct himself. It is, no doubt, the ordinary rule that bias is not lightly to be presumed, and that there is a primary presumption in favour of honesty. But in this case there has been an unusually full enquiry in which both sides have had ample opportunity of placing every material consideration before the Court. If, as the result of that enquiry, it could be said that the appointment of a biased Umpire was improbable or of little probability, then Mr. Deverteuil's argument would, I think, be sound. But, in my opinion, it has been clearly shown that the probability of a biased Umpire being appointed is so strong that it amounts to a practical certainty. In forming this opinion, I have not overlooked the offer of some 12 interested members of the Managing Committee not to vote in the election of an Umpire. This goes, however, very little way towards securing a really unbiased Umpire. It would obviously not be difficult to arrange that, under a specious display of a fair and proper election of an independent Umpire, one really biased in favour of respondents should be appointed. And such a course is one that respondents might naturally try to take in order to make interference with the appointment of the Umpire or the upsetting of his award as difficult as possible. The Court should, of course, be reluctant to suspect a dishonest intention of this kind; but I am very unfavourably impressed by the shuffling and far from straightforward attitude adopted by the respondents in this case. Not only has there been a complete change of ground from that pleaded in the first affidavits, ut there is also a significant refusal to listen to any proposal that the appointment of an Umpire should, in the special circumstances of the case, be made by the Court or otherwise taken out of the hands of the Managing Committee of the Association. It certainly looks as if the respondents are anxious to keep the appointment in the hands of the Managing Committee, because by these means they believe that they can secure the appointment of an Umpire who has a bias in their favour. In all the circumstances, I think that there is 'adequate and reasonable' ground for appellants' anticipation of bias and that (in regard to the offer already mentioned) they may well say, "Timeo Danaos et dona ferentes." The case is quite different from that of Messrs. Volkart Bros. v. Firm of Kodumal Kalumal (5) referred to by Mr. Deverteuil. The contract in that case provided for the appointment of an Umpire by the two arbitrators, in case they were unable to agree on an award; and under section 8 of the Arbitration Act, this appointment could, if the arbitrators failed to make it, be made by the Court. The circumstances there were also quite different from those established in this case. Moreover, a case like this appears to me to be on quite a different footing to one where the submission clause in the contract appoints a named arbitrator, who is in the employ of one of the parties and, therefore, known by the other party to be likely to be biassed in favour of his employer. Though under the present contract the right of appointing an Umpire is vested in the Managing Committee of the Association, yet it would surely be within the contemplation of the parties that an unbiased Umpire should be so appointed. I do not, therefore, think there is any good ground for respondents' contention that the appellants are estopped from showing that circumstances have arisen which make the appointment of an Umpire by the Managing Committee objectionable and likely to result in failure of justice.

To sum up, I think it is a case where the Court has a duty to weigh the real probabilities and act on them, if it considers they outweigh the initial presumption in favour of honesty and freedom from bias. I think there is no reasonable doubt on the evidence and arguments in this case that each party will appoint an arbitrator thought to be safe on his side, and that, with such a wide difference between the two opposing rates, there will be disagreement both as to the award and the person to be appointed Umpire. In my opinion, therefore, it is a practical certainty that an Umpire will have to be appointed by the Managing Committee, and in that event, I think, there is a strong probability that an Umpire biassed in favour of respondents will be appointed. The Court should, of course, exercise its discretion, in refusing to stay a suit or granting leave to revoke a submission, in a sparing and cautious manner and should not do so, unless the applicant can establish that there is good ground for apprehending that there will be a failure of justice, if the reference to arbitration is allowed to proceed (Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume 1, Articles 951 and 959 at pages 449 and 453). But in the proved circumstances of this case I am clearly of opinion that sufficient ground has been shown for the Court's interference under section 19 of the Arbitration Act. I, therefore, concur in the proposed order.

Order reversed.

PATNA HIGH COURT.

MISCELLANEOUS CIVIL APPEAL No. 115
OF 1918.

August 8, 1918.

Present:—Justice Sir Ali Imam, Kt., and Mr. Justice Thornhill.

Maharaja Sir RAMESHWAR SINGH
BAHADUR—DECREE-HOLDER—APPELLANT
versus

KESHWAR RAI—JUDGMENT DEBTOR—
RESPONDENT.

Res judicata—Execution proceedings—Non-transferable holding—Failure to raise objection as to non-transferability in previous execution proceeding—Estoppel—Tenant, whether can object to sale of non-transferable holding to which landlord consents.

RAMESHWAR SINGH v. KESHWAR RAI.

A tenant can object to the sale of a non-transferable holding in execution of a money-decree even if the landlord consents to it.

If a tenant judgment-debtor omits to raise an objection as to the non-transferability of a holding in an execution proceeding in which the holding is attached, he is estopped from raising it in a subsequent execution proceeding in execution of the same decree.

Appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Darbhanga.

Messrs. Purnendu Narayan Sinha and Murari Prosad, for the Appellant.

Mr. Baikunthanath Mitter, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

IMAM, J.—The appellant who is a decree-holder proceeded to execute his decree as a mere money decree against the respondent and took out attachment against a non-transferable holding in the year 1913. It is admitted that when the attachment was made in that year the judgment debtor did not raise any question of the non transferability of the holding. That execution proceeding seems to have ended infructuously. A fresh attachment was issued in the year 1915 when the judgment debtor objected to the sale of the holding on the ground mentioned above. The learned Munsif of Madhubani held that the judgment-debtor was estopped from raising the objection on the ground of non-transferability as he had failed to do so in the previous execution proceeding. The judgment-debtor appealed to the learned District Judge of Darbhanga, who allowed the appeal and held that the failure to raise the objection in the previous execution was no bar to its being advanced against the present attachment. He accordingly ordered that the property under attachment was not saleable.

The question, therefore, for consideration is, whether the omission to object to the sale on the ground of non-transferability in the previous execution proceeding is a bar to its being advanced now. The learned Vakil appearing for the appellant contends that on the authority of Mungul Pershad Dichit v. Grija Kant Lahiri (1) and Mazzeem Hossein Mondal v. Sarat Kumari Debi (2) the judgment-debtor is barred from raising the objection.

(1) 8 C. 51; 11 C. L. R. 113; 8 I. A. 123; 4 Sar. P. C. J. 249; 4 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 32.

(2) 5 Ind. Cas. 89; 14 C. W. N. 433; 11 C. L. J. 357.

On the authority of Dayamoyi v. Ananda Mohan Roy (3) and Narayani v. Nabin Chandra Chowdhari (4) it is quite clear that even if the landlord consents to the sale of a non-transferable holding the tenant can successfully object to the sale of such a holding. It is not denied that this is the case-law on the subject since 1914, when the decision in Dayamoyi v. Ananda Mohan Roy (3) was given. It is contended that even if this is the law the judgment debtor cannot take advantage of it because of the decisions reported as Mungul Pershad Dichit v. Grija Kant Lahiri (1) and Mazzeem Hossein Mondal v. Sarat Kumari Debi (2). On the other hand, the learned Vakil for the respondent contends that the state of the case-law in 1913 was uncertain, and, therefore, his client in the earlier execution proceeding failed to raise the objection. There seems to be not much force in this contention. On the authorities referred to during the address at the Bar it is quite clear that there were conflicting decisions on the point which were considered and finally concluded by the Full Bench decision in Dayamoyi v. Ananda Mohan Roy (3), indeed the learned Vakil for the respondent does not contest the fact that the decisions prior to the Full Bench case were not uniform. The uncertainty of the case-law in 1913, however, cannot be accepted as a sufficient justification for the omission in the earlier execution proceeding to raise the objection on the ground of non-transferability. In the circumstances the view taken by the lower Appellate Court appears to be unsustainable. The order of the learned District Judge is set aside and that of the learned Munsif restored. The appeal is allowed with costs throughout.

JUDGMENT.

CROUCH, A. J. C.—In this case plaintiff obtained a mortgage decree on a first mortgage, ordering that properties in lists D, E, F, G and H to be sold subject to the condition that properties D, E, F and G were to be sold before H, which had been bought by private sale by defendants Nos. 8—13 and had passed into their possession.

The mortgagor had, however, executed three other several mortgages of properties D, E and F respectively in favour of the plaintiff. On each of these three mortgages a separate suit had been instituted and orders for sale had been obtained. Sales in pursuance of these decrees were effected, but at a date subsequent to the date of the decree obtained under the first mortgage. The purchasers were the defendants Nos. 8 and 9 and some strangers. At the sale, it was notified that a decree for sale had been obtained by the first mortgagee.

In execution of his decree on the first mortgage, plaintiff applied for sale of properties G and H. No one appeared to oppose, and an ex parte order was passed for the sale of these two properties. But on the application of the defendants Nos. 8—13, who contended that property H should not be sold until G had been exhausted, for G had not been mortgaged a second time and was still in the hands of the mortgagor, and also D, E and F sold, the Court held that execution should proceed against G only in the first place, leaving plaintiffs to file a fresh application for the sale of properties D, E, F and H.

On appeal this order was affirmed, but there was a declaration added that properties D, E, F and G should be exhausted before H was brought to sale.

Plaintiff's legal representatives now appeal, asking that (1) G be sold and that if the whole debts be not realised, that H be sold; and that it be declared that properties D, E and F are not liable to be sold at all having already been sold under the decree of the second mortgagee; (2) they allege they have a grievance in that the first Court varied its order for sale though passed after due notice; and (3) that, in any case, the original order of the first Court that the properties G and H be brought to sale should be restored.

The two last objections may be disposed of very briefly. It is contended that the first Court had no power to review, or amend, an order for sale once duly passed, and that the original order for sale of all the properties should be restored. But it is not admitted that the original order was duly passed, for it is not admitted that notice was issued. This is a question of fact into which we cannot inquire in second appeal and one for the solution of which the record offers no material. Further we are of opinion that a Court has full power to vary any order for sale in execution which it has passed through ignorance of material facts. We cannot restore the order which we consider was legally and properly set aside.

Mr. Kimatrai contends that, once a property has been sold under a mortgage decree, it cannot be sold over again, and that if it be again sold the conflict between the two purchasers will be determined not by the priority of the mortgages under which the property was brought to sale, but by the priority of the purchase. If this be the law, no title will pass to the purchaser under the sale which would be held under the order now appealed against and his clients would be exposed to litigation. In support of these somewhat startling assertions, Mr. Kimatrai has been able to cite reported decisions which seem to offer support, and it becomes necessary to deal with the points raised at some length. It will, I believe, simplify the discussion if I first state as briefly as possible what the law is. As we are dealing with simple mortgages only, it is unnecessary to bring the complications occasioned by the English form of mortgage into discussion:—

(1) When an owner mortgages his property by simple mortgage, the mortgagee obtains nothing more than a right to obtain from the Court an order that the property be sold. Inasmuch as the estate is not vested in the mortgagee, there is no right of foreclosure. See sections 58, 60 and 67 (a) of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882. The rule follows inevitably from the form of mortgage. As the properties with which we are now concerned are not situate in Karachi we need not consider the effect of section 69.

(2) If a mortgage be without possession, the mortgagor retains (1) a right to redeem; and (2) the right of physical possession and enjoyment, and also a limited jus abutendi. See section 66, Transfer of Property Act.

(3) When a mortgagor sells his interest in the mortgaged property or executes a further charge on it, he can transfer or charge only such right, title and interest as is still vested in him; for no one can legally dispose of property which is not his. Ordinarily, he can transfer the right of present possession and enjoyment of the right to redeem and nothing more. After executing the second mortgage he has the right to redeem the second mortgage, and if the second mortgage be without possession he also retains the present right to possession.

(4) Where a first mortgagee brings the mortgaged property to sale in a suit in which the mortgagor, but not the second mortgagee, is a defendant, the purchaser takes (1) the right of the mortgagor to present possession and enjoyment; (2) the right of the mortgagor to redeem the second mortgage; and (3) the right of the first mortgagee to bring the property to sale. In such case, the first mortgage is deemed to be kept alive and not to merge in the equity of redemption and can be used as a shield against the claim of the second mortgagee. Mata Din Kasodhan v. Kazim Husain (1) and Chandulbai v. Basarmal Topanmal (2).

The Court cannot sell the right, title and interest of any person who is not a party to the suit. Umes Chunder Sircar v. Zahur Fatima (3) and Chandulbai v. Basarmal Topanmal (2). Hence it follows that a puisne mortgagee who is not impleaded is not affected by a sale. The right to redeem the first mortgage and the liability to be redeemed by the mortgagor or his transferee, persist. Neither in this rule nor in the following do I purport to deal with the effect of notice or estoppel, both of which may have results which do not properly come within the scope of the law of mortgage.

(5) Where a second mortgagee brings the mortgaged property to sale in a suit to which the mortgagor, but not the first mortgagee, is a defendant, the purchaser takes (1) the right of the mortgagor to present possession and enjoyment and (2) the right to redeem the first mortgage.

(6) From these two rules it follows that where there are two separate suits filed by the first and second mortgagees respectively, neither impleading the other, and each brings the property mortgaged to him to sale, the present right of possession and enjoyment passes to the first purchaser and this right cannot be sold again.

Hence, where the second mortgagee brings the property to sale first and the purchaser obtains possession, the purchaser under the first mortgagee's decree has no right to turn him out but he can, qua first mortgagee, bring the property to sale in a properly framed suit.

And where the first mortgagee brings the property to sale first, and the purchaser obtains possession, the purchaser in the suit filed by the second mortgagee has no more than the rights of second mortgagee; he has no right to possession.

(7) Where the first mortgagee, before the second mortgagee has brought the property to sale, obtains a transfer of the right, title and interest of the mortgagor, then having the legal title of the mortgagor vested in him, he can foreclose the second mortgagee. This was the position dealt with in the case of Chandulbai v. Basarmal Topanmal (2). If the second mortgagee chose to exercise his right of redemption, the first mortgagee, as holder of the equity of redemption, would, it seems, be entitled in his turn to redeem both the first and second mortgages; but this is a position which no Court seems to have been called on to deal with.

(8) A puisne mortgagee may sue for sale without making the prior mortgagee a party to the suit but where the prior mortgagee is impleaded, the Court should not ordinarily permit a sale subject to the first mortgage. For, it is the duty of the Court to make a decree which shall deal finally with the question between the parties and preclude the necessity of further litigation for enforcement of any right arising out of the mortgage or mortgages in question.

The proper form of decree is No. 8 in Appendix D to the Civil Procedure Code. The second mortgagee and the mortgagor are given successive opportunities to redeem. If the second mortgagee fails to redeem the first mortgage, his suit is, at the option of the first mortgagee, either dismissed—that is, he is in effect foreclosed—or the property is sold free of both mortgages.

The right of a puisne mortgagee to sue without impleading the prior mortgagee is given by the explanation to Order XXXIV, rule 1.

It follows that, where the person who holds both a first and second mortgage sues on the second mortgage only, the Court should ordinarily refuse to order a sale unless it be free of both mortgages.

As to the duty of the Court see Venkataramana Iyer v. Gompertz (4) and Sundar Singh v. Bholu (5).

We are now in a position to apply the law to the facts of this case. When the plaintiff brought the properties D, E and F to sale by right of his several puisne mortgages, the Court should properly have insisted on the property being sold free of all charges which the plaintiff held; had it done so, very much unnecessary litigation would have been avoided. But where property is sold in execution of a mortgage-decree, the question what was the nature and extent of the interest sold depends not on what the Court might have done or ought to have done but on what the Court did, what the Court intended to sell, and what the purchaser had reason to think that he was buying. See the cases cited in the judgment of Stanley, C. J., in Inayat Singh v. Izzat-un-nissa Begam (6). In this case, both Courts have held that the sale was subject to the decree for sale obtained under the first mortgage, and accordingly the defendants Nos. 8—13 obtained only the right to redeem the first mortgage and the right to present possession. The plaintiffs as first mortgagees now have the right to bring the property mortgaged to them to sale free of all encumbrances, unless their mortgage be redeemed.

I will now examine the various cases on which Mr. Kimatrai has relied in argument.

PAMANDAS v. HIRANAND.

In Venkatanarasammah v. Ramiah (7) the same property was mortgaged to two several persons. The first mortgagee brought the property to sale in a suit to which the second mortgagee was not a party, purchased it himself and obtained possession. The second mortgagee then brought the property to sale in a suit to which the first mortgagee was not a party, purchased it and succeeded in dispossessing the plaintiff. The plaintiff sued for possession. It was held that nothing whatever passed to the defendant by the second sale and possession was awarded to the plaintiff. The learned Judges were not in agreement as to whether the defendant's mortgage was capable of being still enforced.

This is an illustration of rules 4, 5 and 6 above given. Both Judges held that defendant took nothing by his purchase of the rights and interests of the mortgagor because these had already been sold to plaintiff, but they did not assert that defendant as second mortgagee had lost anything by the sale to plaintiff. Kernan, J., was of opinion that his right had not been affected by the sale; Innes, J., thought it possible that defendant might be barred of any further remedy by having already brought a suit on his mortgage.

In Nanack Chand v. Teluckdye Koer (8) the owner of certain property mortgaged it, on the same day by two several deeds, to two several mortgagees. Both mortgagees obtained decrees on their mortgages as against the mortgagor only. The defendants got their decree first and under it brought the right, title and interest of the mortgagor to sale, purchased it themselves and obtained possession. The plaintiffs subsequently got a decree on their bond and also bought the right, title and interest of the mortgagor and brought the suit for recovery of possession. It was held that the right to possession depended not on the priority of the mortgage but on the priority of possession.

This was, of course, a perfectly correct statement of the law as applied to the particular facts. For, whether the defendant's mortgage was first or second, he nevertheless obtained by his purchase the present right to possession vested in the mortgagor and if plaintiff desired to raise the question of priority of mortgage, he should have done so in a properly constituted suit.

In Sundar Singh v. Bholu (5) the plaintiffs sued for sale on a second mortgage. They had already obtained a decree for sale on a first mortgage. It was held that there was nothing in the Civil Procedure Code or the Transfer of Property Act which prevented the holder of two independent mortgages over the same property from obtaining a decree for sale on each of them in a separate suit. But the learned Judges added the following obiter dictum: "What benefit the two decrees will be to the plaintiffs it is difficult to see, except that the plaintiffs may execute one of these decrees by sale of the property, and if there is a surplus arising from the sale, they may probably attach that surplus in execution of the other decree. One thing is quite clear, that the plaintiffs cannot sell the property twice over, and they cannot sell under the second decree subject to the first. That would be selling the equity of redemption, a right which is not acknowledged or recognised by Act IV of 1882 and would be a mischief which has been struck at by section 99 of that Act. This Court in Mata Din Kasodhan v. Karim Husain (1), which has been followed in many other cases, has recognised that the intention of the Legislature was to put an end to the abuses which existed before Act IV of 1882 came into force, and that there can be no sale of equity of redemption apart from the property itself at the instance of the mortgagee."

Though isolated sentences in this passage suggest that novel rules of law were being laid down, the passage taken as a whole is found to do no more than declare that the Courts should not allow a person who holds two independent mortgages to bring the property to sale piecemeal (rule 8).

In Mata Din Kasodhan v. Karim Husain (1) the first mortgagee had obtained a transfer of the right, title and interest of the mortgagor. The second mortgagee brought a suit for sale of the property without asking for redemption. It was held that the first mortgagee, not having exhibited any intention of foregoing altogether his rights under his mortgage deed, was entitled to keep it alive and to use it as a shield against the claim of the plaintiff to the extent of the amount due to him on the day on which he took the assignment of the mortgagor's interest; and also that the plaintiff could not bring the property mortgaged to him to sale without first redeeming the prior mortgage.

The bare decision in this case presents no special features and is in accordance with rules 7 and 8. But in his judgement, Edge, C. J., expressed the opinion that under a decree for sale in a mortgage suit the property which might be effectively brought to sale was the specific immoveable property, and not merely the rights and interests of the plaintiff and his mortgagor in such property, and that as a general rule a mortgagee had no right to bring mortgaged property to sale without redeeming the prior mortgage.

It is difficult to understand what is meant by saying that it is the "specific immoveable property" which is brought to sale. Mr. Kimatrai contends that under a sale in execution of a mortgage decree the whole specific immoveable property, the fee simple in fact, is sold, and consequently cannot be sold again. But, in a properly drawn decree it is not the property, without qualification, that is sold, but the "mortgaged property." And it is well established that no Court has jurisdiction to dispose of property, or interests in property, vested in persons not parties to the suit before it. With the exception of dicta of the learned Chief Justice in this judgment there seems to be no authority whatever for contending that the Court can sell the fee simple of an estate notwithstanding that it is not wholly vested in the parties whose rights it is adjudicating.

In asserting that a puisne mortgagee cannot bring the property to sale without first redeeming the first mortgage, the learned Chief Justice may be construed as having raised a mere rule of procedure into a rule of substantive law having universal application. But it would be fairer to restrict the application of every part of his judgment to the facts with which he was actually dealing. If this be done it is consistent with the view adopted in recent legislation.

Fortunately, the confusion suggested by this judgment has been completely cleared up by the framers of the new Civil Procedure Code. Formerly, the Transfer of Property Act contained not only the law as to mortgages, but also the rules of procedure to be followed in enforcing rights under mortgages, with the result that there was no clear demarcation between substantive law and pure procedure. By repealing all the sections which deal with procedure and repeating all essential rules in Order XXXIV and adding in the appendix some extremely useful and instructive forms of decrees, the Legislature has put the questions now before us outside the region of controversy. Rule 4 and the forms of decree make it clear that only the mortgaged property should be sold. The Act does not state that the interests of parties not impleaded are not affected by any sale, probably, as suggested by Messrs. Woodroffe and Amir Ali, because it was considered unnecessary to do so: it is too obvious to need assertion. That the equity of redemption can be sold when the prior mortgage is not impleaded is made clear by the Explanation to rule 1 of Order XXXIV.

In Akatti Moidin Kutti v. Chirayil Amba (9) the proprietor of certain land mortgaged it to plaintiff in 1890 and in 1893 executed a second mortgage to the defendant. In 1895, the defendant sued on his puisne mortgage, obtained a decree and purchased the property in 1899. Plaintiff then sued defendant for possession. It was held that defendant was entitled to retain possession.

As defendant had purchased the mortgagor's present right to possession, he was entitled to retain it until plaintiff had enforced his rights in a properly framed suit. It must be assumed that plaintiff was not a party to the suit filed by defendant and that defendant was not a party to the previous suit filed by the plaintiff; the report is silent on the point.

In Kutti Chettiar v. Subramania (10) the same property had been sold twice over in execution of two several mortgages. The first sale was in execution of the decree on the puisne mortgage obtained in a suit to which the first mortgagee had not been made a party. Plaintiff, the purchaser at the second auction, sued to recover possession from the purchaser at the first auction. It was held that any relief to which he was entitled could not be enforced in a suit for possession.

This decision is an illustration of rules 4, 5 and 6. But in the judgment the following passage, on which great reliance has been placed by Mr. Kimatrai, appears:—"When, therefore, defendants bought the house in execution of their decree no saleable interest was left in the judgment-debtor. As pointed out in Venkutanasammah v. Ramiah (7), Nanack Chand v. Teluckdye Koer (8) and Akatti Moidin Kutti v. Chirayil Ambu (9) where there is a question between the purchasers at two distinct Court sales held on different dates in execution of two several mortgage-decrees, the Court in deciding between the two competing titles is guided not by the dates of the several mortgages but of the several purchases. For both the mortgagees have an equal right to sell the property, and once it is sold at the instance of one mortgagee there is no further saleable interest left in the judgment-debtor to be sold again."

This passage offers no difficulty if we realise that the Court was referring to suits for possession, and that the right to possession was the only matter in dispute. The Court did not hold that plaintiff was entitled to no relief. An examination of the above cases makes it clear that they give no support to Mr. Kimatrai's main contentions. His case was founded in a confusion between "possession" and "absolute ownership."

I would, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs. Mr. Kimatrai asks that the Court will amend the order of the lower Court by ordering the sale of the properties D, E and F but appellant must pursue the ordinary course and file a regular application for sale. It is possible that he may be now barred from obtaining the order.

HAYWARD, J. C. —I concur in the conclusion reached by my learned brother. It appears that the plaintiffs obtained a first mortgage on certain properties represented by D, E, F, G, and H. They subsequently obtained second mortgages on the same properties. Third parties then purchased the properties represented by H.

The plaintiffs did not commence by suing out their first mortgage but obtained decrees on their second mortgages and proceeded to sell the properties represented by D, E and F. The plaintiffs in the meanwhile have obtained a decree on their first mortgage on the condition that they proceeded first against the properties represented by D, E, F and G and afterwards against the properties represented by H. They, therefore, sought to sell not the properties already sold and represented by D, E and F but the properties represented only by G and asked for permission to sell after those the properties represented by H. The original and first Appellate Courts both held in effect that the equity of redemption only has been sold of the properties represented by D, E and F and that it would be necessary to sell further the remaining interests in the properties represented by D, E and F after the sale of properties represented by G before permission could be granted to sell the properties represented by H according to the condition in the decree.

This second appeal has been brought to obtain a declaration that there remain no interests to sell in the properties represented by D, E and F and a direction for the sale after the properties represented by G of the properties represented by H. The respondents strongly object, as they are the third parties who purchased the properties represented by H. It seems to me that their objections must be upheld. So far the equity of redemption only has been sold in the properties represented by D, E and F and the purchasers have merely bought the right to redeem the prior mortgage. There was, in my opinion, no legal bar to such a sale as pointed out by my learned brother and the result is that the purchasers must, in order to prevent a further sale of the interests remaining in the properties represented by D, E and F, redeem the prior mortgage. The cases quoted before us in support of a contrary conclusion would appear to have been mainly cases of competition in ejection suits between different purchasers at different sales under different mortgage decrees and to have no relation to regularly constituted mortgage suits. Such is the case of Chandulbai v. Basarmal Topanmal (2). We have moreover here to give directions for the execution of the prior mortgagee's mortgage decree and not to consider whether it was proper to have allowed this piecemeal sale of the various interests in the properties under the subsequent and prior mortgages. It might no doubt be argued that the procedure was at the time improper though it would apparently have been proper now under Order XXXIV, rule 1, of the Schedule to the Civil Procedure Code, as pointed out in the note at page 321 of Shepherd and Brown on section 75 of the Transfer of Property Act, 7th Edition.

Appeal accordingly dismissed with costs.

Presidency Towns Insolvency Act (III of 1909), ss. 17, 25—Insolvency proceedings, whether bar execution of decree—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 15, Sch. I, Art. 182—Execution—Insolvency of judgment-debtor—Limitation, running of.

The pendency of an insolvency proceeding under the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act does not of itself, in the absence of a protection order under section 25 of the Act, bar the remedy of a decree-holder to execute his decree by arrest of the judgment-debtor. Limitation for execution of a decree, therefore, continues to run against a decree-holder during the pendency of an insolvency proceeding and he is not entitled to exclude the period during which the insolvency proceeding has been pending from the period allowed for execution of the decree. [p. 799, col. 2.]

A decree-holder arrested his judgment-debtor in execution of his decree. On the 19th August 1911, however, the judgment-debtor was released on the production of an adjudication order made under the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act. No further action was taken by the decree-holder and the execution proceedings dropped. In January 1916 the adjudication was annulled. The decree-holder then applied for execution:

Held, that in the absence of a protection order under section 25 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act the decree-holder was at liberty to execute his decree by arresting the judgment-debtor, and that, therefore, limitation continued to run against the decree-holder and the present application for execution was barred by time. JUDGMENT.

THORNHILL, J.—The facts presented to the Court are as follows. The respondents in execution of a money-decree had a judgment-debtor brought up under arrest in the Court of the 1st Subordinate Judge of Arrah. On the production of an adjudication order made in the High Court of Calcutta under the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, he was released on 19th August 1911. Subsequently no further action was taken by the decree-holders and the execution proceedings dropped. In January 1916, the adjudication was annulled. The decree-holders then applied for execution, when it was held that the application for execution was not time-barred. On appeal to the District Judge of Shahabad this order was upheld, the District Judge holding that although the decree-holders could have taken steps in the insolvency proceedings towards realizing their decree at the same time they were prevented from executing the decree against the judgment debtor, and, therefore, the time during which the judgment-debtor was an undischarged insolvent must be excluded in calculating the time allowed for execution.

The question is, can this period be excluded in calculating the three years referred to in Article 182 (5) of the Limitation Act.

The decree-holders suffered from no disability, and, therefore, can have no extension of time under section 6. Section 9 provides that when once time has begun to run no subsequent disability or inability to sue stops it. As pointed out in Mitra's Law of Limitation, "Disability is want of a legal qualification to act. Inability is the want of physical powers to act." According to Birdwood, J., in Hanmantram Sadhuram Pity v. Arthur Bowles (1), the inability referred to in section 9 is a personal inability affecting the plaintiff himself and having reference to his condition, or state, or position, and not to the circumstances of the person against whom he is entitled to institute a suit.

Section 15 of the Act of 1877 gave relief in computing the period of limitation prescribed for any suit the institution of which had been stayed by injunction or order, but this section was held not to apply to applications for execution even where the execution had been stayed by an injunction, Rajaratnam v. Sheralayammal (2), but the difficulty was got over by considering the decree-holder's application for execution, after the removal of the injunction, as only an application for the continuation or revival of the previous application which had been interrupted owing to a cause for which the decree-holder was not responsible, Lakhmi Chand v. Ballam Das (3).

In Ashrafuddin Ahmed v. Bepin Behari Mullick (4), after the decree-holder had applied for execution of the decree, the judgment-debtor represented that, as all his property had vested in a Receiver, proceedings in execution could not be carried on, and thereupon the Court released from attachment the salary of the judgment-debtor which had been attached at the instance of the decree-holders. After the discharge of the Receiver the decree-holders applied to the Court to re-attach the salary of the judgment-debtor and to allow them to proceed with the execution case originally instituted by them from the point which it had reached and at which it was stopped by the order of the Court. It was held that the application was no fresh application for execution but a mere continuation of the previous application, and the period of limitation applicable to it was that prescribed by Article 178 of the Second Schedule of the Limitation Act of 1877.

In consequence of conflict of decisions the law was amended and section 15 (1) of Act IX of 1908 enacted that in computing the period of limitation prescribed for any suit or application for the execution of a decree, the institution or execution of which has been stayed by injunction or order, the time of the continuance of the injunction or order, the day on which it was issued or made, and the day on which it was withdrawn, shall be excluded. This Act came into operation on the 1st January 1909, and the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act one year later.

The latter Act, section 25, expressly provides that any insolvent who shall have submitted his schedule as aforesaid may apply to the Court for protection, and the Court may, on such application, make an order for the protection of the insolvent from arrest or detention.

There is also a provision in that section that no such order shall operate to prejudice the right of any creditor in the event of such order being revoked or the adjudication annulled.

It, therefore, appears clear in the present case that the execution taken out by the decree-holders under which they had the judgment-debtor arrested was not interrupted by the insolvency proceedings, as no protection order was made. He was simply released when it was known that he had become an insolvent, presumably on the ground that the decree-holders thought it useless to proceed further. Section 17 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act provides that during the pendency of the insolvency proceedings a creditor shall have no remedy against the property of the insolvent save with leave of the Court, but it does not exclude the arrest of the person.

It would, therefore, appear that the decree-holders' execution arresting the judgment-debtor in 1911 was neither stayed by any injunction or order, nor was it interfered with by the insolvency proceedings, and, therefore, the present application cannot be taken as a continuation or revival of the former proceedings, even on the arguments advanced in Ashrafuddin Ahmed v. Bepin Behari Mullick (4), which was a decision prior to the Limitation Act of 1908.

Having regard, therefore, to the above, and to the express provisions of section 15 of Act IX of 1908, coupled with the fact that the Insolvency Court had power to stay any suit or other proceeding pending against the insolvent in any other Court (section 18), but made no such order, we think the decree holders' application for execution is time barred.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 108 (j)— Lease, transfer of—Lessee, original, liability of, for rent.
Under section 108, clause (j), of the Transfer of Property Act, the liability of a lessee to pay rent continues even after he has parted with his interest in the lease, and it is no answer to a suit for rent that the transferee from the lessee is willing to pay the rent.

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Rangpur, dated the 23rd August 1916, modifying that of the Munsif, Rangpur, dated the 2nd August 1915.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Girija Prasanna Sanyal, for the Appellant.—This appeal is on behalf of the defendant, and it arises out of a suit for recovery of arrears of rent under the Transfer of Property Act. The defence was that the defendant had sold her interest to another person, Babu Jatindro Nath Lahiri, by a registered Kibala, and as the sale was in 1318 B. S. and the suit is for the rent for the years 1319 to 1321 B. S., she is not liable for the rent sued for.

[FLETCHER, J.—Unless there is a contract to the contrary, the defendant is liable under section 108, clause (j), of the Transfer of Property Act.]

Section 108 (j) of the Transfer of Property Act is intended to protect the interests of the landlord in those cases where his interests would be jeopardised by reason of the land being transferred to a man of straw. That is not the case here. The transferee of the defendant is ready in this case to pay all arrears due after the transfer.

The Court of Appeal below was also not right in reversing the finding of the primary Court on the question whether the interest granted by the lease was perpetual.

Babu Atul Chandra Gupta, for the Respondents, not called upon.

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—This appeal must stand dismissed. The suit was a suit for rent against the original lessee of a property to which the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act apply. The liability of the original lessee who has transferred the land is contractual; that liability subsists under the provisions of section 108 (j) of the Transfer of Property Act, notwithstanding that the defendant No. 1 has parted with her interest in the leasehold property.

Then, the next point is this: It is said that the Munsif found that the interest granted by the lease was perpetual. The learned District Judge says it was unnecessary to make such a finding for the decision of the case. I agree with the learned District Judge. Not only it was unnecessary but it was improper after the defendant No. 1 had parted with her interest to adjudicate on what was the nature of the lease granted in the absence of the transferee. All that the learned Judge had to adjudicate on and did adjudicate on was that the lease was subsisting at the time the present suit was brought.

The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs.

SHAMSUL HUDA, J.—I agree.

*Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 103—
Search of house—Witnesses present at search, evidence

Search by Police Officer specially empowered to conduct searches; legality of.*

A Court is not bound to accept as true the evidence of witnesses called in under section 103 of the Criminal Procedure Code to witness a search, if it can be shown to be false. [p. 801, col. 2.]

The power of search in respect of an offence punishable under section 19, clause (f) of the Arms Act, must, by virtue of section 30 of the Act, be exercised in the presence of some officer specially appointed by name or in virtue of his office by the Local Government in this behalf. [p. 802, col. 2.]

Where a Police Officer in charge of a reporting station is specially empowered by the Local Government to conduct searches in respect of offences under section 19, clause (f) of the Arms Act, a search conducted by such officer in respect of an offence under that clause without obtaining a warrant from a Magistrate is not illegal. [p. 802, col. 2.]

Criminal appeal from an order of the Sessions Judge, Mainpuri, dated the 8th April 1918.

Messrs. C. R. Alston and A. P. Dube, for the Appellant.

Mr. Lalit Mohan Banerji (Government Pleader), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—Babu Ram appeals against his conviction on a charge under section 19 (f) of the Indian Arms Act (XI of 1878). The case against him is that he had in his possession and under his control two swords, one gun, one pistol and certain ammunition in contravention of the provisions of the Arms Act, that is to say, without having any license for the same. The evidence has been fully set forth and discussed in the admirably lucid and convincing judgment of the Sessions Court and I do not propose to go into it at length. The essential facts are that a certain house was searched upon information given by one Khiali Ram, who has been produced as a witness for the prosecution, and that the arms which are the subject-matter of the charge were found in a receptacle formed by hollowing out a log of wood, the receptacle itself being buried underground in a small room in a corner of the building. The case for the defence is that the discovery of the arms in that place does not prove that they were in the possession or under the control of Babu Ram. The suggestion further is that it is a matter of fair inference from the evidence that they had been concealed in that place by enemies of Babu Ram in order to get him or his father Hulas Rai into trouble. The decision of the questions thus raised must depend upon the proper appreciation of certain evidence given by Sub-Inspector Mafuz Ali Khan and the witnesses Angan Lal and Sikhar Chand on the one side, and the witnesses Maharaj Singh, Chunni Lal and Gokul on the other. Maharaj Singh and Chunni Lal were official witnesses to the search, that is to say, the witnesses from the neighbourhood of the appellant's house whose attendance had been procured by the Sub-Inspector in accordance with the section 103 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The Sub-Inspector had complied with the law by calling in these two persons, but the fact that he had done so does not bind the Court to accept as true their evidence, if it can be shown to be false. In the present case the Sub-Inspector for reasons sufficiently apparent had taken the trouble to secure the attendance of two other witnesses; the evidence given by himself and by these men, Angan Lal and Sikhar Chand, receives strong corroboration from the unimpeachable testimony of Rai Bahadur Man Singh, Superintendent of Police, and Mr. Sheo Rakhan Singh, Deputy Magistrate. I have not the slightest doubt, after an examination of the record, that the learned Sessions Judge, who had the concurrence of the Assessors, was perfectly right in rejecting the evidence of Maharaj Singh, Chunni Lal and Gokul. Anything less convincing on the face of it I have rarely read. Their assertion that the house in question had been lying vacant for years is conclusively disproved by the observations made on a subsequent date by the Superintendent of Police and the Deputy Magistrate. The most crucial point in their evidence, namely, the assertion that the Sub-Inspector on entering the house went straight to the remote and somewhat isolated chamber in which the discovery was made, is introduced in a singularly unconvincing manner in the evidence of Maharaj Singh, and is, in my opinion, quite sufficiently contradicted by the ordinary probabilities of the case. The conduct ascribed to the Sub-Inspector by the defence evidence is that of a man at once unscrupulous and singularly guileless and open in betraying himself by his actions. I am satisfied that the inner room in which these arms were found was under the control and in the exclusive possession of the appellant Babu Ram. He had the key of the outer door of the house in his own possession. He was the only inhabitant of the house (along with his family) at the time of the search, and he produced from his own possession the key of the inner room from which alone the small closet in which the unlicensed arms were found could be approached. I have not been asked by the prosecution to reconsider the question whether the learned Sessions Judge was right in refusing to record the conviction in this case under the first clause of section 20 of Act XI of 1878. Personally I find it difficult to understand with what purpose the offences mentioned in clause (f) of section 19 of the said Act are included in the list of offences specified in the first portion of section 20, if that section was not intended to apply to such a case as the present. The question must not be confused by reference to the wholly distinct question of the scope of the second clause of section 20 of Act XI of 1878, in respect of which I in no way dissent from the opinion pronounced by a learned Judge of this Court in the case of Ram Sarup v. Emperor (1). The sentence passed, however, was within the power of the Court below under section 19 of Act XI of 1878, and I see no adequate reason for making a formal alteration in the conviction.

A strong point has been made on behalf of the appellant of the alleged illegality of the search of this house by the Sub-Inspector Mafuz Ali Khan, without a warrant from a Magistrate. I find nothing in the provisions of Chapter VII of the Indian Arms Act to make such a search illegal. Section 25 deals with the special case of a Magistrate who receives information that a person who has arms, ammunition or military stores in his possession, is keeping them for some unlawful purpose or that for any other reason such person cannot be allowed to remain in possession of the same without danger to the public peace. In cases falling under section 25 it is wholly irrelevant whether the arms, ammunition or military stores in question are or are not covered by license. Unlicensed possession of arms punishable under section 19, clause (f) of Act XI of 1878, is a cognisable offence, and is, therefore, an offence which under the Code of Criminal Procedure a great many Police Officers are entitled to investigate. In the conduct of such an investigation a search for the purpose of discovering the arms in respect of which it is believed that an offence has been committed would be legal under section 165 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The Legislature, however, has seen fit to restrict the powers of Police Officers in the matter of offences punishable under section 19, clause (f) of the Indian Arms Act, by the special provisions of section 30 of the said Act. The power of search in respect of an offence punishable under that particular clause of the Act is required to be made in the presence of some officer specially appointed by name or in virtue of his office by the Local Government in this behalf. The Local Government has seen fit to empower, amongst other persons, Police Officers in charge of reporting stations, by virtue of their office, to conduct such searches. Sub-Inspector Mafuz Ali Khan was on the date in question an officer in charge of a reporting station and there is nothing illegal in the action taken by him. I am quite satisfied that the appellant has been rightly convicted and I am not prepared to interfere with the severity of the sentence passed by the Court below. I think the learned Sessions Judge has given an adequate reason for the same. I dismiss the appeal. The appellant must surrender to his bail to undergo the unexpired portion of his sentence.

Appeal dismissed.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 144—Jurisdiction of Magistrate to pass order—Imminent danger—Order, whether can be set aside after expiry of 2 months.

The jurisdiction of a Magistrate to pass an order under section 144, Criminal Procedure Code, depends on the urgency of the case. A mere statement by the Magistrate that he considers the case to be urgent is not sufficient to give him jurisdiction, if the facts set out by him show that in reality there is no urgent necessity for action. [p. 804, col. 2.]

In a proceeding to set aside an order of a Magistrate under section 144, Criminal Procedure Code, the High Court would not be justified in considering whether the opinion expressed by the Magistrate on the civil rights of the parties is right or wrong: what it has to consider is, whether the Magistrate's order was made with jurisdiction or not. [p. 804, cols. 1 & 2.]

Where a Magistrate by an order under section 144, Criminal Procedure Code, directed the petitioner to remove an obstruction to a culvert through which drainage of the Railway menial quarters used to flow into his tank and the only fact set out in the Magistrate's judgment indicating any imminent danger was that a rainfall of one inch in an hour would flood the menial quarters and compel their evacuation:

Held, (1) that this was an imminent danger of quite a different kind to that contemplated by section 144, Criminal Procedure Code: it was a danger to the inhabitants of a particular quarter who might be inconvenienced but was not a source of danger to public health; [p. 804, col. 2.]

(2) that the order under section 144, Criminal Procedure Code, should be set aside even though more than 2 months had expired since its passing inasmuch as a prosecution of the petitioner under section 188, Indian Penal Code, for disobedience to the order had been instituted. [p. 804, col. 1.]

Rule against the order of the District Magistrate, Burdwan.

FACTS.—Petitioner was the owner of a tank near Burdwan Railway Station. The railway authorities used to pour the washing and drainage of their menial quarters into this tank and these made the tank fearfully foul and insanitary. The Municipality served the petitioner with a notice to keep the tank perfectly clean. The petitioner thereupon let it out by taking a kabuliyat, dated Aswin 1324 B. S., and also put certain obstructions to prevent the railway drainage from falling into the tank. Then the railway authorities asked for an injunction from the Magistrate of Burdwan against the petitioner for removing the obstruction, and the District Magistrate hearing the evidence of both sides decided the matter in the petitioner's favour. Then sometime after the railway authorities again moved the Magistrate and the Magistrate, after taking evidence of both sides, passed an order under section 144 of the Criminal Procedure Code on the 13th March 1918 directing the petitioner to remove the obstruction within 7 days and allow the drainage water of the railway quarters to fall into the petitioner's tank. The petitioner thereupon moved the High Court against that order.

Mr. S. K. Das (with him Babu Ambika Pada Chaudhury), for the Opposite Party, raised a preliminary objection that two months having expired the petitioners were time-barred. The order of the Magistrate has spent its force and what is the use of interfering after 2 months? In such cases your Lordships have always refused to interfere. In the matter of Krishna Mohun Bysack (1), In the matter of the petition of Chunder Nath Sen (2), Ananda Chandra Bhattacharjee v. Carr Stephen (3), Queen-Empress v. Pratap Chunder Ghose (4), Hurbullubh Narain Singh v. Luchmeswar Prosad Singh (5) cited.

Babu Manmatha Nath Mukerjee (with him Babu Haradhan Chatterjee), for the Petitioner. —Your Lordships have interfered in such cases even after two months [see Thomson v. Emperor (6), Chandra Kanta Kanjilal v. Emperor (7)] in cases of imminent danger to public health.

As regards merits I submit: (1) The order of the Magistrate does not come within the provision of section 144, Criminal Procedure Code, and the materials on the record do not give the Magistrate jurisdiction to make the order.

(2) No order can legally be passed under section 144 which will have the effect of causing nuisance to the petitioner's tank.

CHANDRA NATH MUKERJEE v. EMPEROR.

An order under this section (section 144) is only justifiable if there be satisfactory ground for holding that the 2nd party's action has caused serious and imminent danger to the health of the locality.

JUDGMENT.—This is a Rule calling upon the District Magistrate of Burdwan and the East Indian Railway Company to show cause why the order of the District Magistrate directing the petitioner to remove an obstruction to a certain culvert should not be set aside. The order in question was passed under section 144, Criminal Procedure Code, and a preliminary objection has been taken that as more than two months have expired since the order was passed, the order has spent itself and that this Court cannot now interfere.

Our attention, however, has been drawn on behalf of the petitioner to the decision of this Court in the case of Chandra Kanta Kanjilal v. Emperor (7). In that case an order under section 144, Criminal Procedure Code, which had expired was set aside. The only difference which we can see, so far as the present point is concerned, between that case and the present one is that in that case the petitioner had been prosecuted under section 188 before the Rule was obtained. In this case the Rule has been obtained against the order under section 144 only; but we are informed that a prosecution under section 188, Criminal Procedure Code, for disobedience of that order has since been instituted. We do not think it necessary to require the petitioner to make a fresh application to quash the prosecution which has since been instituted in order to give him a locus standi to question the order under section 44, Criminal Procedure Code. Sooner or later this Court will have to determine whether this order was made with or without jurisdiction and as the parties are now before us, we think that that question should be decided in these proceedings.

Stated shortly, the dispute between the parties is, whether the opposite party have a right to drain a certain triangular piece of land belonging to them into the petitioner's tank or whether they have not. Into the merits of this dispute we have no intention of entering. In fact, in these proceedings we should not be justified in considering whether the opinion expressed by the Magistrate on the civil rights of the parties is right or wrong. What we have to consider is, whether the Magistrate's order was made with jurisdiction or not. Jurisdiction under section 144, Criminal Procedure Code, primarily depends on the urgency of the case. The Chapter is headed: "Temporary orders in urgent cases of nuisance or apprehended danger." In our opinion in the present case although the Magistrate has held that the present state of the land round the railway menial quarters is a source of imminent danger to the public health in consequence of the 2nd party's act in closing the culvert which admits the drainage water into his tank, we cannot find in his statement of the facts any justification for the finding that the danger is imminent. It appears that this dispute has been going on for some time and on a previous occasion proceedings under the same section resulted in an order directing the removal of the obstruction of the passage of water into the petitioner's tank being revoked on the 2nd October 1917. The Magistrate has held that the evil is a cumulative one. That may be so; but it is not shown that the culminating point has been reached at which there is imminent danger. The only fact which he sets out in his judgment which would indicate any imminent danger is that a rainfall of one inch in an hour would flood the menial quarters and compel their evacuation. But this is an imminent danger of quite a different kind to that on which this order is based. It is a danger to the inhabitants of this quarter who may be inconvenienced but is not a source of danger to public health. The mere statement by the learned District Magistrate that he considered the case to be imminent is not sufficient to give him jurisdiction, if the facts set out by him show that really there was no urgent necessity for action in this connection, and that we so hold in the present case. We accordingly make the Rule absolute and set aside the order of the District Magistrate, dated the 13th March 1918, under section 144, Criminal Procedure Code, passed against the petitioner, on the ground that it was made without jurisdiction.

Rule made absolute.

EMPEROR—APPLICANT

*versus*GULAB AND OTHERS—CONVICTS—OPPOSITE PARTY.Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 300, Excep. 4, 304
—Culpable homicide not amounting to murder—Death caused in sudden fight—Offence.

A dispute arose over the payment of the rent of a certain field between the three accused and the deceased. The former attacked the deceased and his nephew with lathis and a regular fight took place between the parties. The result was that considerable injuries were caused on both sides and that the deceased was killed:

Held, (1) that lathis being lethal weapons, the accused must have known that they were likely to cause death; [p. 805, col. 2; p. 803, col. 1.]

(2) that the case fell under Exception 4 to section 300 of the Penal Code and that all the accused were guilty of an offence under section 304 of the Penal Code. [p. 806, col. 1.]

Criminal revision from an order of the First Additional Sessions Judge, Aligarh, dated the 9th February 1918.

Mr. R. Malcomson (Assistant Government Advocate), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—Notice was issued by a learned Judge of this Court to the three persons Gulab, Majid and Ghafoor to show cause why they should not be convicted of an offence punishable under section 304 of the Indian Penal Code; why the sentences passed on them should not be enhanced, or why they should not be ordered to be re-tried on a charge under section 302 of the Indian Penal Code. The facts of the case, as found by the Court below and which appear to us to have been correctly found, are as follows:—There was a sugarcane crop standing in three fields. It had been sown by the deceased Hardial and his partners Jahangir, Bhagwan Sahai and others. These fields had been given to Hardial by the accused to enable him to recoup himself for certain monies which he had advanced to them and which were due to him from them. The mortgage of an occupancy holding is of course contrary to law. No bond was executed in this case but the fields were actually made over to Hardial and he cultivated them. One of his duties was to pay the rent.

The evidence shows that he had failed to pay two instalments. On the date in question he and his friends and his nephew Ganga Prasad were cutting the sugarcane crop when the three accused appeared upon the scene and Gulab objected to his cutting the crop as he had not paid the rent. Hardial replied that he had intentionally not paid the rent because the accused owed him other money and that he had set it off against the debt. Abuse followed between the parties and thereupon, according to the evidence for the prosecution, the three men attacked Hardial with their lathis. Ganga Prasad was also armed with a lathi and a regular fight took place between two men on one side and three on the other. The result was considerable injuries on both sides. Hardial received three blows on the head, one on the cheek, one across the ear and some on his body. The injuries on the head were all on the right side. According to the evidence for the prosecution some of the injuries were inflicted after he had been knocked down and the fact that the injuries on the face, ear and head are all on the right side, is some indication of the fact that this really occurred. Ganga Prasad also received considerable injuries. Upon other persons arriving at the scene, the accused fled. The Court below has convicted the accused under section 325 of the Indian Penal Code of having voluntarily caused grievous hurt, relying upon the ruling in the case of Chandan Singh v. Emperor (1). It is obvious that the offence of culpable homicide either amounting to murder or not amounting to murder was committed. A man's life had been taken. It is obviously impossible in cases of this description to be able to prove that the fracture of the skull which resulted in death was caused by a blow from the lathi of any special one of the assailants. In the present instance Hardial had three fractures of the skull and had received three lathi blows upon the head. The three accused were all armed with the same class of weapon. They all attacked Hardial. A lathi is a lethal weapon, as has been repeatedly held in this Court for very many years. The person who uses a lathi must know, on an occasion like this, that he is very likely to cause death. The three accused were moved by a common intention. That intention may not have been to cause death, but in carrying out their intention they all used deadly weapons and they must be deemed to have known that they were likely to cause death. We cannot agree that the accused can only be convicted of voluntarily causing grievous hurt. It is impossible to say whose lathi fractured the skull. The other blows inflicted on the body of Hardial caused only simple hurt. It appears to us that the present case falls within Exception 4 of section 300 of the Indian Penal Code, wherein it is stated "that culpable homicide is not murder if it is committed without premeditation in a sudden fight in the heat of passion upon a sudden quarrel and without the offenders having taken undue advantage or acted in a cruel or unusual manner." If five or more persons had banded together in this matter on behalf of the accused, no one would have hesitated to have held all five guilty of the offence of culpable homicide not amounting to murder (section 149 of the Indian Penal Code). Why, because the number is reduced to three, these three should not be equally guilty under section 304 of the Indian Penal Code, we fail to understand. If one man alone had committed the offence he also would have been convicted under section 304 of the Code. It is illogical to say because two others joined with him with similar weapons, that, therefore, the offence committed by the three is reduced to the lesser offence of voluntarily causing grievous hurt. With all due respect to the learned Judge who decided it we find it impossible to agree with the opinion expressed in the case of Chandan Singh v. Emperor (1). If the facts were as they are reported, then the offence, in our opinion, was not even one under section 304 of the Indian Penal Code. It was a cruel and a brutal assault, premeditated and committed for the purpose of revenge upon an unfortunate man. The offence committed appears to us nothing more or less than murder and all three accused were equally guilty as they were clearly moved by the same intent and had the same object and all three used lethal weapons. We do not agree with the view of the law taken in that case and in that respect we would point out that it was quite inconsistent with the remarks to be found in the case of Hanuman v. Emperor (2). The remarks at page 563* are worthy of note. They run as follows:—"It is impossible to prove by direct evidence the intention of a particular individual. The intention can only be inferred from the reasonable and probable result of his act or conduct. The learned Judge seems to confuse the meaning of the term intention with desire. It is quite possible that these persons had no wish either collectively or individually to kill Sheoratan (as is indicated by the fact that no wound was discovered on his head) but nevertheless if they beat him in the way it is proved that they did, they must be taken to have had knowledge that their act must in all probability cause death or such bodily injury as was likely to cause death, and if so they are guilty of murder. Under circumstances such as these it is quite immaterial to ascertain whose blow was the immediately fatal one." The learned Judges who decided that case distinctly dissented from the rule of law laid down in the case of Dhian Singh v. Emperor (3), which was a judgment of a single Judge of this Court. They distinctly say: "We cannot agree with the rule of law laid down in Dhian Singh v. Emperor (3)." We should also call attention to the decision of this Court in the case of Emperor v. Ram Naras (4). This was similarly a case of three men who with the same intent and object attacked another. They were armed with lathis. They inflicted serious injuries which resulted in death. All three of them were found guilty of the offence of murder. These cases no doubt are distinguishable from the case before us for here the matter was a sudden one, it sprang up suddenly and the injuries were inflicted in the heat of passion. We think that the case falls within Exception 4 of section 300

(1) 43 Ind. Cas. 438; 16 A. L. J. 11; 40 A. 103; 19 Cr. L. J. 150.

EMPEROR V. GULAB.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss 79, 147, 448—Husband carrying away wife by force against her will —Offence, nature of—Husband, right of, to use force to compel wife to live with him—Restitution of conjugal right, suit for.

Both under the English and Indian Law, although it is the duty of a wife to reside and cohabit with her husband, the husband has no right to use force or violence to enforce this right even when the wife's refusal to live with him is without any reasonable cause. [p. 808, cols. 1 & 2.]

There is nothing in Hindu or Muhammadan Law to justify a husband in using force or restraint to compel his wife to live with him, instead of having resort to a Civil Court for restitution of conjugal rights. Nor can such action be justified under section 79 of the Penal Code. [p. 803, cols. 1 & 2.]

Where a Hindu husband in company of several associates forcibly entered the house of a third person and took away by force his married wife from there against her will:

Held, that the husband and his associates were guilty of offences under sections 147 and 448, Indian Penal Code. [p. 808, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeal by the Local Government against an order of acquittal passed by the Additional Sessions Judge, Hyderabad.

Mr. E. Raymond, Public Prosecutor for Sind, for the Crown.

Mr. Laichand Hassomal, for the Accused.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the Local Government against an order of acquittal under sections 147 and 448, Indian Penal Code, in respect of accused Nos. 2 (Ramlo), 3 (Nanji), 4 (Gaju) and 7 (Pitho) passed by the Additional Sessions Judge of Hyderabad in an appeal against their convictions under those sections by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Mirpur Khas. Notices have not yet been served on Gaju and Pitho and the appeal has, therefore, been heard only in respect of the other two.

The facts alleged are as follows:—
Pitho's wife Jivat was said to have been enticed away by two men against whom Pitho filed a complaint under section 498, Indian Penal Code, in the Court of the First Class Magistrate, Jamesabad. On the 11th September 1916, there was a hearing of that case at which Jivat was present, having been called as a witness. After her examination she applied to the Court for Police protection on the ground that the complainant and his party were going to take her away by force. The Magistrate wrote a letter to the Sub-Inspector asking him to see that no force was used to her and ordered a Police constable by name Mahomed Parial to escort her to the Sub-Inspector or wherever she wanted to go. In accordance with her desire he went with her to the house of a P. W. D. Overseer Allahbux, where the then accused's Counsel, Mirza Farukhbeg, had put up. He refused to keep her with him as he feared serious consequences, seeing a crowd of Kolhis, to which community the present accused belong, had collected and assumed a threatening attitude. The Policeman, however, asked Mirza to let her remain in the house until he got more Police from the Thana to assist him and Mirza assented to this. As soon as the Policeman left, a large number of Kolhis (among whom the accused are said to have been) rushed into the house. Jivat thereupon ran into an inner apartment and closed its door from inside. The Kolhi offenders, however, broke it open and forcibly removed her with them. Some of them were armed with hatchets, some with lathis and some with sticks. The accused Ramlo and Nanji with 12 others were accordingly charged with rioting under section 147, Indian Penal Code, and house trespass under section 448, Indian Penal Code.

The Additional Sessions Judge did not upset the conviction on the only grounds specified in the memorandum of appeal to him, viz., that the identity of the appellants was not satisfactorily established and that it was proved that they were elsewhere at the time: but did so on the ground that Pitho had the right to compel his wife to accompany him even though it was against her will and that he was justified in calling upon his associates to help him in removing the woman from what he calls the "wrongful custody" of Mirza and Allahbux. He gives no authority for this view and is clearly wrong. Mr. Lalchand who represented Ramlo and Nanji admitted he could not support it, at any rate as regards the offence under section 147, Indian Penal Code.

The general English Law is that though it is the duty of a wife to reside and cohabit with her husband, yet the husband is not entitled if his wife refuses to live with him, even without any reasonable cause, to restrain her by force or to keep her in confinement. Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume XVI, page 318, Article 627. This was established by the case of Reg. v. Jackson (1), overruling a supposition to the contrary which previously existed and which has probably led to the Additional Sessions Judge's decision. The law in India is clearly the same. Sections 339, 340 and 350, Indian Penal Code, make no exception in favour of force or restraint by a husband to his wife such as is provided for in the case of rape (section 375); and the only possible exception applicable is section 79, Indian Penal Code. To fall under this, it would have to be shown that a husband is, under Hindu or Muhammadan Law, justified in using force or restraint to compel his wife to live with him in spite of the general English Law and the provisions of the Penal Code already mentioned. This point is discussed in Wilson's Digest of Anglo Muhammadan Law, Edition 1895, pages 48—50, and 2nd Edition, page 154, and his conclusion is against any such exception in favour of a Muhammadan husband. In the present case the husband is a Hindu and no greater protection from the ordinary criminal law can be claimed for him. No doubt, as ruled in Tekait Mon Mohini Jemadai v. Basanta Kumar Singh (2), Hindu Law (as does English Law) imposes on a wife the duty of residing with her husband wherever he may choose to reside; but there is certainly no authority for the proposition that he can enforce his right to demand that his wife shall live with him by violence instead of by resort to a civil Court for restitution of conjugal rights.

As regards the offence under section 448, Indian Penal Code, Mr. Lalchand submitted that the primary intent of the trespassers was not to intimidate, insult or annoy any person in possession of the property but to carry away the woman. Her forcible removal was, however, an offence and the trespass was, therefore, done with intent to commit an offence and so falls under the definition of criminal trespass. In the cases Queen-Empress v. Rayapadayachi (3) and Gaya Bhar v. Emperor (4), which are relied on by the Additional Sessions Judge, the intent was to do an act which was not an offence (viz., sexual intercourse with an adult unmarried woman) and these consequently have no application to the present case.

The main facts alleged which have been recapitulated above are clearly proved by the evidence in the case and have not been questioned by Mr. Lalchand or by the Additional Sessions Judge in his judgment. The only remaining question is, whether it is proved that Ramlo and Nanji were among the persons who entered the house and took part in the forcible removal of Jivat.

Against them is the evidence of Jivat, who was in the best position to identify her assailants as the affair happened about sunset. She states that they and two others named by her broke open the door of the room in which she was and took her out. She further says that Ramlo had a knife in his hand. We are asked to discredit her testimony on two grounds. The first is that according to the record of her statement to the Police she said that all the Kolhis entered the room.

EMPEROR v. RAMLO.

Jivat as to this explains that what she really said was that all the Kolhis entered the house and that she did not say that all entered the room, but only some came there. This is certainly more probable for, as the number of Kolhis who entered the house is alleged to have been 40 or 50, it would be almost a physical impossibility for all of them to enter the room without impeding the ones who took an active part in the removal of the woman. Having regard to the informal way in which Police statements are recorded it is not unlikely that a mistake was made of the kind alleged by Jivat, and this cannot be taken as a discrepancy which really discredits her subsequent testimony. Secondly, reliance is placed on the defence evidence of the Honourable Mr. Bhurgri and Mr. Nur Mahomed as to the alleged statement of Jivat to them. The former states that she said that "Pitho and 2 others whose names she did not know had carried her away from a house", while the latter deposes that she said Pitho had taken her away and there were two other Kolhis with him whom she did not name. But Mr. Bhurgri's statement that she said she could not name the two others is not supported by Mr. Nur Mahomed and it is very unlikely that she would not know the Kolhis in question. She might have said that Pitho had taken her away because she knew it was done at his instigation; and as to the number who took her from the room it is only a reduction by one of the number stated at the trial. Thus even accepting the evidence of the Honourable Mr. Bhurgri and Mr. Nur Mahomed the woman is not seriously discredited, and the discrepancy in their evidence is sufficient to throw doubt on the accuracy of their memories.

Jivat's testimony is corroborated by Alladito, who says he saw Nanji and three other men carrying away Jivat and by Mirza and Allahbux, who both name Ramlo as known to them previously and having been among the Kolhis who entered the house. No substantial reason for discrediting them on this point has, in our opinion, been advanced by Mr. Lalchand. They appear to be disinterested witnesses who have given their evidence without any bias either against accused or in favour of the Police case.

In addition there is the testimony of a large number of prosecution witnesses who merely said they identified all the accused as present without naming any particular ones. This evidence is not so trustworthy and has not been much relied on by the Public Prosecutor.

According to Jivat whose evidence on the point is not contradicted, Ramlo is a brother-in-law and Nanji a cousin of Pitho. Nanji is also Patel of the Kolhis and Ramlo is the Kamdar of the Honourable Mr. Bhurgri. It is, therefore, not unlikely that they would assist Pitho and take a leading part in this organised attempt of the Kolhis there to get forcible possession of Jivat's person.

No identification test was held by the Police, but as remarked in Punhu v. Emperor (5) the weight to be attached to the identification of an accused by any particular witness generally depends more on the opportunities he had to observe him and on his general credibility than on the evidence that he actually picked out the accused from a number of other men. In this case we think Jivat's identification of Ramlo and Nanji corroborated by the other evidence mentioned is amply sufficient to prove that they took part in the rioting and house trespass charged against them.

We, therefore, reverse the acquittal and convict them under sections 147 and 448, Indian Penal Code. The two accused took a leading part in an organised criminal act of defiance to the authorities which calls for a deterrent punishment. We restore the concurrent sentences of six months' rigorous imprisonment passed on them by the First Class Magistrate.

Order of acquittal reversed.

Public Gambling Act (III of 1867), as amended by Act I of 1917, ss. 3, 4—Keeping common gambling house—Being found in gaming house—Proof—Presumption.

In order to sustain the conviction of an accused person for keeping a common gambling house it is necessary for the prosecution not only to prove that the accused owned the house, or was the occupier of it, and that instruments of gambling were kept or used in it, but that they were kept or used for the profit of the accused. In the absence of evidence to show that profit or gain was actually made, a conviction cannot be maintained upon mere suspicion [p. 810, col. 2.]

Where it is not established that a particular house is a common gaming house, the presence of the accused in that house can raise no presumption against them, and even if the house is a common gaming house, no presumption will arise against them unless it can be shown that gambling was going on at the time when they were present. [p. 810, col. 2; p. 811, col. 1.]

Criminal revision from an order of the First Class Magistrate, Meerut.

Mr. Nihal Chand, for the Applicants.

Mr. R. Malcomson (Assistant Government Advocate), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The applicants have been convicted under the Gambling Act III of 1867, as amended by Act I of 1917. Raghunath has been convicted under section 3, the others under section 4 of the Act. The case against these persons was that they were carrying on wagering or betting on sattas relating to the sale of opium. Raghunath was charged with keeping a common gambling house. Under Act I of 1917 wagering or betting has been included in the definition of "game," and any article used as a means or appurtenance of or for the purpose of carrying on or facilitating gaming is included in the expression "instrument of gaming." What happened was this. The Police raided the shop of Raghunath where he deals in cloth. They found the other accused (and some others) assembled there, sitting round a lighted lamp and some writing was being done by one of the persons assembled. The Police seized a number of papers which were found in that room. They also found money in a box of Raghunath and loose silver pieces and money in the possession of the other accused. It was stated that the papers which were discovered were papers used for the purpose of betting and were, therefore, instruments of gambling. What the papers really were it is difficult to say. They contained writings which were in cypher. One witness, namely, Kundan Lal (prosecution witness No. 6), attempted to explain what some of the papers meant. If his statement is correct the papers show that they related to betting. The paper which was being written at the time the Police raided the house of Raghunath has not been produced or proved. I have considered the evidence and have heard the arguments addressed to me on behalf of the accused and the Crown. It is very difficult to say whether the papers found did in fact relate to wagering or betting. With the exception of one paper the others did not show that this betting, if any, was going on after the passing of Act I of 1917, which made betting an offence under the head of gambling. Having regard, however, to the nature of the papers, it may be assumed that they related to gambling. In order, however, to sustain the conviction of Raghunath for keeping a common gambling house it was necessary for the prosecution to prove not only that he owned the house, or was the occupier of it, and that instruments of gambling were kept or used in it, but that they were kept or used for the profit or gain of Raghunath. There is not a particle of evidence to show that he made any profit or gain out of the transactions which might have taken place in his house. It is possible that he made some profit, but in the absence of evidence to show that profit or gain was made he could not be convicted merely upon suspicion. Therefore, in my opinion, his conviction for keeping a common gaming house as defined in Act I of 1917 cannot be sustained. As regards the other accused there is no evidence whatever that they were engaged in betting or wagering when the Police raided the house. As it has not been established that the house was a common gaming house, their presence in that house can raise no presumption against them and even if the house was a common gaming house, no presumption will arise against them unless it can be shown that gambling was going on at the time when they were present. As to this there is no evidence whatever. It is probable, as I have said above, that gambling (that is betting or wagering) used to be carried on in Raghunath's house; but that alone would not justify his conviction or the conviction of the other accused, in the absence of evidence showing that his house was a common gaming house within the definition of that expression in the Act and that the other accused gambled in that house. Under these circumstances the conviction must be set aside. I allow the application, set aside the conviction of the accused and the sentence passed on them and direct that the fines, if paid, be refunded. I also direct that the moneys seized in the house be returned to the persons from whose possession they were seized.

Application allowed.

The question of the relevancy and admissibility of a confession is for the Judge to decide. Mr. Orr, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The accused Kabili Katoni has been found guilty by the unanimous verdict of the Jury of the murder of one Mangal Singh and has been sentenced to death by the Sessions Judge of the Assam Valley District. The case has come before us under section 374 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and there is also an appeal by the accused to this Court.

It was argued that there had been such a misdirection by the learned Sessions Judge as vitiated the verdict of the Jury and that the accused was entitled to a new trial. The passage relied upon was that where the learned Judge was dealing with the burden which lay upon either side to prove such facts as they asserted. "In this case" (he said) "it is for Kabili to satisfy the Jury that he was ill-treated by the Police or that inducements were offered." On 12th September 1917, Kabili had made a detailed confession before a Magistrate. To that confession he adhered, with some slight differences and additions, before the Committing Magistrate on 27th September. On 5th December 1917, before the Court of Sessions he retracted his confession. He said that after his arrest the Police tied his hands behind him and kept him in confinement; they ill-treated him in various ways and pressed him to tell everything and make a confession; as the Police ill-treated him he repeated the story they told him. Further, he said that he was brought to the Magistrate by two constables, who told him that he would be released if he told the Magistrate everything they instructed him to say; that he confessed to the Magistrate through fear of the Police; and that his statement to the Magistrate was false. Now the question of the relevance and admissibility of the confession is for the Judge to decide; when he has decided that it is relevant, and it has been laid before the Jury, it is for them to appraise its value as evidence, and one test which they will have to apply is whether it appears to them to have been freely and voluntarily made. Speaking generally, the burden of proving any fact which he asserts is upon the accused. In this case, if he alleged ill-treatment by the Police or any inducement by them to him to confess he should have done something to prove it. Here the prosecution tendered the confession and examined the Magistrate recording it to show that it was voluntarily made. Not a question was asked of the Magistrate in cross-examination to suggest the contrary, nor was a question asked of the Sub-Inspector who had had charge of the case throughout to suggest that there had been any improper conduct on the part of the Police by way of either ill-treatment or inducement. Fifteen days after the confession the accused adhered to it before the Committing Magistrate. It was not until the trial in the Court of Session that the accused withdrew his previous statements. It cannot be said that the direction of the learned Judge was erroneous, still less that it vitiated the verdict. The charge must be read as a whole, and later on the learned Judge was careful to impress upon the Jury that it was only if they found the statement to have been voluntarily made that they could take it into account as evidence. He left it to the Jury to decide whether in the circumstances the confession should be regarded as genuine or not. There seems to be no force in the contention that the Jury were misdirected by the Judge.

Turning to the facts, which we are entitled, and indeed bound, to consider under Chapter XXVII, Criminal Procedure Code, they are very simple and it is unnecessary to recapitulate them, as they are set out clearly and succinctly in the charge to the Jury. The story told by Nepali Lalung clearly implicates Kabili, Rabiram and himself in the murder of Mangal Singh. The question is whether it can be accepted as the true version of the matter. Nepali was on his own showing an accomplice and was tendered and accepted a pardon under section 337, Criminal Procedure Code. It was essential that his evidence should be corroborated in material particulars. The Jury evidently were of opinion that it was, and also the Judge, as he accepted the Jury's verdict. We see no reason to differ. In the first place we have the confession of the accused Kabili which appears to have been freely and voluntarily made. It differs from Nepali's story in some important particulars. Nepali describes Rabiram the brother of Kabili as being present and taking a leading part in the murder. Kabili's confession makes no mention of Rabiram, but this was, no doubt, from a desire on his part to screen his brother. Rabiram was also put upon his trial but was acquitted by the Jury, presumably because there was nothing against him but Nepali's statement. Then Nepali states that Mangal and Kabili went away in Dasibar's boat and that he followed in another boat and joined them afterwards; while Kabili says that Mangal and Nepali were in Dasibar's boat, and that he joined them afterwards. Dasibar corroborates Nepali. The motive for the crime spoken to by Nepali is corroborated both by Kabili's confession and by the evidence of Namala, the wife of Sat Singh, with whom Mangal is said to have had an intrigue. Kabili adds on this point that both Mangal and he used to visit Namala. It would appear at first sight that Nepali's story was improbable, inasmuch as he poses as a close friend of Mangal Singh. Why then should he for a paltry sum of Rs. 20, which does not appear to have been paid, join with Kabili and Rabiram in murdering Mangal Singh deliberately and in cold blood? It may be that Nepali has not told the whole truth on the question of motive. Something of that kind is indicated by Kabili, when in his confession he stated that Mangal Singh and Nepali Lalung also had quarrels between them. But Nepali has never sought to exculpate himself with regard to the share which he took in the actual murder. After giving the case our best consideration, we find it to be a true case against Kabili Katoni. There appear to be no mitigating circumstances, which would justify the infliction of the lesser sentence. The murder was most cruel and deliberate. We accordingly dismiss the appeal and confirm the sentence of death.

Appeal dismissed.

The word 'defile' in section 295, Indian Penal Code is not confined to the idea of making dirty but is also extended to ceremonial pollution, which however must be proved.

Where the accused, who belonged to the Moothan caste in Malabar and claimed the status of Vaisyas, entered into the Nallambalam of a temple which was open to non-Brahmins:

Held, that their act did not amount to 'defiling' the temple within the meaning of section 295, Indian Penal Code.

ORDER.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—The accused belong to the "Moothan" caste, which is one of the divisions of the Sudra caste. There is nothing to show that their caste status is less high than that of Nairs and on the other hand while most Nairs are content to call themselves Sudras, Moothans have been trying to claim the status of Vaisyas as following the profession of trade; their women are called Chettichiyars and some of them have adopted the Vaisya surname "Gupta".

The prosecution theory that while a Nair's entry into the Nallambalam of the temple does not pollute the temple or the idols in it, the entry of a Moothan does so is prima facie improbable and I may say it almost amounts to an absurdity.

The contention that the particular custom in this temple is to make such entry an act of pollution, is sought to be proved by the evidence of Brahmin and Nair witnesses who gave no reason for their extraordinary opinion, which is clearly of very little worth.

I would set aside the conviction and sentences and order the fines to be returned.

NAPIER, J.—I agree. I accept the contention that the word 'defile' cannot be confined to the idea of making dirty but must also be extended to ceremonial pollution, but it is certainly necessary to prove pollution. The caste of the accused is not one of the polluting castes, vide Malabar Gazetteer, page 117. Neither is the act alleged, one confined by right to Brahmins as was the case in Sivakoti Swami (1) where a goldsmith touched the idol. It is simply presence in that part of a temple which is open to non-Brahmins but is alleged not to be open to the caste of the accused. In my opinion this is not 'defiling' within the meaning of section 295 of the Indian Penal Code.

On the report of a Junior Sub-Inspector of Police below the rank of an officer-in-charge of a Police Station, a Magistrate took cognizance of a case under section 46 of the Bengal Excise Act and convicted the offender:

Held, (1) that the Magistrate's proceedings were void under clause (p) of section 530, Criminal Procedure Code, inasmuch as he was debarred by section 83 (a) of the Bengal Excise Act from taking cognizance of the case on such a report or complaint; [p. 815, col. 1.]

to show cause why the conviction and sentence of the petitioner under section 46 of the Bengal Excise Act of 1909 should not be set aside. The provisions of section 83 of the Bengal Excise Act not having been complied with, the whole proceeding is invalid. Mr. R. K. Mukerjee, on whose complaint the accused was sent for trial, was not an officer authorised or empowered to send up the accused for trial. The defect is not one which can be cured by section 537 of the Criminal Procedure Code, because the trial must be held by a Court of competent jurisdiction. Here everything was done without jurisdiction and so the conviction cannot stand. Refers to section 530 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

Mr. Orr, Deputy Legal Remembrancer, for the Crown, submitted that in the Presidency town, cases were generally sent to the Magistrate by the order of the Assistant Commissioner of Police or Deputy Commissioner of Police, and in this case the accused was sent for trial by the order of the Deputy Commissioner of Police, and Mr. R. K. Mukerjee was the formal complainant.

[Mr. Langford James:—Mr. R. K. Mukerjee had no authority to institute the complaint.]

He was a Sub-Inspector not below the rank of an officer-in-charge of the Thana. Refers to section 4 of the Code of Criminal Procedure in which the expression "officer-in-charge of a Police Station" has been defined. Refers also to section 19 of the General Clauses Act (X of 1897). Refers also to rule 18 of the Excise Manual, Volume II, page 249. Even assuming that there had been any defect in the procedure that was cured by section 537 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

Mr. Langford James, briefly replied.

JUDGMENT.—This Rule was issued on the Chief Presidency Magistrate of Calcutta to show cause why the conviction of the petitioner and the sentence passed upon him should not be set aside on the ground specified as ground (c) in the petition. Ground (c) is in these terms: "For that the whole trial was irregular and invalid inasmuch as the junior officer Mr. R. K. Mukerjee was not legally competent to send up this case to the Magistrate". The petitioner, it appears, has been convicted and sentenced under section 46 of the Bengal Excise Act, 1909. Clause (a) of section 83 of the Act lays down that no Magistrate shall take cognizance of an offence referred to in section 46 except on his own knowledge or suspicion, or on the complaint or report of an Excise Officer or an officer empowered in this behalf by the Local Government. Now, the only complaint or report which we can find in this case is the document marked Exhibit A. The heading is "Report of serious case of section E Town on the 10th day of April 1918". The document purports to be signed by R. K. Mukerjee. In the first column the name of Sub-Inspector R. K. Mukerjee appears again as the name of the complainant. It may be that Sub-Inspector R. K. Mukerjee had been authorised by one of his superior officers to make this complaint or report, but we can see no reason for saying that the case was not instituted by the report or complaint made by him or that the Magistrate did not take cognizance of the case on that report or complaint. The Sub-Inspector is not an Excise Officer and the question therefore is whether he was "an officer empowered in this behalf by the Local Government" within the meaning of section 83 (a). Turning to Chapter X of Volume II of the Excise Manual we find a number of rules or instructions issued by the Board of Revenue. Rule 18 refers to section 83 (a) and states that the officers empowered by the Local Government are Police Officers not below the rank of officers-in-charge of a Police Station. The rule quotes a Government notification which was not placed before us, and there is no reason for supposing that the effect of the notification is not accurately reproduced. There is no definition of "officer-in-charge of a Police Station" in the Excise Act but the term is defined in the Criminal Procedure Code [section 4 (h)]. In the present case in our opinion Sub-Inspector R. K. Mukerjee was an officer below the rank of an officer-in-charge of a Police Station. He was a Sub-Inspector attached to the Jorasanko Police Station, but at all material times he appears to have been subordinate to Sub-Inspector Masud Hossein who was the officer-in-charge of the Station. The mere fact that both officers were Sub-Inspectors is not sufficient.

SHEO SAMPAT PANDE v. EMPEROR.

Mr. Orr, appearing for the Crown, has urged that this objection to the trial was not taken in the Court below until the evidence had all been recorded. But it was taken at that stage and it was open to the Magistrate then to take additional evidence, if there was any doubt as to a question of fact on which his jurisdiction depended. He did not take that step. Apparently he had no doubt as to the facts and no suggestion seems to have been made that the facts were not as we have stated them. He seems to have thought that he had no power to quash the whole proceedings. He had power, however, if it was shown to him that the proceedings had not been legally instituted and that he had no jurisdiction to hear the case, to acquit the accused on that ground. The defect was not a mere irregularity to which section 537 of the Criminal Procedure Code applies. Apart from anything else, that section presupposes a trial by a Court of competent jurisdiction. Here the Magistrate's proceedings are void under clause (p) of section 530. He had tried an offender whom he was not empowered to try. In the circumstances he was debarred by the Act from taking cognizance of the case.

We may mention that this is the second time within a few days in which the authority of a Police Officer to make a complaint or report under section 83 (a) of the Bengal Excise Act has been brought in question before us, and we are of opinion that in such cases the complaint or report should show on its face that it is made by some officer who has the requisite authority.

The result is that this Rule is made absolute and the conviction and sentence are set aside on the ground that the Magistrate's proceedings are void. The petitioner will be discharged from his bail-bond.

Rule made absolute.

CRIMINAL REVISION No. 110 OF 1918.

May 22, 1918.

Present:—Justice Sir P. C. Banerji, Kt.

SHEO SAMPAT PANDE—APPLICANT

versus

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 4,

195, 476—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 193, 210—“Complaint”, what is—Sanction to prosecute—Perjury, trial for, without sanction or complaint, legality of.

Accused, who held a decree against the complainant, recovered in execution of the decree a sum larger than was due thereunder. The complainant thereupon applied to the Court for sanction to prosecute the accused. No sanction was granted, nor was any action taken under section 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The presiding officer of the Court, however, addressed to the Magistrate of the district a letter in which he stated all the facts and concluded by soliciting orders in the case. The Sub-Divisional Officer through whom the letter was submitted, instead of sending it on to the District Magistrate, himself ordered the prosecution of the accused and tried and convicted him under sections 193 and 210 of the Penal Code:

Held, (1) that the letter addressed to the District Magistrate did not amount to a complaint within the meaning of section 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code; [p. 816, col. 2.]

(2) that no sanction having been granted under section 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code and there being no complaint under section 476 of the Code, the trial and conviction of the accused were illegal. [p. 816, col. 2.]

Criminal revision from an order of the Sessions Judge of Gorakhpur.

Mr. Peary Lal Banerjee (with him Mr. N. P. Upadhyaya), for the Applicant.

Mr. R. Malcomson (Assistant Government Advocate), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The applicant Sheo Sampat, who is an old man of seventy, has been convicted under sections 193 and 210 of the Indian Penal Code under the following circumstances. Sheo Sampat brought a suit in the Revenue Court against one Barbu for arrears of rent. He claimed Rs. 16-11-0 as principal and interest; an ex parte decree was passed in his favour on the 29th of September 1916 for Rs. 9-4-0 and Rs. 2-5-0 costs, total Rs. 11 9-0. The judgment-debtor, Barbu, made an application to have the ex parte decree set aside. This application was granted. The case was re-heard and on the 24th of May 1917 a decree was made for Rs. 8-3-0 which included costs. On the 19th of May 1917, Sheo Sampat filed an application for execution of the decree. In that application the date of the decree was erroneously mentioned as the 20th of June 1917 and the amount claimed was put down as Rs. 16-11-0. He took out attachment of some property of the judgment-debtor. Meanwhile the judgment-debtor deposited the full amount of the decree. In pursuance of the order of attachment of the property of the judgmentdebtor some bullocks were attached by the Amin. The judgment debtor paid the Amin Rs. 17-5-6 which was the amount mentioned in the warrant of attachment, and this amount was received by Sheo Sampat who granted to the judgment debtor a receipt in full for the aforesaid sum of Rs. 17-5-6. Subsequently he filed an application in the Court which was executing the decree, stating that he had made a mistake and that the amount due to him was only Rs 8-3-0 and no more. Three days before the date of that application the judgment-debtor had applied to the Court to sanction the prosecution of Sheo Sampat. No sanction was granted. The Assistant Collector of the second class, who was the Tahsildar in whose Court the execution proceedings were held, did not take action under section 476 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, but on the 6th of October 1917 he addressed to the Magistrate of the district a letter in which he stated all the facts and concluded by soliciting orders in the case. This letter was intended to be submitted to the District Magistrate through the Sub Divisional Officer, Mr. Gurney. Mr. Gurney instead of sending the application to the District Magistrate himself ordered the prosecution of Sheo Sampat and issued process against him. He himself tried the case and convicted Sheo Sampat and sentenced him to two years' rigorous imprisonment and a fine. This conviction was upheld by the lower Appellate Court.

SHEO SAMPAT PANDE v. EMPEROR.

The first contention in revision is that the trial was without sanction and was, therefore, illegal. The offences of which the applicant Sheo Sampat has been convicted are offences referred to in section 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Therefore it was absolutely necessary either that sanction for the prosecution was granted or that a complaint was made by the officer before whom the offence was committed, or some officer to whom he was subordinate. As I have already stated, no sanction was granted and as no proceedings were taken under section 476 it cannot be said that a complaint was made under that section. There remains, therefore, the question whether the letter of the 6th of October 1917, addressed to the Magistrate of the district, amounted to a complaint within the meaning of that expression as defined in the Code of Criminal Procedure. I find it very difficult to hold that it was a complaint. All that the Tahsildar did was to state the facts of the case. He did not ask that any action should be taken by the Magistrate, nor did he intend that the Magistrate should proceed according to law against Sheo Sampat. The only thing stated in the letter after stating the facts was "I beg to solicit orders." From this it may be inferred that he asked the Magistrate of the district, who also happened to be the Collector to whom the Tahsildar was subordinate, to instruct him as to what action he should take in the matter. It would be stretching the meaning of the expression "complaint" to hold that the Tahsildar by writing this letter made a complaint and intended the letter to be treated as a complaint against Sheo Sampat with a view to the Magistrate taking action. If that had been the intention, he would not have solicited orders which apparently meant orders to him to take some action in the matter. Under these circumstances I am unable to agree with the learned Sessions Judge that there was a complaint by the Tahsildar in this case, and that consequently the Magistrate who tried the case should take cognizance of it. In my opinion, as there was no complaint, the trial was illegal and the conviction must be set aside.

I have also considered the merits of the case. I am unable to hold that the accused Sheo Sampat intentionally made a false statement in his application for execution. The statement contained in that application was no doubt false but I am not satisfied that he knew that the statement was false, or believed that it was untrue, and that he made the untrue statement intentionally. In this view the conviction of Sheo Sampat cannot be maintained.

I allow the application, set aside the conviction and sentence and direct that the fine, if paid, be refunded. The applicant need not surrender to his bail. The bail bond is discharged.

(Order set aside.)

MISCELLANEOUS CIVIL APPEAL No. 5 OF 1917.

Musammât RADHIBAI—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXIII, rr. 1, 3—Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890), ss. 17, 19 (b)—Withdrawal of suit after decree, whether permissible—Compromise regarding removal of guardian duly appointed by Court, legality of—Hindu Law—Father, rights of, as natural guardian, whether affected by conversion to other religion—Caste Disabilities Removal Act (XXI of 1850), s. 1.

The procedure of withdrawal from a suit under Order XXIII, rule 1, of the Civil Procedure Code applies only to pending suits, before a decree has been made. [p. 817, col. 2.]

An application for guardianship duly made under the Guardians and Wards Act, and on which an order appointing a guardian has been duly made, cannot be withdrawn under Order XXIII, rule 1, Civil Procedure Code, by the applicant during the course of an appeal filed by the opponent, in spite of both the appellant and the respondent being consenting parties to the withdrawal. [p. 817, col. 2; p. 819, col. 1.]

Nor can the respondent's withdrawal be recorded as a compromise under Order XXIII, rule 3, Civil Procedure Code, inasmuch as its effect would be to withdraw from the determination of the Court the consideration of the welfare of the minor and to defeat the provisions of sections 40 and 42 of the Guardians and Wards Act. [p. 818, col. 1.]

Section 19 (b) of the Guardians and Wards Act recognizes the natural right of the father, but as the section is controlled by section 17 of the Act the paramount consideration in appointing a guardian is the welfare of the minor. [p. 818, col. 2; p. 819, col. 1.]

That portion of the Hindu Law which disqualifies a father, on account of the loss of caste involved in his conversion to any other religion, from becoming the guardian of his children after his conversion having been abrogated by Act XXI of 1850, the mere fact of conversion of a Hindu father to Islam is not, per se, sufficient to deprive him of his natural rights of guardianship over his children. [p. 819, col. 1.]

Appeal against the order of the District Judge, Hyderabad.

The Hon'ble Mr. Faral-i-Hussein, assisted by Mr. T. G. Elphinston, for the Appellant.

Mr. Abdul Rahman Mahomed Yakub, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

PRATT, J. C.—This is an appeal by Dr. Wassanmal alias Sheikh Mahomed Yakub against an order of the District Judge, Hyderabad, appointing his wife Radhibai guardian of the persons of four of their minor children—two girls aged 13 and 7 and two boys aged 4 and 2 years respectively.

The appellant, who was a Hyderabad Amil, was converted to Islam on the 6th August 1916 and his wife the respondent thereupon applied to the District Judge to be appointed guardian of these children.

The order under appeal was made on this application of the respondent and the appellant contends that his conversion does not affect his natural right to be guardian of his children and that the District Judge erred on the merits in deciding that he was not fit to be their guardian.

Subsequent to the order of the District Judge the respondent Radhibai returned to the protection of her husband and her Counsel states that she withdraws her application to be appointed guardian. It is contended that we should give effect to this withdrawal by setting aside all orders that have been made on her application.

The procedure provided in the Civil Procedure Code is applicable, so far as may be, to proceedings under the Guardians and Wards Act VIII of 1890. But Order XXIII, rule 1 (1), does not allow a plaintiff who has appealed to get rid of the decree that has been made by the simple process of withdrawing the suit. The case of Satyabhamabai v. Ganesh (1) is an authority on the point, and it was there said that rights actually vested and created by the decree cannot be annulled by the plaintiff's withdrawal of his own free will and without the consent of the Court. There have been conflicting decisions as to whether a plaintiff-appellant can in appeal withdraw with leave of the Court under Order XXIII, rule 1 (2), from a suit which has been dismissed. But we think the correct view is that taken in Eknath Ranoji v. Ranoji Bawaji (2) that this procedure only applies to pending suits and before the decree has been made. The effect of these two cases is that withdrawal with or without leave of the Court from a suit or of a suit does not enable a party in appeal to get rid of the decree.

No doubt here the party seeking to get rid of the order of the lower Court is the party in whose favour the order has been made, but that does not affect the question for the same line of reasoning applies. A party in whose favour a decree or order is passed could get it set aside by adjustment or compromise under Order XXIII, rule 3. If the respondent's withdrawal be regarded as a compromise under which the appellant is declared guardian, then in my opinion that would not be a lawful compromise and the Court should not record it. Its effect would be to withdraw from the determination of the Court the consideration of the welfare of the minors and it would defeat the provisions of section 40 of the Guardians and Wards Act, under which the guardian cannot be discharged without leave of the Court, and of section 42, which empowers the Court in that event to appoint another guardian.

The appeal must, therefore, be heard and decided on the merits.

Under section 19 (b) the District Judge could not appoint the mother guardian unless he found that the father was not fit. The District Judge considers that up to the date of his conversion the appellant was fit to be guardian of his children and has based his order solely on events that occurred at the time of the conversion.

These events are those deposed to by Radhibai. On the evening that he embraced Islam the appellant took his wife and children out for a drive on the pretext of giving them an outing. He took them to a house where he confined them and separated the mother from the children. Then in the morning he brought Radhibai back to his brother's house and left her there and disappeared with the children. This evidence has been believed by the District Judge, and we think it more probable than the suggestion that the children were removed without appellant's knowledge by some of the Hindu relations. We have also no doubt that the appellant withheld the children from the Court and wilfully disobeyed orders made from time to time for their production. The telegrams from Kashmore in particular show that the appellant was aware of the whereabouts of the children.

On these facts the District Judge says the appellant was guilty of cruelty in separating the children from their mother, that he subordinated the children's interests to a fanatical zeal for their conversion and that he withdrew the children from the guardianship of the Court.

These do not appear to me to be sufficient reasons for depriving the father of his natural rights. If he is condemned for cruelty in separating the children from the mother, allowance must be made for his fear that the mother would separate the children from him. I think what was operating upon his mind was not fanaticism but fear of the Hindu relations.

The District Judge refers to a dictum of Bowen, L. J., in the case of Agar-Ellis, In re: Agar-Ellis v. Lascelles (3), where withdrawal of a ward from the jurisdiction of the Court was instanced as a case where the Court would interfere with the rights of the father. But the learned Judge was there referring to the partial restriction on the rights of the father when he is restrained by the Court from taking a ward of the Court out of jurisdiction. This is made clear by the corresponding passage in the judgment of Cotton, L. J., at page 333 of the same report. The case is one which does not support the District Judge's order, for it proceeds on the ground that the Court should not, except "in very extreme cases," interfere "with the discretion of the father but should leave to him the responsibility of exercising the power which nature has given to him by the birth of the child."

I shall not, however, refer to English cases for two reasons. In the first place, as pointed out by my brother Crouch in the interlocutory judgment in this matter, the dicta of English Judges refer to different social conditions. And in the second place, the whole law is contained in Act VIII of 1890 which is a consolidating Act. As said by Lord Herschell, in Bank of England v. Vagliano (4): "The purpose of such a Statute surely was that on any point specifically dealt with by it the law should be ascertained by interpreting the language used, instead of, as before, by roaming over a vast number of authorities in order to discover what the law was, extracting it by a minute critical examination of the prior decisions."

If we refer to the Act the law is perfectly simple. Section 19 (b) recognizes the natural right of the father, but this is controlled by section 17 according to which the paramount consideration is the welfare of the minor. If a reference is necessary on this point I would mention the cases of Skinner v. Orde (5); In the matter of Saithri (6) and In re Gulbai and Lilbai (7).

It is suggested that as section 17 refers to what is consistent with the law to which the minor is subject, Hindu children cannot be subjected to the guardianship of a Muhammadan father. But the father is guardian under Hindu Law and that portion of Hindu Law which disqualifies the father on account of the loss of caste involved in his conversion is abrogated by Act XXI of 1850.

Thus the question whether the appellant is a fit person to be guardian of his children must be decided by considerations affecting the welfare of the minors. Now after the District Judge made his order the main ground on which Radhibai's application had been made was removed by her return to her husband, for the appellant is now able to provide a home for his children.

The question of the appellant's conduct at the time of his conversion I have already dealt with. There remains only the question of religion.

The mere fact of conversion is not per se a reason for declaring the father unfit, for the Courts cannot say that one religion is better than another.

But the girl of 13 and perhaps also the girl of 7 are old enough for Hindu beliefs and Hindu ritual to have made some impression on their minds. Their conversion would be a break in the continuity of their spiritual development. It would also have the effect of breaking the ties of relationship and affection connected with their Hindu life. But now that the mother has returned to live with the father a breach with Hindu relations is, I am afraid, inevitable. And as to religion the parents have agreed that the children shall make their own selection when older. This is not an ideal arrangement but is perhaps the best possible in the circumstances.

As the parents are living together and are able to provide a home for the children, I think the welfare of the children will be promoted by their living in that home. The elder girl who is old enough to express an intelligent preference wishes to live with her parents. I think we should allow the family to resume its normal life and should refrain from passing any order which might disturb the harmony of the family by impairing the authority of the father as head of the family and natural guardian of his children.

Although the respondent has not contested the appeal, we have heard two Hindu relations who have opposed it with a heat which betrays the odium theologicum. They suggest that the appellant might at some future time drive Radhibai out of his house and deprive the children of her care. I cannot believe there is any ground for this suggestion but if the appellant does break up the children's home, the respondent will be able to renew her application.

I would accordingly reverse the order of the District Judge and make no order as to costs.

CRCUCH, A. J. C.—I concur. The word "suit" in Order XXIII means, I consider, the attempt to gain an end by legal process, and the withdrawal by the plaintiff from such an attempt cannot have the effect of depriving any other party of rights conferred by any order passed by the Court in the suit, or relieve the plaintiff himself of any duties so imposed. Once a person has, on his own petition, been appointed a guardian, the question whether or not the guardianship should be terminated is one for the Court to decide, and a mere statement that he withdraws his petition cannot change the special status of the minor which has been created by the Court.

If this Court were now dealing with the case on the original side, there can be no doubt that it would be not only unnecessary but improper to remove the father from his position as guardian and appoint the mother. The mother is content to live with her husband and the children, so far as they are competent to express an opinion, raise no objection to residing with their parents, under the usual conditions. The father has been guilty of robbing, which amounts to such misconduct as in law renders him unfit to be guardian; the mother has shown herself to be a person of resolute character and strong convictions, with a powerful backing in her religious opinions. The mere possibility that the father's influence may override that of the mother, and that the children may at some future time be forced to adopt an uncongenial religion, forms no good ground for taking the very serious step of depriving the father of that authority which is vested in him by law and which he is anxious to retain and transferring it to the wife who is unwilling to accept it. The case as presented to us in appeal is essentially different from that with which the lower Court had to deal, and, though in ordinary cases I consider that great weight should be attached to the opinion formed by the trying Court of the fitness or unfitness of a person to be guardian, I have no hesitation in the present case in agreeing to an order reversing that of the lower Court.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII B. C. of 1885), ss. 104H, 111A—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 42, suits under—Limitation—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 120.

Section 104H of the Bengal Tenancy Act refers only to suits by persons aggrieved by an entry of a rent settled in Settlement Rent Roll prepared under sections 104F to 104H of the Act, or by an omission to settle such rent. [p. 822, col. 2]

Where in a suit, which was described in the plaint is one under section 104H and section 111A of the Bengal Tenancy Act and section 42 of the Specific Relief Act, the reliefs claimed by the plaintiffs were inter alia the following:—

(ka) That the plaintiffs may be declared as occupancy raiyats.

(kha) That the land of schedule cha below may be declared as included in the right which the plaintiffs may be held to have.

(ga) That proper rents may be fixed of the lands in the possession of the plaintiffs and time for payment of the said rent may be fixed.

(gha) That the tenants under the plaintiffs may be held to have no rights as settled raiyats or occupancy raiyats.

(una) That the tenants under the plaintiffs may be declared to be korfa tenants (under-tenants):

Held, that so far as relief (ga) was concerned, the suit was one under section 104H of the Bengal Tenancy Act and was governed by the special law of limitation provided by that section, but that the claim for other reliefs was outside the scope of that section, and to that extent the suit was one under section 42 of the Specific Relief Act, as provided by the proviso to section 111A of the Bengal Tenancy Act, to which the limitation applicable was that provided by Article 120 of Schedule I of the Limitation Act. Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Noakhali, dated the 8th December 1914.

Babus Gunada Charan Sen and Satish Chandra Bhattacharyya, for the Appellants.

Babus Kam Charan Mitra and Ramesh Chandra Sen, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are shortly these. In the course of a proceeding under Chapter X of the Bengal Tenancy Act for settlement of rents and preparation of Settlement Rent Roll in accordance with the provisions of section 104 of that Act in respect of a Mahal called Char Khundkar bearing Touzi No. 1516 of the Noakhali Collectorate, plaintiffs claimed that they were occupancy raiyats in respect of all the lands described in schedule cha of the plaint. The Revenue Officer, however, held that plaintiffs were tenure-holders and only in respect of lands included in schedule ga covering an area of 1,309 bighas 9 cottas 8 chittaks, and he assessed the rent payable by the plaintiffs on the footing of their being tenants of that class by giving them an allowance of 30 per cent. on the assets. The plaintiffs being recorded as tenure-holders, those holding under them were recorded as occupancy raiyats. Against these orders of the Revenue Officer passed prior to the final publication of the Record of Rights, under rules framed by the Local Government, an appeal lay to the Commissioner of the Division and the plaintiffs filed an appeal to the Commissioner of the Chittagong Division, who heard arguments but did not deliver judgment. On the 30th of August 1909, while the appeal was still pending before the Commissioner the record was finally published. Meanwhile, the Local Government framed new rules whereby the authority of the Director of Land Records was substituted for that of the Commissioner of the Division for the purpose of hearing appeals under section 104G and although nothing was said in the rules regarding pending appeals, the Commissioner of the Chittagong Division sent the appeal to the Director of Land Records for disposal. The parties seem to have acquiesced in the transfer of the appeal to the Director of Land Records, who heard the parties and came to the conclusion :—

RAJANI KANTA MOOKERJEE v. SECRETARY OF STATE.

(i) That the plaintiffs' jote covered an area slightly in excess of 1,309 bighas 9 cottas and 8 chittaks.

(ii) That the plaintiffs were tenure-holders.

(iii) That those holding under the plaintiffs were occupancy rai-yats.

(iv) That the rent entered as payable to the plaintiffs by the tenants holding under them should in certain cases be raised.

(v) That 30 per cent. on the assets allowed to the plaintiffs by the Revenue Officer was a correct basis for assessing the rent payable by the plaintiffs and should stand.

The decision of the Director of Land Records on points (i) and (iv) involved an alteration in the record as finally published. For this and for certain other questions which arose under Regulation VII of 1822, with which we are not concerned, the Director of Land Records referred the case to the Board of Revenue under section 104G (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act as well as under the provisions of the said Regulation. This order of the Director of Land Records is dated the 15th of April 1910. The judgment of the Board of Revenue is dated the 2nd of May 1911, and it affirms the decision of the Director of Land Records on all the points.

The present suit is brought by the plaintiffs for a declaration that they are occupancy rai-yats and not tenure-holders, that they are occupancy rai-yats in respect of all the lands described in schedule cha of the plaint and not in respect of lands of schedule ga only, that the assessment of rent made on the basis of their being tenure-holders and the refusal of the Revenue Authorities to recognize their tenancy in respect of the remaining lands of schedule cha was illegal, that the Revenue Authorities were wrong in not fixing a time from which such rent was to take effect. The reliefs claimed by the plaintiffs are the following :—

(kz) That the plaintiffs may be declared as occupancy rai-yats.

(kha) That the land of schedule cha below may be declared as included in the right which the plaintiffs may be held to have.

(gz) That proper rent may be fixed of the lands in the possession of the plaintiffs and time for payment of the said rent may be fixed.

(gha) That the tenants under the plaintiffs may be held to have no right as settled rai-yats or occupancy rai-yats.

(una) That the tenants under the plaintiffs may be declared to be korfa tenants (under-tenants).

(cha) That a decree may be passed for costs in Court with future interest.

(chha) That a decree may be passed granting any other relief which the plaintiffs are entitled to get in the fair judgment of the Court.

The suit was described in the plaint as one under section 104H and section 111A of the Bengal Tenancy Act and section 42 of the Specific Relief Act. The learned Subordinate Judge, without entering into the merits of the case, has dismissed the suit on the ground of limitation. He holds that the suit is one under section 104H of the Bengal Tenancy Act and not having been brought within six months from the date of the certificate of final publication of the Record of Rights or within six months from the date of the disposal of the appeal by the Board of Revenue is barred by the special limitation provided in that section.

On appeal, it has been urged before us—

(a) That the plaintiffs were not aware of the date on which the Board of Revenue gave their decision and that, therefore, the date of decision should, for the purpose of limitation, be deemed to be the date on which the plaintiffs became aware of such decision and that, as a matter of fact, they came to know of it after a copy of the judgment was forwarded to the Commissioner on the 13th of October 1911.

(b) That the Commissioner of the Division was wrong in not deciding the appeal himself and its transfer to the Director of Land Records was illegal and as the Commissioner to whom the appeal lay has passed no decision on the appeal, the suit cannot be said to have been filed more than six months after such decision.

(c) That the suit is not one under section 104H and, therefore, the special limitation provided by that section does not apply.

As regards the first and the second points, it appears to us that the Commissioner having transferred the appeals to the Director of Land Records and the plaintiffs, who were the appellants, having raised no objection to such transfer, but having on the other hand acquiesced in his jurisdiction by appearing and arguing the appeal before him, should not be allowed to raise the objection now. Even if plaintiffs' contention is correct, they must be held to have abandoned their appeal to the Commissioner and the suit, if it is one under section 104H, would still be barred. The Director of Land Records delivered his judgment on the 15th of April 1910, and if he was the final appellate authority the suit filed on the 12th of April 1912 was clearly out of time.

Assuming, however, that the appeal to the Director of Land Records was not finally disposed of until the Board of Revenue gave their decision on the recommendations made by the Director, we still think that the date of such decision must be taken to be the 2nd of May 1911, i. e., the date which it purports to bear and that the date of plaintiffs' knowledge is wholly immaterial. Plaintiffs have not shown that there has been any error in dating the judgment and we must presume that it has been correctly dated.

As regards the third point, we are of opinion that except in so far as the plaintiffs ask for proper rent to be fixed for lands regarding which their tenancy has been recognised and for a date to be fixed from which such rent is to take effect, the other reliefs claimed in the suit are outside the scope of section 104H. That section only refers to suits by a person aggrieved by an entry of a rent settled in a Settlement Rent Roll prepared under sections 104F to 104H or by an omission to settle such a rent. Therefore, in so far as the plaintiffs are aggrieved by the rent settled as payable by them as tenureholders in respect of lands of schedule ga and desire to have such entry corrected, the suit falls within the scope of section 104H and has rightly been held to be barred by limitation. It may also appear at first sight that as regards lands as to which the plaintiffs' right as tenants has been negatived, the case is one of omission to settle a rent, but it cannot be said that so far as the plaintiffs are concerned they are aggrieved by such omission. They are aggrieved not by the omission to settle their rent, but by the omission to recognise their tenancy. We, therefore, think that the plaintiffs' claim for reliefs other than the one marked ga is not barred by limitation. It is true that the declarations asked for, if granted, would afford grounds for alteration of entries as to rents but the mere fact that under the law plaintiffs cannot get such an alteration effected by means of this suit, is not enough to deprive them of the right to get these declarations which may be of value to them apart from the question of correction of the Settlement Rent Roll regarding the rent entered in it or omitted from it. These declarations are not necessarily ancillary to the prayer for settlement of a new rent.

We, therefore, hold that relief claimed in paragraph ga is barred under section 104H, but that the claim for other reliefs is outside the scope of that section and to this extent the suit is one under section

BHARATPUR STATE v. SECRETARY OF STATE.

42 of the Specific Relief Act, to which the limitation applicable is that provided by Article 120 of the First Schedule of the Limitation Act. The right to maintain such a suit under certain conditions is expressly saved by the proviso to section 111A of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The view we take is supported by a decision of Chitty and Chatterjea, JJ., in the case of Promoda Nath Roy v. Asir-ud din Mandal (1).

The question whether the suit is otherwise competent and is properly framed to enable the Court to grant any of the reliefs asked for, is one which we need not consider at this stage.

Upon this view of the case we dismiss the suit with regard to prayer g, but as regards the other prayers we set aside the decision of the Court below and remand the case for the trial of the other issues. Costs will abide the result.

Case remanded.

ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT.

FIRST CIVIL APPEAL NO. 376 OF 1915.

April 29, 1918.

Present:—Mr. Justice Piggott and Mr. Justice Walsh.

THE BHARATPUR STATE—PLAINTIFF—

versus

THE SECRETARY OF STATE—DEFENDANT
—RESPONDENT.

Escheat—Resident in village dying without heirs—Zemindar, rights of—Wajib-ul-arz, entry in, value of—Grant, construction of—Burden of proof.

A sahukar, who was the owner and occupier of a house situate within the limits of Mouza S and also within the limits of the town of G, died without leaving heirs and the Secretary of State took possession of the house and its site as the ultimate heir to the property of a deceased person. The plaintiff claimed the site as the Zemindar under the Settlement of 1850, by which the Government had conferred upon him revenue-free proprietary rights over the soil of Mouza S, and asserted that the deceased was owner only of the materials of the house with a right of residence therein but had no right to transfer the site or the right of residence. The wajib-ul-arz of the Mouza provided that residents of the Mouza had no proprietary rights in anything except the materials of the houses, that they could not sell the site or the right of residence in the sites and that in the event of the death of an occupier of such a house, without legal heirs, the proprietor of the Mouza would be entitled to possession of the house along with the site. The defendant contended that the house in suit, being situated within the limits of a town, was not subject to the ordinary law governing the relations between occupiers of houses and the ground landlord in the inhabited sites of agricultural villages:

Held, (1) that unless the defendant could show that the effect of the Settlement of 1850 was not to grant to the proprietor in the mahal in the village any substantial rights of ownership in respect of what was described in the papers of that Settlement as the abadi appertaining to the mahal, the defendant could not successfully maintain that the residents possessed anything more than a limited interest in the houses occupied by them or in their sites; [p. 827, col. 2.]

(2) that upon the evidence, as between the parties to the suit, it must be held that the plaintiff had successfully discharged the burden of proof which lay upon him and that the deceased did not possess an absolute interest alienable at his will and pleasure in respect of the property in suit but merely a limited interest which could not be the subject of escheat to the Crown. [p. 827, col. 1.]

First appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Muttra.

Messrs. Motilal Nehru and Baldeo Ram Dave, for the Appellant.

Mr. A. E. Rytes, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

PIGGOTT, J.—This is an appeal by an unsuccessful plaintiff, the Bharatpur State, against the Secretary of State for India in Council, in which the plaintiff's claim was for possession of a certain house. The house in question was admittedly situated within the limits of a village known as Mauza Sakitra. Without going further into the arguments which have been addressed to us on the point, I am content to say that I accept the argument of the defendant respondent to the effect that it is also situated within the limits of the town of Gobardhan. The last owners and occupiers of this house mentioned either in the plaint or in the written statement were two persons of the name of Dip Chand and Mansa Ram, who were Sahukars by profession and resided and carried on business in the said house. It is common ground that both these persons are now dead and have left no heirs entitled to inherit their property. The de.

BHARATPUR STATE v. SECRETARY OF STATE.

defendant, acting through the Collector of Muttra, has taken possession of this house and its site in assertion of his claims as ultimate heir to the property of a deceased person. The plaintiff's claim is that he is the owner of the site on which the house stood, that Dip Chand and Mansa Ram were no doubt the owners of the materials of the house and had a right of residence therein, which could have descended to their heirs if any. Nevertheless, according to the plaintiff's case, Dip Chand and Mansa Ram had no transferable interest in respect of the site or the right of residence thereon, and were, therefore, in respect of this house merely the owners of a limited interest. With regard to the question of law on which this claim is based there has been no argument before us. Both parties are agreed that the law on the subject is correctly laid down in the case of Tulshi Ram Sahu v. Gur Dayal Singh (1). It is conceded on behalf of the defendant-respondent that if Dip Chand and Mansa Ram possessed in respect of the property in suit merely a limited interest, then this interest of theirs could not be the subject of escheat to the Crown and the claim of the plaintiff as owner of the soil cannot be resisted. The case for the defendant, however, is that the house in suit, being situated within the limits of a town, is not subject to the ordinary law governing the relations between occupiers of houses and the ground landlord in the inhabited sites of agricultural villages in these provinces, and that as a matter of fact Dip Chand and Mansa Ram could have sold the house in suit at any time with the right of occupation and residence and that the purchaser would thereby have obtained a good title, which could not have been contested by the Bharatpur State. The plaintiff has rested his case mainly upon two sets of documents, the Settlement Papers prepared in the year 1850, which are printed at pages A14—A23 of our record, and secondly, a certified copy of the wajib-ul arz or Record of Rights of Mauza Sakitra prepared at the Settlement of 1877 A. D. The learned Judge of the Court below has found that, on a true interpretation of the terms of that wajib-ul arz

the custom intended to be laid down is that all residents in houses situated within the limits of Mauza Sakitra, even though their houses may form part of the town of Gobardhan, have no proprietary right in anything except the materials of the houses, they cannot sell the site, or sell the house along with a right of residence on the said site; and in the event of the occupier of such a house abandoning the same, or dying without legal heirs, the proprietor of Mauza Sakitra, that is to say, the Bharatpur State, will be entitled to possession of the house along with its site. Nevertheless the learned Subordinate Judge has come to the conclusion that the custom thus stated in the wajib-ul arz of 1877 is not correctly stated and is not a custom binding as between the parties to this litigation. He says that the document in question as it stands is not a record of custom at all but merely a claim preferred on behalf of the proprietor of the Bharatpur State by his agent. It does not purport to have been signed by any person representing the interests of Dip Chand and Mansa Ram, would not have been binding upon them and would not even have formed a particularly strong piece of evidence against them, in the event of litigation between the Bharatpur State and any transferee of theirs. From this the Court below has gone on to hold that the conditions laid down in this document are not binding on the defendant and that, in view of other evidence on the record, it must be taken to be proved that Dip Chand and Mansa Ram, along with all other residents in the town of Gobardhan, possessed an absolute right of transfer in respect of the houses occupied by them. On this ground the Court below has affirmed the right of escheat claimed by the Secretary of State as defendant and has dismissed the plaintiff's suit. In the memorandum of appeal before us a point is taken as to the alleged wrongful exclusion of certain documentary evidence by the trial Court, but it has been admitted in argument that this plea cannot be pressed. For the rest, the appellant's case is that he is entitled to succeed under the terms of the village Record of Rights and that, failing this, he would, in any event, be entitled to succeed on the ground that he is the proprietor of the site and must be presumed to possess in respect of any house standing upon his land the ordinary rights of proprietors of agricultural lands in respect of the inhabited sites appertaining to the Mauzas of which they are the owners. A great deal of the argument before us at the hearing of this appeal was devoted to the question whether this Mauza Sakitra, or more especially the particular mahal of Mauza Sakitra in which the disputed house is situated, was or was not to be regarded as a purely agricultural village. The most important documentary evidence on this point is to be found in the Settlement Papers of the year 1850, to which reference has already been made. It appears that in that year the land of Mauza Sakitra was settled by Government with the Bharatpur State in a somewhat peculiar manner. The village was divided into two mahals of 15 biswas and of 5 biswas, of which the former alone was assessed to revenue. With regard to the smaller mahal of 5 biswas a revenue-free grant was made in favour of the Bharatpur State, subject only to certain small payments on account of road cesses and chaukidari dues, or local Police charges. The papers before us contain a complete description of the land appertaining to this revenue-free mahal of 5 biswas. I note more particularly that the cultivated area of this mahal amounted to a little less than 41 per cent. of the whole: that even if the land described as "old fallow" be added to the cultivated area, the total of the two comes to barely over 53 per cent. of the whole. Almost 22 per cent. of the entire area consists of groves and the rest is made up of thoroughfares, inhabited sites, tanks and unculturable land. Taking this description of the land along with the oral evidence, by which it is fully established that the inhabited site of village Sakitra forms, and has long formed, an integral part of the town of Gobardhan, I should be quite prepared, if the case turned upon it, to hold that the house in suit was not situated upon land forming part of the inhabited site of an ordinary agricultural village, so as to make the principles laid down by this Court in respect of the proprietorship of land in such village sites applicable in themselves to the land now in suit. What impresses me, however, on the other side is that this is a litigation between the owner of Mauza Sakitra and the Government, that is to say, the very authority which granted to him revenue-free proprietary rights over the soil of this 5 biswas mahal of Mauza Sakitra. I take it from the defendant's own case that in the year 1850, when this grant was made, the only inhabited site appertaining to Mauza Sakitra consisted of houses, shops and the like which formed part of the town of Gobardhan. Nevertheless Government took a portion of this town and, treating it as the inhabited site or abadi of Mauza Sakitra, granted it to the Bharatpur State as forming part of the revenue free mahal of 5 biswas in the said Mauza. Presumably Government meant something by making this grant and by including in the area so granted that portion of the town of Gobardhan in which the house now in dispute is situated. In an agreement which was taken from the Bharatpur State at the Settlement of 1850 a number of details are given regarding the inhabited area included in the 5 biswas mahal. It is stated that there is a Katra, or large enclosure, in which there are a number of houses or shops, which have been constructed by the proprietor of the land, that is to say by the Bharatpur State, that all the other houses at that moment standing have also been constructed by the same and that the Bharatpur State is not merely the owner of the soil but the owner of all the houses and of the aforementioned Katra standing in the abadi belonging to the 5 biswas mahal. It is asserted that the proprietor has every right in respect of the same and that, as regards the waste land then in existence, no one will be entitled to build upon it without his permission. The agreement in question appears to have been propounded by a duly authorised agent on behalf of Maharaja Balwant Singh, Raja of Bharatpur, and it is endorsed as having been accepted and ordered to be placed upon the record. At the subsequent Settlement of 1877 A. D., an elaborate paragraph was drawn up and inserted in the Record of Rights of Mauza Sakitra regarding the inhabited land appertaining to the village. This shows that there was no other inhabited site appertain-

ing to the said village except that portion of the town of Gobardhan in which the house now in suit is situated. Nevertheless it was provided that if the cultivators, whether possessing occupancy rights or tenants at will, and also the riaya, or tenants generally, have built any houses, cattle sheds or other enclosures on this abadi site, their rights in the same are limited to the materials. They can sell the materials if they like, but not the site; and the meaning of these provisions I take to be that they have no transferable right of residence. There are other provisions in which more general words are used, such as "bashindgan" (residents) and in which the word asami is used for tenant in place of riaya. In this connection it is expressly provided that, if any "asami" dies without an heir, the house occupied by him will pass to the Bharatpur State as proprietor of the site. The question of the interpretation of these provisions has been before the Courts on other occasions. A good deal of reliance is placed on behalf of the defendant-respondent on the result of a litigation which took place in the year 1906. The judgment is printed at page 6 of the book before us and in this judgment reference is made to the result of a previous litigation of the years 1874-75. Broadly speaking, it is sufficient to say that in this former litigation individual residents in the town of Gobardhan, and in that part of the town which forms the abadi of the 5 biswas mahal of Mauza Sakitra, succeeded in asserting against the Bharatpur State, the present plaintiff, a right to sell their houses together with a right of residence in the same. The decision in the suit of 1906 proceeds upon a certain interpretation of the provisions of the wajib-ul-arz of 1877, according to which those provisions are limited in their application to agricultural tenants. In the present case the learned Subordinate Judge has refused to accept that interpretation. He holds that the words in the wajib-ul-arz, as they stand, are wide enough to include all residents (bashindgan) in houses situated on the abadi in question. The point has been argued again before us, but I feel no hesitation in agreeing with the interpretation put upon this document by the Court below. I think the word "riaya" in itself is very general and is intended to extend the provisions in question to persons other than the occupancy and non-occupancy cultivating tenants spoken of immediately before. I think also that the word asami is wide enough, especially in this particular context, to include all residents of the abadi, even though not cultivating tenants or even agriculturists. What has determined the decision of this case in the Court below has been the evidence of a number of instances in which residents of houses situated within the area in suit, that is to say, within the abadi of the 5 biswas mahal of Mauza Sakitra, have exercised a right of transfer in respect of their houses, along with the right of residence in the same. In two of the instances already referred to, the rights of the tenants in question were affirmed against the Bharatpur State after litigation. Evidence has also been given of at least four instances in which, on the death of the owner or occupier of a house within the area in question without leaving any heir, the right of escheat was successfully asserted on behalf of the Crown, apparently without any opposition by the Bharatpur State. Moreover, as the learned Subordinate Judge correctly points out, the evidential value of such a document as this wajib-ul-arz of 1877 as against the occupiers of houses within the area in question at the time when this document was drawn up is not great. There is nothing in the document itself to show that any enquiry was made from these persons as to whether the rights recorded in favour of the proprietor of the soil, and to the prejudice of themselves, in this document were admitted by them to exist. The case, however, seems to be altogether otherwise in a litigation in which the contesting party is the Secretary of State for India in Council, that is to say, the Government itself. The Government made the original grant of this 5 biswas revenue free mahal in the year 1850; and if it did not intend to convey to the grantee, namely, the Bharatpur State, in respect of that portion of the site of the town of Gobardhan which was included in the mahal of 5 biswas of Mauza Sakitra, the ordinary rights of a proprietor of an agricultural village in the inhabited site of such a village, it is difficult to see what rights it intended to confer by the grant of the particular area forming this inhabited site. It accepted at the time from the representative of the Bharatpur State a document which expressly admitted full ownership on the part of the said proprietor in respect of all existing houses on the abadi in question and recognised the justice of his claim that no one should in future build any house upon the unoccupied land appertaining to the said abadi without permission. Then at the Settlement of 1877 a Record of Rights was drawn up under the direction of Government and included in the Settlement Papers, in which, as I hold, the right now claimed by the plaintiff in respect of the land in question is once more recognised. I do not wish to complicate what seems to me a tolerably straightforward case by suggesting that these Settlement Papers of 1850 and 1877 can be used so as to estop the Government, that is to say the defendant in this suit, from asserting that the papers in question were incorrectly prepared and that the rights acknowledged in these papers in favour of the plaintiff never in fact existed. I think, however, that it is very difficult for the defendant to get round these documents, otherwise than by proving some definite case of adverse possession on the part of the deceased owners through whom the defendant claims. It is not suggested that any case of this sort can be set up. On the evidence as it stands, as between the parties to this present suit, I think it must be held that the plaintiff has successfully discharged the burden of proof which lay upon him, and that Dip Chand and Mansa Ram did not possess an absolute interest, alienable at their will and pleasure, in respect of the property now in suit, but merely a limited interest which cannot be the subject of escheat to the Crown. The Full Bench case of this Court, Tulshi Ram Sahu v. Gur Dayal Singh (1), to which reference has already been made, was a case of the devolution of a fixed rate tenancy; but the arguments there used seem to me to apply with a great deal of cogency to the facts of the present case. I would almost go so far as to say that, unless the defendant can show that the effect of the Settlement of 1850 in favour of the Bharatpur State was not to grant to the proprietor of the 5 biswas mahal in village Sakitra any substantial rights of ownership in respect of what was described in the papers of that settlement as the abadi appertaining to this mahal, the defendant in the present suit cannot successfully maintain that Dip Chand and Mansa Ram possessed anything more than a limited interest in the house in question and in its site. Practically it seems to me that in taking possession of this house the defendant is derogating from the grant made in 1850 in favour of the Bharatpur State. The fact that there have been 3 or 4 other instances of similar encroachments on the part of the defendant, which have not been contested by the plaintiff, cannot take away from the plaintiff rights in respect of the land now in suit, if those rights are sufficiently established, as I hold them to be, by the plaintiff's documents of title, namely, the Settlement Records of 1850 and of 1877. In my opinion, therefore, we must accept this appeal, set aside the decree of the Court below and decree the plaintiff's claim as brought with costs throughout, including in this Court-fee on the higher scale.

WALSH, J.—I think this is a clear case. Mr. Motilal Nehru's argument on the document of September 1850 is well founded. That document seems to me consistent only with the existence at sometime or another of an old agricultural village, and it is clearly proved that this house was in that village. The indications of an agricultural village, unless I am much mistaken, are overwhelming.

Village customs, uncultivated land, a former settlement, and field maps are referred to from time to time. Fairs are said to take place. There are no village expenses but the Raja's Karinda manages the village. The income from sewai items is taken by the weighmen on behalf of the Raja. No taxes are fixed but blankets are taken from the shepherds every year and various contributions in kind are raised from a carpenter, a blacksmith and a barber. The duties of the chamars are elaborately defined; and the whole thing seems to me to contain overwhelming internal evidence of the character of the collection of houses, and of the cultivated and uncultivated lands, with which it deals. The corresponding khasra speaks of the tenants residing in the village, including the carpenter already referred to, and by a singular coincidence a person of the same name, carrying on business as a bania, who bears a suspicious resemblance to the person through whom it is suggested that the Government are now entitled to escheat. This person's house is in a Katra (which I understand to be, whether in village or in town, a nondescript collection of every kind of house) in this village and I am satisfied that the house in question, which it is admitted on the part of the Government is 100 years old, was situated in that Katra at that date. The map is even more significant. It shows the position of the tank which has been much spoken of, and of the serial No. 1, and it also shows what, I am satisfied, at that date was the south-east boundary of this abadi where it abutted upon the town of Gobardhan. I think the judgment of the Court below, reading between the lines, proceeded upon the assumption that this was really common ground as the case was contested in the Court below. It is perfectly clear that the point now relied upon on behalf of Government was not specifically raised by the defence and that paragraph 3 of the defence, which contains the real contention of the Government, dealt with the class of the property or class of occupier, and not with the geographical situation of the building. The wajib-ul-arz has been dealt with by my brother. I accept his construction of the words which I do not myself profess to understand, but if this is correctly translated it would clearly bear the meaning which has been put upon it by the learned Judge in the Court below. The view I take about these documents is this; not that they are necessarily binding on the Government, not that the Government could not prove by affirmative evidence that the real state of facts was something quite different, or that there is any estoppel, but that as against the Government they contain entries which the Government must be taken to have accepted as an accurate record of the then existing state of facts. They raise a very strong presumption of fact and they get rid of the difficulty which so constantly attends the discussion of the meaning of wajib-ul-arz in this country when no body is left alive to testify to the true facts, and each contending party relies on something or another tending either to strengthen or to qualify the effect of the wajib-ul-arz. The plaintiff, therefore, starts with what I may call a trump card. The Government Advocate attempted to get rid of the effect of this piece of evidence in two ways, firstly, by the description and history of the condition of the town of Gobardhan contained in the Gazetteer; secondly, by the evidence of sales and dealings largely coming from the side of the plaintiff and admittedly quite inconsistent with the plaintiff's case. Assuming for the moment that every statement in the Gazetteer is correct and that we are entitled to take judicial notice of its contents as facts established without other proof, it seems to me that every one of them is quite consistent with the plaintiff's case. They do not speak in the present tense of the existing conditions from an earlier date than 1884 but I will assume, as appears to be the fact, that there was always in or about this tank, which has great historical associations and great attractions for itinerant pilgrims, a town which through the growth of pilgrimage, commerce, fairs and so forth and through local development, generally called progress, has overrun and in substance, so far as identity is concerned, submerged its humbler neighbours. Towns in England, I do not know if it applies to India, frequently owe their development to people who wish to live near them and not in them. Everything points to the remains of this village having been submerged in the superior growth and development of the old town which apparently was originally only a neighbour. However that may be, I agree with the contention made on behalf of the appellant that once it is established that rights of this kind to property have existed they cannot be affected by a change in the character of the neighbourhood only. I think the sales to some extent admitted on the plaintiff's side, and for the rest proved by the defendant's witnesses, are quite intelligible upon the same footing. In fact in a conglomerate neighbourhood of this kind it is not unnatural to find instances entirely inconsistent with one another within a very short distance. The Government Advocate said that there was really no evidence on behalf of the plaintiff of any similar transaction to that which he is setting up in this case. I think in that respect he was wrong. There is no documentary evidence and it is certainly surprising that the plaintiff has failed to produce any. But there is positive and direct evidence of a considerable amount given by the plaintiff's Vakil or Agent, or Pleader, whoever he may be, of possession by the plaintiff Raja, which it is alleged has been recovered under similar circumstances to those relied on by the plaintiff in this case. Nothing would have been easier for the Government than to give direct evidence contradicting these allegations. In the absence of some evidence I think it must be taken to be proved that the Raja as Zemindar has, in previous cases in this abadi, resumed possession of houses which apparently were not occupied by persons who could be correctly described as agricultural tenants.

I always speak with hesitation about questions of custom because there are few questions about which misconception so easily arises. It seems to me that this case at any rate is a question of contract between the original Zemindar and the former occupiers of this property, and the question of what that contract was is one which we are called upon to presume in the absence of direct evidence about it. But if it does turn upon a question of custom, the learned Judge of the Court below has found in favour of the plaintiff in spite of everything that has been said in support of the contrary by the Government Advocate. The learned Judge of the Court below rightly said that the plaintiff was bound to prove the existence of the custom if he relied upon it, and went on to hold that it did exist, and then by an unfortunate misdirection, for which I can find no explanation in the judgment instead of giving effect to that finding, went on to say that "the general customary law of escheat to the Zemindar no longer holds good in Gobardhan." If that means anything it means what Mr. Motilal argued is not the law, namely, that owing to the changed condition of the neighbourhood the former rights of the Zemindar have been lost. That ground is clearly fallacious and I see no other ground upon which the decision for the defendant can be supported. I agree, therefore, with my brother that this appeal must be allowed.

BY THE COURT.—We allow this appeal, set aside the decree and order of the Court below and decree the plaintiff's suit with costs in both Courts.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII B. C. of 1885), s. 182—Homestead, occupation of, for more than twelve years—Occupier, whether becomes raiyat—Settled raiyat.

Before a person can become a settled *raiya*t of a village he must be a *raiya*t. Mere occupation of a homestead in a village for more than twelve years would not make the occupier a settled *raiya*t of the village. [p. 830, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Sub-Judge of 24-Pergannahs, dated the 3rd August 1915, reversing that of the Munsif, Basirhat, dated the 22nd January 1915.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Probadh Chandra Roy, for the Appellants.—The appeal arises out of a suit for ejectment from a land held by the defendant under a habuliyat. The defence is that the defendant is a settled *raiya*t of the village and has acquired a right of occupancy and, therefore, not liable to eviction. Although under the terms of the kabuliyat the defendant is to vacate the land on the expiry of the term, yet he refuses to do so on the ground that he has acquired a right of occupancy in the land and so is not liable to ejection. My submission is that under section 182 of the Bengal Tenancy Act the defendant has, by holding the homestead land for over twelve years, acquired a right of occupancy in the agricultural land in suit held by him under the lease for a term. The defendant is a settled raiyat of the homestead land, and, therefore, as soon as he begins to hold the agricultural land he acquires an occupancy right in it. Refers to sections 20 and 21 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

Babu Surendra Chandra Sen (with him Babu Hem Chunder Sen), for the Respondents.—A tenant of homestead land is not a settled raiyat. To acquire occupancy right by virtue of section 21 the defendant must first of all be a settled raiyat. At the time when the defendant took the lease he was not a raiyat within the meaning of section 5 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, so section 182 has no application to the case.

Babu Probodh Chandra Roy, in reply.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit in ejection, and the only question was whether the defendants had acquired occupancy rights in the land which would protect them from eviction. The lower Appellate Court found that though the defendants had a homestead in the village for over 30 years, they had no land in the village other than the land on which they entered under the kabuliyat in 1906 and that, therefore, they had not acquired any such rights. Before they could become settled *raiya*s in the village they would have to be *raiya*s, and that they entirely failed to prove. Section 182 of the Bengal Tenancy Act does not help the appellants. The appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 115, 151, 152—Mortgage decree making mortgaged property liable for mortgage as well as sub-mortgage—Amendment of decree, application for, dismissal of—Revision.

Plaintiff mortgagee brought a suit on his mortgage and obtained a decree. From the judgment it appeared that the Court intended that the property should be sold for the amount of the plaintiff's mortgage, interest and costs but finding that the plaintiff had made a sub-mortgage, it directed that the sub-mortgagee should get the amount of her mortgage out of the proceeds of the sale before the plaintiff was paid. But the decree as drawn up directed the property to be sold not only for the amount of the plaintiff's mortgage but also for the amount of the sub-mortgage, that is to say, that the defendant was made liable not only for the mortgage which he had created but also for the sub-mortgage which the mortgagee had created. The defendant, therefore, applied for amendment of the decree in order to bring it into accordance with the judgment, but the Court dismissed the application:

Held, that the decree as drawn up was quite incorrect and unjust and that the refusal of the Court to amend the decree amounted to a refusal to exercise jurisdiction vested in the Court, and that the High Court was, therefore, entitled to interfere in revision. [p. 831, col. 1.]

Civil revision from an order of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Benares, dated the 29th November 1917.

Mr. Gokul Prasad (for whom Mr. Bhagwati Shankar), for the Applicant.

Mr. Radha Kant Malviya, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This application in revision arises under the following circumstances. A suit was brought to realise the amount of a mortgage. It appears that the plaintiff had made a sub-mortgage. The Court decreed the plaintiff's claim. Reading the judgment it is absolutely clear that the Court intended that the property should be sold for the amount of the plaintiff's mortgage, interest and costs but finding that the plaintiff had made a sub mortgage it directed that the sub-mortgagee should get the amount of her mortgage out of the proceeds of the sale before the plaintiff was paid. There seems to be very little doubt that the decree as drawn up directed the property to be sold not only for the amount of the plaintiff's mortgage but also for the amount of the sub-mortgage, that is to say, the defendant and the defendant's property was being made liable not only for the mortgage which the defendant had made but also the sub-mortgage which the plaintiff had made. Nothing could possibly be more unjust and unequitable and it is impossible to read the judgment as having any such meaning. An application was made by the defendant to bring the decree into accordance with the judgment, pointing out this and another alleged error as to interest. We may point out that there had been an actual report made by the office of the Court that the amount of the sub-mortgage had been added to the amount of the plaintiff's mortgage in the decree by mistake. The only order which the Court below has made is to state that an amendment is "uncalled for." We think that under the special circumstances of this case this amounted to a refusal to exercise a jurisdiction vested in the Court. We allow the application and direct the lower Court to take up the application of the defendant for amendment of the decree and to proceed to deal with it according to law, paying due regard to what we have stated above. We have mentioned that there was another allegation about interest, that the decree was not in accordance with the judgment in respect of interest also. We have not gone into this matter but the lower Court will do so when the case goes back. The lower Court must take up the judgment and the decree and see whether the latter is in accordance with the former. The applicant will have his costs, including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

Execution—Sale, postponement of, on judgment-debtor undertaking to waive objections—Objections, whether can be raised after sale—Estoppel.

A judgment-debtor who gets an execution sale of his properties postponed by giving an undertaking that he would not raise any objection on the ground of illegality or irregularity, cannot, after the sale has taken place on the postponed date, ask to set it aside on the ground of any illegality or irregularity of which he was cognisant at the time he gave his undertaking. [p. 832, col. 2.]

Appeal against the order of the Subordinate Judge, Noakhali, dated the 21st June 1916.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Troilakhya Nath Ghose, for the Appellant.—This is an appeal from an order of the Sub-Judge refusing to set aside a sale on the ground that the judgment-debtor waived his right to object to the sale on the ground of illegality or irregularity. There cannot be such a waiver. See Dhanukdhari v. Nathuni Sahu (1).

[FLETCHER, J.—The facts in the case of Dhanukdhari v. Nathuni Sahu (1) do not correspond to the facts of this case. Give me a case where the judgment debtor undertook to waive all irregularities and illegalities of sale.]

I submit the facts of that case were similar. There also the judgment-debtor undertook to waive all irregularities.

[FLETCHER, J.—But here the waiver is much wider.]

A person cannot waive his right to object to illegalities which might take place in a sale in execution of a decree.

[FLETCHER, J.—The question is whether the undertaking covered present illegalities and irregularities or referred to those subsequent to the issue of the sale proclamation?]

At the time of sale I made an application I said I did not know that there was any sale proclamation. What has been waived is a mixed question of law and fact.

LAKSHMI PRASANNA MOJUMDAR v. RAJINDRA PODDAR.

It has been laid down in the case of Dhanukdhari v. Nathuni Sahu (1) that it should be determined from the Court's order as to how far the waiver extended. What was waived by my client in the lower Court, must be decided from the circumstances of the case and not from the petition or judgment.

[FLETCHER, J.—It was not an agreement with any party but you gave an undertaking to the Court to waive illegalities and irregularities in the sale. In Dhanukdhari v. Nathuni Sahu (1) the waiver was with regard to objections to sale proclamation, but here there was an undertaking to waive objections to all illegalities and irregularities. Therefore the facts in this case are quite different from those in Dhanukdhari v. Nathuni Sahu (1). You waived every irregularity and illegality, fraudulent or otherwise. It is nowhere stated in your application that you were not aware of these illegalities and irregularities.]

At least my submission is that I did not and I could not waive my right to set aside the sale on the ground of fraud. There is nothing in the application of waiver to show that I waived all objections to irregularities or illegalities previous to the publication of sale, even those which were the outcome of fraud.

Babu Rupendra Lal Roy, for the Respondent, not called upon.

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—This is an appeal by the judgment debtor against the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge of Noakhali, dated the 21st of June 1916. The point lies in a very narrow compass and it is this: The properties of the judgment-debtor had been attached and were to be brought to sale on the 17th April 1916. On that date, the judgment-debtor put in a petition to the Judge asking that the sale might be postponed and that it might take place on the next sale day without a fresh proclamation of sale and the attachment subsisting. The petition shows that the Court was not satisfied with that and required that the judgment-debtor should add a further undertaking to the petition, namely, that the judgment-debtor should not raise any objection on the ground of illegality or irregularity. That being added, the Court granted a postponement of the sale and the properties were not sold until the 16th May. Then the properties having been sold, the judgment-debtor preferred a petition on the 17th June 1916 to the Judge asking that the sale should be set aside on the ground of illegality and irregularity. The learned Judge took the view that there was a distinct breach of the undertaking given to the Court on the footing of which the judgment-debtor obtained a postponement of the sale. I think the learned Judge was right; and for this reason: whatever view may be taken of the terms of the undertaking given on the 17th April 1916, it is quite clear that that undertaking covered all illegalities and irregularities of which the judgment debtor was then aware. In the present case, there is no allegation by the judgment-debtor that he was not aware of the matters stated in his petition at the time he gave his undertaking to the Court on the 17th April 1916. It is quite clear that as regards all matters, at least of which he was cognizant at the time, he gave his undertaking on the 17th April, the judgment-debtor waived his right to object. The case of Dhanukdhari v. Nathuni Sahu (1), that has been cited before us, is clearly distinguishable. In that case, the learned Judge found that the judgment-debtor could not waive his objection as regards certain particulars on the ground that he had been kept out of knowledge of them by the fraud of the decree-holder, which is a totally different case from the present. The facts in the present case seem to be extremely simple. I think the learned Subordinate Judge came to a correct conclusion that, on the allegations made by the judgment-debtor, he precluded himself from going into these matters. That being so, the present appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs, one hundred rupees.

SHAMSUL HUDA, J.—I agree.

A suit by a purchaser of the equity of redemption in a part of the mortgaged property for redemption of his share of the property against a purchaser of another portion of the mortgaged property who has redeemed the whole of the property is governed by Article 148, Schedule I of the Limitation Act, and the period of limitation is sixty years from the date on which the mortgage became capable of redemption. [p. 833, col. 1.]

The possession of a mortgagee must be deemed to be that of the person entitled to the equity of redemption. [p. 834, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Azamgarh dated the 24th August 1916.

Mr. M. L. Agarwala, Dr. S. M. Sulaiman, the Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru and Dr. Surendra Nath Sen, for the Appellants.

Mr. Gokul Prasad, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for redemption brought under the circumstances mentioned in detail in the judgment of the Court below. It is unnecessary to repeat all the facts and it is sufficient to say that on the 21st of December 1864 one Iradut Ullah made a usufructuary mortgage of certain shares in four villages, one of which was the village Gangapur. The present suit is for the redemption of that village. The equity of redemption in one of the mortgaged villages, namely, Pul Ratni, was sold by auction and purchased by one Mazhar Ali in 1874. He sold it in 1882, and the share which he purchased ultimately came to one Sarju Singh. In 1887, Sarju Singh brought a suit for redemption and got a decree for redemption of all the four mortgaged villages and obtained possession in 1891. The present appellant Wazir Ali is the purchaser of the rights of Sarju in Gangapur and he is in possession by virtue of his purchase. In 1873 the share in Gangapur was purchased at auction by Kali Charan, defendant No. 15, who sold it to the plaintiff on the 11th of October 1913. By virtue of this purchase the plaintiff brought the present suit on the 18th of May 1915 for redemption of Gangapur as against Wazir Ali, who is in possession of that village. He has made other persons parties to the suit and one of these is Musammât Saidan Bibi, the second appellant, the widow of Iradut Ullah, the mortgagor. The Court of first instance decreed the claim and the decree of that Court was confirmed by the lower Appellate Court.

The first contention raised before us on behalf of the appellants is that the claim is time-barred. This point is concluded by the authority of the Full Bench decision in Ashfaq Ahmad v. Wazir Ali (1). This case has been followed in subsequent cases by this Court and we as a Divisional Bench are bound by it. Following that ruling we must hold that the limitation applicable to a suit of this description is that provided by Article 148, namely, sixty years from the date on which the mortgage became capable of redemption. It is contended that the word "co mortgagor" should not be extended to purchasers of the equity of redemption. We are unable to agree with this contention. All persons who have stepped into the shoes of the original mortgagor are "co-mortgagors" for all purposes and, therefore, the rule laid down in the Full Bench case is applicable to the present case, which is that of a purchaser of the equity of redemption in a part of the mortgaged property.

The learned Counsel for the appellant referred to the case of Jai Kishen Joshi v. Budhanand Joshi (2). That case so far from helping him seems to us to be against his contention. That case was decided on the ground that the representative of the mortgagor who had redeemed the mortgage had asserted a proprietary title and claimed adversely to the true owner. It was held that in a case of

JUDGMENT.

SPENCER, J.—I am unable to follow the District Judge when he proceeds upon the assumption that the 1st defendant, in executing his small cause decree, attached only the father's interest in the property. If this were so, the plaintiffs had no cause of action to put in a claim petition for the release of their three-fourths share, and when that failed, to institute the present suit to establish their title against the execution creditor. The District Judge failed to see that his assumption destroyed the very foundation of the plaintiffs' claim and that their suit must consequently fail. There is no doubt, however, that both parties considered that the entire estate had been attached. In his written statement the 1st defendant asserted the liability of the sons to pay the debts of their father, if not tainted with illegality and immorality. No doubt he at first maintained that the property was the father's self-acquisition, but the fact that he also pleaded the sons' liability to pay their father's debts showed that he did not abandon his claim against the entire property, if it turned out to be ancestral. At the trial the 1st defendant failed in his attempt to prove that the property was the self-acquisition of the 2nd defendant; the plaintiffs also on their part failed to prove that the debt was incurred for an immoral purpose, as they had only general evidence of their father's immoral conduct.

But this failure of the plaintiffs to establish their contention that the debt was an immoral one must be regarded as fatal to their whole suit. As observed by the Privy Council in Sripat Singh Dugar v. Prodyot Kumar Tagore (1), "in every other event it is open to the execution creditor to sell the whole of the estate in satisfaction of the judgment obtained against the father alone."

The 1st defendant obtained the decree in Small Cause No. 326 of 1912 upon two promissory notes executed in his favour by 2nd defendant for what became due from him for the rent of certain lands that he took on lease from the 1st defendant. This fact is asserted in 1st defendant's written statement in this suit; it appears also in 2nd defendant's written statement in the Small Cause suit (Exhibit 1) and has not been controverted by the plaintiffs. Thus there was in existence in this case an antecedent debt, to discharge which the ancestral property of the family could be validly alienated by the father.

We allow the second appeal and restore the decree of the District Munsif dismissing the suit. Respondents Nos. 1 to 3 will bear their own and appellants' costs in this and in the lower Appellate Court.

KRISHNAN, J.—The plaintiffs-appellants are the sons of the 2nd defendant against whom the 1st defendant had obtained a decree on two promissory notes executed by him. In execution of that decree the 1st defendant had attached the plaint property describing it as 2nd defendant's own property. The sons filed a claim petition to have their share released, but it was dismissed. Thereupon they filed the present suit for a declaration that the 1st defendant was not entitled to execute the decree against their share in the property and for an injunction.

The question whether the property was self-acquired or ancestral has been settled, it being found that it is the ancestral property of the family. On this finding the District Judge decreed the plaintiffs' suit holding "that the 1st defendant showed no intention to proceed against it as ancestral property in which he held the sons' share also liable for their father's debt." His judgment cannot be supported. It is only when it is doubtful what was attached and sold in Court-auction as, for example, when the property attached and sold was described as "the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor" that the intention of the attaching decree-holder becomes important. Here the whole property has been attached including the shares of the plaintiffs, and that is the footing on which they themselves filed the claim petition and have now brought this suit. If plaintiffs' shares had not been attached, there would be no cause of action for the claim petition or for this suit, both of which refer only to their shares. Before the plaintiffs' shares can be released from attachment, what has to be decided is whether those shares are not liable to be sold for the decree-debt. The description of the property attached as the debtor's own is immaterial in this connection. It is settled law that an execution creditor is entitled to sell the whole of the estate of the joint Hindu family, consisting of a father and his sons and governed by the Mitakshara Law, in execution of a decree obtained against the father alone, unless it is shown that the debt for which the decree was obtained was incurred for illegal or immoral purposes. It is sufficient to refer to the latest statement of this law by the Privy Council in the case of Sripat Singh Dugar v. Prodyot Kumar Tagore (1). Their Lordships say, "The property in question was joint property governed by the Mitakshara Law. By that law a judgment against the father of the family cannot be executed against the whole of the Mitakshara property if the debt in respect of which the judgment has been obtained was a debt incurred for illegal or immoral purposes. In every other event it is open to the execution creditor to sell the whole of the estate in satisfaction of the judgment obtained against the father alone." The recent ruling of the Privy Council in Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (2) to which our attention has been drawn, that the pious obligation of the son to pay his father's debt arises only after the death of the father, does not affect this question, as the father has power to sell joint property of his son and himself for an antecedent debt of his to pay off that debt, when the debt was not incurred for an illegal or immoral purpose and the Court can in execution of a decree for that debt exercise the same power and direct the sale of such joint property. No doubt if the father had borrowed the original promissory note debts merely for the purpose of enabling him to sell the whole property including his sons' shares and allowed the decree to be passed in furtherance of that purpose, the case may be one where there is only a colourable and not a "real dissociation in fact" between the debts and the final sale. In such a case the power to sell will not arise, under the Privy Council ruling above quoted. But such a position does not arise on the facts here, as it is not alleged that the 2nd defendant had any such purpose.

It follows, therefore, that as in the present case the plaintiffs did not give any evidence to show that the debts in question were incurred by the 2nd defendant for any illegal or immoral purpose, their suit must fail. They complain before us that they had evidence to show that their father led an immoral life and that the Munsif shut out such evidence; but such evidence is quite insufficient, in the absence of evidence that the particular debt was incurred for an immoral purpose, to exclude the father's right to sell the joint property. See Sri Narain v. Raghubans Rai (3). The exclusion of evidence by the Munsif has, therefore, led to no prejudice to the plaintiffs and is, therefore, no ground for second appeal. It was also urged that they had evidence to prove that they lived separately from their father and had nothing to do with the promissory notes. That evidence was equally immaterial, as they did not allege any division from the father.

I agree, therefore, that the decree of the District Judge must be reversed and that of the Munsif be restored with costs, here and in the Court below, of the appellants.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s 11—Res judicata—Cross-appeals—Appeal from one decree, whether maintainable—Suit of Small Cause nature deciding question of title—Subsequent suit involving same question, whether res judicata.

Plaintiff brought a suit claiming possession of a half share in each of two groves Nos. 2 and 123, situate in different villages. His suit was dismissed in respect of grove No. 2 and decreed in respect of grove No. 123. There were appeals both by the defendant and by the plaintiff. The latter's appeal was dismissed and the defendant's was allowed, the case being remanded. The plaintiff appealed to the High Court against the order of remand:

Held, that the failure of the plaintiff to appeal against the order, dismissing his own appeal to the lower Appellate Court, did not debar him from appealing against the order remanding the suit in the defendant's appeal. [p. 838, col. 1.]

Plaintiff brought a suit against the defendants to recover his share of the price of two trees cut down by the defendants, on the ground that he was entitled to a moiety share in the grove. The suit was one of the nature cognizable by a Court of Small Causes, but was instituted in the Court of the Munsif, who tried it as a regular suit and decided that the plaintiff was entitled to a half share in the grove. In a subsequent suit by the plaintiff to recover possession of his half share in the grove:

Held, that under Explanation II to section 1 of the Civil Procedure Code, the question of the plaintiff's title to a half share in the grove was res judicata. [p. 839, col. 2.]

Second appeal from a decree of the Officiating Second Additional Subordinate Judge, Jaunpur.

Mr. Gokul Prasad, for the Appellant.

Dr. S. M. Sulaiman, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In the suit out of which this appeal arises the plaintiff, who is the appellant in this Court, claimed possession of a half share in each of two groves, together with damages. The groves are situated in different villages and may be described by the serial numbers in the village papers under which they are referred to in the judgments of the Courts below. One grove was numbered 123 and the other was numbered 2. The Court of first instance in substance dismissed the plaintiff's claim in respect of grove No. 2, but it decreed his claim for grove No. 123. There was an appeal by the plaintiff against the decree of the Court of first instance, in so far as that decree dismissed his claim for grove No. 2. There was also an appeal by the defendants against the same decree in so far as it allowed the plaintiff's claim for grove No. 123. The two appeals were heard together and a single judgment was written by which the questions raised in both the appeals were disposed of. Different decrees were passed. On the plaintiff's appeal the order was that this appeal be dismissed so that the decision of the Court of first instance, in so far as it was called in question by the plaintiff, was affirmed. On the defendants' appeal there was an order of remand arising out of certain pleadings and findings to be referred to presently. The appeal now before us is against the decision of the lower Appellate Court on the appeal filed by the defendants against the decree of the Court of first instance. When this appeal came up for hearing before a single Judge of this Court, two preliminary objections were raised. One of these was well founded so far as it went, that is to say, the defendants-respondents correctly urged that this appeal was not really a second appeal, but a first appeal from an order of remand, and should have been filed as such. This objection is of a technical nature and it has been disposed of by the referring of the appeal itself to a Bench of two Judges. We have jurisdiction to hear this appeal under the rules of this Court and a mere misdescription of the appeal as "Second Appeal No. so and so" instead of "First Appeal from Order," does not affect the merits of the case or the jurisdiction of this Court. The appellant will not, in any event, be entitled to recover costs in excess of what he would have had to pay on a first appeal from order, but that matter can be considered when the decree of this Court comes to be prepared. The other objection was that the plaintiff was not entitled to appeal against this order of remand, or against any other order or decree which the lower Appellate Court might have seen fit to pass on the de-defendants' appeal unless he also appealed against the decision dismissing his own appeal about grove No. 2. Reliance is placed on a large number of authorities of this Court, out of which it is quite sufficient to refer to the decision in Ram Lal v. Chhab Nath (1), which is the foundation of the subsequent case-law on the subject. The case now before us is clearly distinguishable from any of these. In the appeal brought by the plaintiff against the decision of the Court of first instance no question was raised, and none could be decided, as to the rights of the parties in respect of grove No. 123. The Court simply determined the question of the respective rights of the parties to grove No. 2. Its decision on this point was final; it proceeded upon findings of fact and no second appeal could have been brought against it with the slightest prospect of success. The plaintiff was bound to acquiesce in the decision against him so far as grove No. 2 was concerned, but there was nothing in the decree by which his appeal to the Court below stood dismissed, which in any way affected or purported to affect his rights in respect of grove No. 123. It is not even as if it could be contended that the plaintiff was injuriously affected by the dismissal of his appeal, because that dismissal left the decision of the Court of first instance intact. The plaintiff had a decision in his favour about grove No. 123 and the order passed upon his appeal left that decision where it was. That decision has only been disturbed by the order of remand passed upon the appeal of the defendants in the Court below, and against that order the present appeal lies. It is clearly not barred either by the words of section 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure, or by any conceivable principle of res judicata.

We have now to consider the main point raised by the appeal itself, and for this purpose it is necessary to set out certain additional facts. In the year 1914 this same plaintiff had brought against these same defendants a suit in which he claimed damages amounting to Rs. 30, as his share of the price of two trees which the defendants had cut down in grove No. 123, on the ground that the defendants had appropriated the timber entirely to themselves in derogation of the plaintiff's rights as owner of a moiety share in the grove. This suit was a suit of the nature cognizable by a Court of Small Causes; but it was not instituted in such a Court. Presumably there was no Court of Small Causes in existence at Jaunpur, and this suit for damages was instituted in the Court of the Additional Munsif and was tried by him as a regular suit. In reply to the plaintiff's claim the defendants denied his title to a moiety share, or to any other share in grove No. 123. There was an issue on this point and that issue was decided in favour of the plaintiff. After also determining the further issue raised as to the amount of damages, the Munsif proceeded to give the plaintiff in that suit a decree for Rs. 20. Now in the present litigation the plaintiff once more sets up his title to the moiety share in grove No. 123. The suit has actually been brought in the very same Court which tried the suit of 1914, and the first issue for disposal is precisely the same issue as was tried out in the former suit, namely, the validity or otherwise of the plaintiff's claim to a moiety share in grove No. 123. The learned Additional Munsif held that he had himself once already decided this issue in a previous suit between the same parties, that decision operated as res judicata and the question could not be tried over again. This finding has been reversed by the learned Subordinate Judge on appeal. Holding that the question of title in respect of grove No. 123 was not res judicata in the plaintiff's favour by reason of the suit of 1914, that Court has remanded the case, so far as it concerned the plaintiff's claim to grove No. 123, for trial on the merits. The appeal being against this order of remand, what we have to determine is whether the decision in the suit of 1914 was or was not res judicata in the present litigation. On the wording of section 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure the case seems a clear one. The suit was between the same parties litigating under the same title. The same question was directly and substantially in issue in both the suits, and in the suit of 1914 it was decided in the plaintiff's favour by a Court competent to try the subsequent suit now under consideration by us in this appeal. As a matter of fact both the suits, as we have already pointed out, were brought in one and the same Court, that is to say, the Court of the Additional Munsif of Jaunpur. The former was of a nature triable by a Court of Small Causes and the present suit is not. There is, therefore, this distinction, that in the suit of 1914 no second appeal would lie, whereas in the present suit a second appeal will lie, subject to the appropriate provisions of the law. The Second Explanation to section 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure has been inserted in the present Act (No. V of 1908), and it expressly provides that for the purposes of this section, the competence of a Court (that is to say, its competence to try any subsequent suit) shall be determined irrespective of any provisions as to a right of appeal from the decision of such Court. This explanation would seem to have been expressly designed to set at rest the controversy sought to be raised on behalf of the present respondents. This view has been taken by a learned Judge of this Court in the only reported case we can find in which the question has been expressly considered and decided since the passing of Act No. V of 1908; namely, the case of Musaddi Lal v. Jwala Prasad (2). We have been referred to a number of older rulings of this Court, one of which is discussed by Mr. Justice Chamier in Musaddi Lal v. Jwala Prasad (2). All those decisions were passed before the Second Explanation to what is now section 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure had been enacted. It is quite true that, in order to apply the rule of res judicata at all, it must be found that the question of title was directly and substantially in issue in the suit of 1914. It has been contended before us that in some of the older decisions, as for instance in Inayat Khan v. Rahmat Bibi (3), in Chet Ram v. Ganga (4), it has been taken for granted that the decision of any Court in a suit of a Small Cause Court nature about a question of title should be regarded as merely incidental. In view of the change in the law effected by the passing of Act No. V of 1908, it seems unnecessary to discuss these older decisions. We find ourselves in entire agreement with the view taken by Mr. Justice Chamier in Musaddi Lal v. Jwala Prasad (2), which was a case in all essential matters on all fours with the present one. It is worth noting that we have been referred to one other case of this Court decided since the passing of the present Code of Civil Procedure, namely, the case of Dulare Lal v. Hazari Lal (5). That case is distinguishable from the present in one essential point. The suit for damages, the decision in which it was sought to plead as res judicata in a subsequent suit for the establishment of title, had been brought in a Court of Small Causes, and subsequently transferred to the Court of a Munsif. It was pointed out that, under the provisions of the Provincial Small Causes Courts Act itself, a suit would not change its nature when it was transferred from a Court of Small Causes to that of a Munsif, but that it would be tried by the Munsif only as a Court of Small Causes. This is the reason given by the learned Judge of this Court for holding, in the appeal before him, the decision in the suit for damages would not operate as res judicata in the subsequent suit for establishment of title. In that case the suit for damages was instituted in and was, in the eye of the law, tried by a Court of Small Causes, that is to say, by a Court which, independently altogether of any provisions as to a right of appeal, would not be a Court competent to try a subsequent suit for title. We are of opinion, therefore, that the decision of the lower Appellate Court on this question of res judicata was wrong and must be reversed. On this appeal, therefore, we set aside the order of remand which was passed on the appeal of the defendants in the Court below, and in lieu thereof we dismiss the appeal of the defendants to that Court. The plaintiff will be entitled to his costs in this and in the ower Appellate Court, subject only to this qualification that he will not be entitled to recover as costs in this Court anything more than he would have paid on a first appeal from order. It may be pointed out that the result of the order which we now pass is that the decree of the Court of first instance is restored in its entirety. There is no possible question of an appellate decision resulting in the existence of two inconsistent decrees on one and the same litigation each of them apparently capable of independent execution. We mention this fact as further illustrating our decision upon the preliminary objection.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Hira Lal Chuckerburty (with him Babu Taradas Chatterjee), for the Appellant.—I beg to draw your Lordships' attention to a case reported as Ranjit Singh v. Kali Dasi Debi (1). There the suit was for a declaration of title in certain chowkidari chakran lands on the ground that the plaintiff acquired putni rights in them. It was held there that the putnidars were entitled to the possession of resumed chowkidari chakran lands. The question, therefore, is does the present Privy Council decision in Ranjit Singh v. Kali Dasi Debi (1) affect this decision? My submission is that the Privy Council decision does not state the terms under which the putnidars shall hold. The Privy Council decision does not touch the present point. No doubt we are bound by the Privy Council decision so far as it deals with this point. Again in the case in Surendra Mohan Sinha v. Rajendra Nath Roy (2) Your Lordships relied on the previous Privy Council case in Ranjit Singh v. Kali Dasi Debi (1) and discussed it at page 662*, and said that that case is not conclusive as to the terms under which the putnidars are entitled to hold possession of resumed chowkidari chakran lands. Therefore, it becomes necessary for me to refer to the earlier cases, which deal with this point. First of all I refer your Lordships to the case of Hari Narain Mozumdar v. Mukund Lal Mundal (3). There the principle on which to assess the rent payable by putnidars to the Zemindar in respect to resumed chowkidari chakran lands is laid down. The same principle is followed in a later case in Harak Chand v. Charu Chandra Singha (4). Again in Rajendra Nath v. Hira Lal (5) the same principle is accepted. In the Kabuliat the words * * * (haree bari malguzari) occur. These words mean proportionate rent. The word malguzari may sometimes mean rent with reference to the contract and not revenue. So I am entitled to get something more than has been decreed in my favour according to the Privy Council rulings.

MONOHAR MUKHERJEE v. KALI DAS NANDI.

The question must be decided according to the terms of the contract into which the parties entered. In section 51 of the Chowkidari Act (VI of 1870) it is laid down that if there is a contract the parties are bound by the contract. In Ranjit Singh v. Kali Dasi Debi (1) it has been held that parties are bound by their contracts. Therefore, the first question is whether these chowkidari chakran lands were let out to me in putni by the Zemindar at the time of the putni lease and my friend concedes that such was the fact. In the Chowkidari Act the rights of parties who hold under the Zemindar are preserved and their only liability is to pay more rent for excess of land. Kazi Newaz Khoda v. Ram Jadu Dey (6) referred to. There Mr. Justice Rampini deals with this excess payment of rent and his Lordship says that the Zemindar cannot claim from the putnidars more in excess than he has to pay to the Government. At page 116 Mr. Justice Mukherjee holds the same view; see also Nalinakhya Basu v. Bijoy Chand Mahatap (7). My learned friend says malguzari means rent. This is the first time that I hear that the word malguzari also means payment of rent, whereas it only means payment of revenue. Wilson's Glossary referred to for the meaning of the word. Mal is contraction of malguzari and means revenue. It is not stated at what rate profits are to be given to Zemindars and hence it is idle for my friend to contend that the putnidar is liable to pay any additional rent for the resumed chowkidari chakran lands. Both in Rajendra Nath v. Hira Lal (5) and in Harak Chand v. Charu Chandra Sinha (4) there was an admission on behalf of the putnidar. Before Ranjit Singh's case (1) there was some doubt in the minds of putnidars as to whether they would get resumed chakran lands and hence they would always make offer to pay a certain amount of the profit to the Zemindar in order to get the chakran lands. But since that case has settled this point, the Zemindar cannot claim such profit any further if the putnidars stand upon their right and refuse to pay anything in excess of the Government assessment.

was passed no one had any means of knowing as to what resumption would lead to.]

The resumption began long before the passing of that Act and the Government used then to settle such lands with the highest bidders.

Babu Hira Lal Chackerburty, in reply.—As regards the two cases which my friend cited, the judgment there proceeded entirely on a construction of the contract entered into between Zemindars and putnidors. As regards the case of Kazi Newaz Khoda v. Ram Jadu Dey (6) that had been cited in all cases which I have cited. Therefore, my point is that that case has not conclusively decided the points which I have submitted. Then as regards the word "malguzari" my friend puts too narrow a construction on the word. It means both payment of rent and revenue, i.e., any payment whether payable to the Zemindar or to the Government, and the word "mal" as opposed to "lakheraj" implies rent.

JUDGMENT.

WALMSLEY, J.—The suit out of which this appeal arises was brought by the plaintiff against his putnidars for a declaration that he was entitled to khas possession of some chakran lands which had been resumed or, in the alternative, for a declaration that the putnidars must pay him rent at the rate of Rs. 3 per bigha. Both the lower Courts dismissed the plaintiff's claim for khas possession, and with regard to his claim for rent, they limited him to the sum which the Zemindar had to pay to the chowkidari fund and ce-ses. The plaintiff has preferred an appeal to this Court. So far as his original prayer for khas possession is concerned, the case of Ranjit Singh v. Kali Dasi Debi (1) is conclusive against him. With regard to his other claim, the Courts below proceeded, first, on the wordings of the Pattahs granted to the putnidars and, secondly, on the fact that it was the putnidars who enjoyed the services of the chowkidars prior to the resumption. The Pattahs have been placed before us and the passages which relate to the matter of the chowkidari chakran lands and the contingency of resumption have been discussed in detail. It appears to me that the Courts below have put a right interpretation upon the words used in those Pattahs, and on that ground alone I think that the Zemindar's claim cannot be sustained. The further fact that it was the putnidars who were enjoying the services of the chowkidars makes it even more impossible to allow the Zemindar more than has been awarded to him. On these grounds I think that the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

PANTON, J.—I agree.

Appeal dismissed.

CIVIL REVISION No. 21 OF 1918.

July 31, 1918.

Present :—Sir Henry Richards, Kt., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Tudball.

MAHMUD ALI.—DEFENDANT—APPLICANT

versus

TAMIZ-UN-NISSA BIBI —PLAINTIFF—
OPPOSITE PARTY.

Provincial Small Causes Courts Act (IX of 1887), Sch. II, Art. 41—Debt paid off by one of several heirs—Suit to recover share from co-heir—Jurisdiction of Small Cause Court.

Where one of several heirs of a deceased Muhammadan pays off a debt due by the deceased and then sues his co-heirs to recover their share of the debt, the suit is cognisable by a Court of Small Causes and is not excluded from its cognisance by Article 41 of Schedule II to the Provincial Small Causes Courts Act. [p. 844, col. 1.]

Civil revision from an order of the Judge of the Court of Small Causes, Bulandshahr.

FACTS appear from the following Referring Order of

ABDUL RAOOF, J.—This application for revision arises out of a suit brought by Musammât Tamiz-un-nissa against the defendant Mahmud Ali for a certain sum of money. The case as stated by the plaintiff in the plaint was this:—One Mahbub Ali died leaving as his heirs Mahmud Ali and Yakub Ali, brothers, Musammât Rasul-un-nissa, a sister, and Musammât Tamiz-un-nissa, a daughter. On his death he left certain property which was inherited by these heirs according to their shares under the Muhammadan Law. At the time of his death he was indebted, and among the creditors there was one

Jas Ram who held two pro notes executed by Mahbub Ali. The plaintiff states that her share under the Muhammadan Law in the property left by the ancestor was five sehams. The share of Mahmud Ali and Yakub Ali, the brothers of Mahbub Ali, was two sehams each, and that of Musammât Rasul-un-nissa, one seham. The plaintiff further states that she paid off the debt due to Jas Ram by executing a bond in favour of the sons of Jas Ram. In paragraph 3 of the plaint the plaintiff stated that having purchased the shares of Yakub Ali and Musammât Rasul-un-nissa in the property left by Mahbub Ali, she became the owner of eight sehams and the defendant Mahmud Ali owned two sehams out of the entire property of 10 sehams. It is further stated that the defendant Mahmud Ali was, therefore, liable to pay the debts due from Mahbub Ali to the extent of 2/10ths, and it was to recover this 2/10ths of the debt paid off by the plaintiff to the sons of Jas Ram that this suit was filed. The suit was instituted in the Court of the Judge of Small Causes at Bulandshahr. One of the pleas raised in defence by the defendant was that the suit was not cognizable by a Small Cause Court. The defendant relied upon Article 41 of Schedule II of the Provincial Small Causes Courts Act. The Court of first instance, relying upon the ruling in the case of Roshan Lal v. Ram Lal (1), disallowed the plea and decided the suit upon the merits and gave a decree in favour of the plaintiff. The present application for revision has been filed against the decree of the Judge of the Small Cause Court. The decree of the Court below is given in these terms:—“The plaintiff’s claim for Rs. 101-8-3, the amount in claim, and Rs. 32-14-0, costs of suit, be decreed against the estate of Mahbub Ali Khan, which is in the possession of the defendant.” In the first ground of revision, the defendant-applicant repeats his ground of objection as to the jurisdiction of the Judge of the Small Cause Court, and in the second ground he raises the plea that as the plaintiff in her own plaint asks for a decree against the assets of Mahbub Ali, the suit was not cognizable by the MAHMUD ALI v. TAMIZ-UN-NISSA BIBI.

Court of Small Causes. The case has been argued before me at some length on behalf of both the parties and a number of rulings have been cited by the Counsel on either side, to which I will refer later on. Dr. Sulaiman who appears for the applicant argues that upon the plaint filed by the plaintiff, it is clear that she based her claim upon the ground that the parties were sharers in a joint property which had come to the heirs of Mahbub Ali as his assets and that, therefore, they were all liable to pay the debts of Mahbub Ali proportionately according to their shares in the assets left by him. That being the nature of the suit, he argues that the suit was a suit for contribution by a sharer in joint property in respect of payment made by him of money due from a co-sharer. On the other hand Mr. Yusuf Hasan has argued that in order to make the Article applicable, it ought to be made clear that the payment in respect to which contribution was claimed, was made on account of the joint property. He also argues that the present suit can hardly be called a suit for contribution. He says the debt due to Jas Ram was not a debt for which the parties may be said to be jointly responsible. It was not a debt due upon a joint bond or under a joint decree, but it was a debt due against each of the heirs of Mahbub Ali separately on account of his share of liability attaching to him on account of having inherited assets from the common ancestor. It is difficult to decide what Article 41 contemplates by the words "a suit for contribution by a sharer in joint property." The cases which have been relied upon either side have no direct bearing on the facts of the present case. Mr. Yusuf Hasan has relied upon the case reported as Bhairon v. Ram Baran (2), which was a case of joint judgment-debtors; one of the judgment-debtors having paid off the money due on the joint decree sued the others for contribution. He has relied upon the case reported as Roshan Lal v. Ram Lal (1). That was also a case of a joint decree. He has also relied upon the case reported as Bhairon v. Ram Baran (2). That also was a case of a joint decree against co-judgment-debtors. On the other side Dr. Sulaiman has relied upon the cases reported as Fatima Bibi v. Hamida Bibi (3), Bhato Singh v. Ramoo Mahton (4), Satya Bhushan Bandopadhyaya v. Krishnakali Bandopadhyaya (5) and Rajani Kanta Ghose v. Rama Nath Roy (6). In the case reported as Satya Bhushan Bandopadhyaya v. Krishnakali Bandopadhyaya (5) the plaintiff came on the allegation that he was not liable to make any payment at all, but that he had made a payment for the benefit of the defendant. It was held in that case that the suit could not be said to be one for contribution at all, and, therefore, could not come under Article 41. In Bhato Singh v. Ramoo Mahton (4) the facts were quite different from those of the present case and the rule there laid down was rather too broad. In the case reported as Fatima Bibi v. Hamida Bibi (3) the payment there made was certainly on account of the property jointly held by the parties. Joint tenants holding land jointly under a Zemindar were held jointly responsible for payment of rent, although they had by private arrangement divided the plots for their separate cultivation and one of the tenants had been made to pay the rent for the entire holding. When he sued for contribution, it was held that the suit came strictly within Article 41 and it was excepted from the cognizance of the Court of Small Causes also. As I have stated above, none of the cases relied upon by the parties have a direct bearing on the facts of this case. The point raised is of some importance and I think it will be better if it is decided by a larger Bench. I, therefore, refer this case to a Bench of two Judges.

Dr. S. M. Sulaiman, for the Applicant.

Mr. S. M. Y. Hasan (for whom Mr. S. A. Haidar), for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—The main point raised as a ground for revision is that the suit was one which was not cognizable by the Small Cause Court. It is contended that it is excluded by Article 41 to the Schedule to the Small Causes Courts Act. We are satisfied that the suit brought by the plaintiff was not of the nature specified in Article 41 of the Act. We see no sufficient reason to interfere with the decree of the Small Cause Court in any other matter raised by the memorandum of appeal. We reject the application and make no order as to costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 47—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts. 138, 180—Suit by auction-purchaser to recover property purchased by him after confirmation of sale, maintainability of—Limitation.

A suit by an auction-purchaser for the recovery of possession of property which he has purchased at an auction sale which has been confirmed, is not a suit which is barred under section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Such a suit is governed by Article 138 and not by Article 180 of Schedule I of the Limitation Act, and the period of limitation is twelve years after the confirmation of the sale. [p. 845, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Manbhum-Purulia.

Mr. Atul Krishna Ray, for the Appellant.

Mr. Abani Bhusan Mukerji, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs and the pro forma defendant No. 4 and the predecessor-in-interest of the pro forma defendants Nos. 5 to 10 obtained a decree against the principal defendants in this case. In execution of the decree which was for rent, the property in suit was sold and the sale was confirmed on the 6th of May 1910. It appears that after the confirmation of the sale there was a partition in the family of the plaintiffs and the pro forma defendants. By the partition the property in suit was allotted to the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs now seek to obtain possession of this property as after the confirmation of the sale no action was taken and the principal defendants remained in possession. The principal defendants in paragraph 7 of the written statement have pleaded that although the sale had taken place and it was confirmed, yet the plaintiffs as a matter of fact continued to receive rent from them and that as such the relationship of landlord and tenant continued. The learned Munsif who decreed the suit of the plaintiffs has come to a distinct finding that there is no evidence to support the allegation in the written statement to the effect that the relationship of landlord and tenant had subsisted between the plaintiffs and the principal defendants after the confirmation of the sale. The principal defendants preferred an appeal to the learned District Judge of Manbhum-Purulia, who has set aside the decree given by the learned Munsif and has dismissed the suit. The points on which the lower Appellate Court dismissed the suit of the plaintiffs are the points of limitation and that of jurisdiction. A perusal of the judgment of the learned Judge shows that he is labouring under the impression that the present action is a proceeding in execution of the decree obtained for rent. He has treated this case as one that is governed by the provisions of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act, VI of 1908. It seems to me that the learned Judge has overlooked the fact that the action in question is in no way governed by that Act. If the relationship of landlord and tenant had continued to exist between the plaintiffs and the principal defendants, there might be something to say as regards the application of the provisions of that Act, but on this point the finding arrived at by the Trial Court is conclusive. The position of the parties, therefore, is that the auction-purchaser has instituted a regular suit for the recovery of possession of the property that he bought at an auction sale that was confirmed. In the circumstances it appears to me that sections 139 and 231 of Act VI of 1908 have no application. The next question is, whether the suit is barred under the general law of limitation. The learned Vakil appearing on behalf of the respondents has drawn my attention to Article 180 of the Limitation Act and has invited me to hold that under that Article the suit should be regarded as barred because of the provision of three years' limitation. I do not think that Article 180 of the Limitation Act was intended to apply to a case like this; on the contrary by reading the language of Article 138 of the Limitation Act it is quite evident that the present action is governed by that Article. The period of limitation provided by that Article is 12 years. The suit having been instituted within twelve years of the confirmation of the sale is, therefore, not barred by limitation.

In the course of his address the learned Vakil for the respondents also raised the question as to whether or not the suit is barred under section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure. His contention is that to ask for delivery of possession is a question arising between the parties to the suit in which the decree was passed and relates to the execution of the decree, and that, therefore, under the provisions of that section a separate suit is not permissible. This view of the case receives no help from the clear and emphatic pronouncement of their Lordships of the Allahabad High Court in a Full Bench case reported as Bhagwati v. Banwari Lal (1). It has been held that a suit for the recovery of possession of a property which has been the subject of sale and the sale of which has been confirmed is not a suit which is barred under section 47 of the Code. It seems to me, therefore, that the learned Judge in dismissing the suit both on the ground of limitation as well as on the ground of jurisdiction has misconceived the nature of the action. In the circumstances the order of dismissal of the learned Judge is set aside, the appeal is decreed, and the decree awarded by the learned Munsif is restored. The appellants will get their costs throughout.

Appeal allowed.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 20—Mortgage—Interest, payment of, by mortgagor—Limitation, extension of, against purchaser of equity of redemption.

A payment of interest due on a mortgage made by the mortgagor saves limitation under section 20 of the Limitation Act not only as against the mortgagor, but also as against a subsequent purchaser of a portion of the equity of redemption or a subsequent mortgagee of a portion of the mortgaged property. [p. 846, cols. 1 & 2]

Mr. Narain Prasad Asthana (with him Mr. Surendra Nath Sen), for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

PIGGOTT, J.—The essential point for determination in this second appeal lies within a very narrow compass. The plaintiffs sued to enforce a simple mortgage of January the 8th, 1891. They impleaded the mortgagors [as defendants first party, one set of subsequent mortgagees as defendants second party and the present appellants, as purchasers of a portion of the equity of redemption, as defendants third party. The defendants of the first and second parties do not contest the suit, at any rate at this stage. The defendants third party contend that the claim is barred by limitation. Prima facie this suit instituted on 7th of November 1914 would be well outside the prescribed period of limitation for a suit on a simple mortgage of January the 8th, 1891. The plaintiffs' case is that limitation is saved under section 20 of the Indian Limitation Act (IX of 1908) by three payments on account of interest as such, the last of these payments is of a sum of Rs. 800 made on the 25th of November 1902. This payment is proved beyond doubt. It was made by means of a sale by the mortgagors to the prior mortgagees of certain property other than that hypothecated in the simple mortgage-deed in suit. The consideration for the sale was a sum of Rs. 800. There was an express acknowledgment that on that date, namely, the 25th of November 1902 a sum of Rs. 1,400 was due as interest on the deed of January the 8th, 1891; in order to pay off a portion of this interest the property specified in the deed of November the 25th, 1902, was sold for a sum of Rs. 800 and the entire consideration was set off in part payment of the interest as above stated. The present suit is within limitation from the 25th November 1902 and it is not denied that section 20 of the Indian Limitation Act would apply as against the mortgagors themselves. The contention is that the provisions of that section cannot be applied so as to save limitation as against these appellants, who are subsequent purchasers of a portion of the equity of redemption. The appellants bought under a sale-deed of June the 24th, 1913, a portion of the property hypothecated under the plaintiffs' mortgage of January the 8th, 1891, along with certain other property with which of course this suit is not concerned. They paid the sum of Rs. 9,000 a large part of which was due to them on account of previous transactions between themselves and their vendors. They undertook, however, to pay off a certain older mortgage of the year 1911, which again seems to have been executed in satisfaction of an older mortgage of 1905, by which again a still older mortgage of December the 21st, 1899, was paid off; and under this mortgage a portion of the property now in suit was hypothecated. The appellants contend before us that they occupy two positions. They are not merely purchasers of a portion of the equity of redemption under their deed of June the 24th, 1913, but they are also entitled to stand in the shoes of the mortgagees under the deed of December 21st, 1899. Even this mortgage, however, is subsequent in date to the mortgage in suit, so that the real question for determination, namely, whether the payment of interest effected by the deed of November the 25th, 1902, does or does not save limitation as against these appellants, has to be determined upon the wording of section 20 of the Indian Limitation Act on substantially the same principles, whether we deal with these appellants as purchasers of the equity of redemption or as subsequent mortgagees in respect of a portion of the property in suit. We have not been referred to any reported case of this Court, but in the Calcutta High Court there is a good deal of authority and this authority seems to us, as to the learned Judge of the Court below, very strongly in favour of the plaintiffs-respondents. The important cases are Krishna Chandra Saha v. Bhairab Chandra Saha (1) and Domi Lal Sahu v. Roshan Dobay (2). In each of these cases the transaction pleaded as extending the period of limitation was a payment on account of interest. Now on behalf of the appellants strong reliance has been placed on another case of the same Court decided a little before either of the two cases reported above. This is the case of Surjiram Marwari v. Barhamdeo Persad (3) to be found in Volume 1 of the Calcutta Law Journal Reports at page 337. The question there was of an acknowledgment by the mortgagor as saving limitation against a subsequent mortgagee. The learned Judges who decided that case relied partly on the wording of section 19 of the Indian Limitation Act and partly on an English case, that of Bolding v. Lane (4). That case was itself discussed shortly afterwards before the House of Lords in a case referred to in the subsequent Calcutta decisions, namely, the case of Chinnery v. Evans (5). The case of Bolding v. Lane (4) was not dissented from in Chinnery v. Evans (5), but it was distinguished against and explained. And it is quite clear that a distinction was drawn between the effect of a payment and the effect of a mere acknowledgment. This point has been very clearly brought out in another decision of the Privy Council, on appeal from the Supreme Court of Canada, in the case of Lewin v. Wilson (6).

RAUSHAN LAL V. KANHAIYA LAL.

INDRA NARAIN RAY v. NABIN CHANDRA BANERJEE.

The words of Lord Hobhouse at page 645 of that report are worth quoting:—"It must be remembered that payment and acknowledgment are two very different things. As regards the person making them, acknowledgment may, as pointed out in Bolding v. Lane (4), be made by a person who, though a party to the mortgage contract, has ceased to have any substantial interest in it, and has nothing to lose by the acknowledgment; whereas payment is certain to be made only by those who have some duty or interest to pay. As regards the recipient, so long as he is paid according to the intention of the contracting parties, he is in full enjoyment of his bargain and is not put upon any further assertion of his rights; but not so if he only receives acknowledgment. If, therefore, we find that the Legislature has used different language about the two cases we must not readily conclude that it has done so by accident or without meaning it." This is probably the reason why the decision in Surjiram Marwari v. Barhamdeo Persad (3), although referred to in argument, was not discussed by the learned Chief Justice of the Calcutta High Court when deciding the case of Krishna Chandra Saha v. Bhairab Chandra Saha (1). He felt that he was dealing with a different section of the Statute, and that a decision based upon section 19 of the Indian Limitation Act, whether correct or not, was not necessarily an authority on a case which turned on the wording of section 20 of the same Act. We have been referred to one or two other decisions substantially to the same effect, but we think that on the authorities and on the wording of section 20 of the Indian Limitation Act the decision of the Court below was clearly right and that this appeal must fail. It may be that the mortgagors dealt unfairly with these appellants on June the 24th, 1913, when they conveyed certain property to the latter without stating that a portion of this property was also subject, along with other property, to a simple mortgage of the year 1891 which was still in force. But it is to be noted that in the sale-deed above referred to in favour of the appellants there is no definite statement on the part of the vendors that the property which they are conveying is subject to no charge other than those specified in the deed itself, still less is there any express covenant of title or of indemnity. The question, however, of the rights and liabilities inter se of these appellants and their vendors, the persons impleaded as defendants first party in this suit, is not before us. The question is whether anything which took place between these parties in the year 1913, can affect the rights of the present plaintiffs in respect of their mortgage deed of January the 8th, 1891. If the question is put in this way it seems clear that the answer must be in the negative. The suit as brought is not barred by limitation, time being saved by the payment on account of interest effected by the sale of January the 25th, 1902. This appeal, therefore, fails, and we dismiss it with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VII B. C. of 1885), ss. 161, 167—Incumbrance—Mortgagee-purchaser of holding, interest of, whether incumbrance.

The interest of a mortgagee of a part of a holding who has purchased the holding in execution of his mortgage decree is an incumbrance within the meaning of section 161 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Such a mortgagee-purchaser cannot be ejected by the purchaser of the holding in execution of a rent decree until his incumbrance is annulled under the provisions of section 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Birbhum, dated the 9th March 1916, affirming that of the Munsif, Suri, dated the 23rd of January 1915.

THE MUNICIPAL BOARD OF BENARES v. GAJADHAR.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Bepin Behari Ghose II (with him Babu Bankim Chandra Mukherjee), for the Appellant.—The learned Judge has erred in holding that the sale in execution of the decree for rent was not a rent sale and it did not pass the holding but only the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor, because the learned Judge thinks that the plaint in the rent suit did not comply with the provisions of section 148A of the Bengal Tenancy Act. If your Lordships be pleased to go through the plaint which is on the record, your Lordships will be satisfied that it did comply with the provisions of section 148A. The plaint, the decree, the sale proclamation show that at the sale the holding did pass.

As regards the question as to whether the defendant as purchaser of a portion of the holding in execution of a mortgage decree was the holder of an incumbrance which has been annulled by a proper notice, I submit that the finding of the Court of Appeal below is clearly wrong. Refers to the definition of 'incumbrance' in section 161 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. See also Banbihari Kapur v. Khetra Pal Singh (1). Ashoy Kumar Soor v. Bejoy Chand Mohatap (2). After the property has been sold, it cannot be said that the mortgagee has a lien on the property. I rely on the wording of section 161 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and the observation of Sir Lawrence Jenkins in Abdul Rahman v. Ahmadar Rahman (3).

Babu Jyotish Chandra Sarkar, for the Respondents, not called upon.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal will stand dismissed. Two grounds have been raised before us, and they are these: First of all, it is said that the present suit is a suit for possession of about 4 bighas of land, the plaintiff claiming through a purchase in execution of a rent decree. The plaintiff's claim was resisted by certain mortgagee-purchasers, who had a mortgage of this property which is a part of a holding and who had purchased in execution of their mortgage-decree. The foundation of the plaintiff's claim is that he is the purchaser in execution of a rent decree. Otherwise, he would only get the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor. It is said that the rent suit is a special suit, namely, a suit brought by a co-sharer landlord under section 148A of the Bengal Tenancy Act. But the learned Judge has found that the plaintiff had failed to show that he had brought the case within the provisions of section 148A.

The second point is also equally against the plaintiff. In a case like the present, the defendant has got an incumbrance on the property because for the purpose of the present suit he is entitled, having regard to the decision in Banbihari Kapur v. Khetra Pal Singh (1), to fall back on his mortgage as a shield against the purchase of the plaintiff. If that be so, he cannot be ejected until his encumbrance is annulled under the provisions of section 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. We agree with the conclusion arrived at by the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court. The present appeal, therefore, fails and must be dismissed. The appellant must pay to the respondent his costs in this appeal.

Appeal dismissed.

Plaintiff served a notice of action on the Municipality on 4th July 1916, and on the 4th August instituted a suit against the Municipality for a declaration that the platform was his ancestral property, and that the notice issued by the Municipality for the demolition thereof was invalid, and also prayed for an injunction:

Held, (1) that the suit was in substance one for a declaration of title and was not a suit in which the only relief claimed was an injunction and that, therefore, the exemption contained in clause (4) of section 326 of the U. P. Municipalities Act was not applicable to it; [p. 849, col. 2.]

(2) that the suit having been commenced before the expiry of two months after the service of the notice prescribed by section 326 (1) of the U. P. Municipalities Act was premature and must be dismissed. [p. 849, col. 2.]

First appeal from an order of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Benares.

Mr. Gokul Prasad, for the Appellant.

Mr. Saila Nath Mukerji, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

RICHARDS, C. J.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff against the Municipal Board. Later on we shall refer to the relief the plaintiff claimed before and after the amendment of the plaint. The dispute between the parties commenced by an application for leave to build or re-build a chabutra and saiban. The Municipality refused leave and there were various negotiations between the parties to which it is unnecessary for us to refer, except to say that no final agreement was arrived at between the parties. If a map which is on the record correctly describes the premises, it would appear that the chabutra projects on to a public road. All orders made by the Municipality on these applications for leave to build and re-build are subject to appeal as mentioned in the Municipalities Act of 1916 and they cannot be challenged in any other Court. Accordingly if the plaintiff's cause of action has anything to do with the orders which the Municipality made upon the application of the plaintiff he has no cause of action. It has been suggested on behalf of the plaintiff that the structure is very old. Even if this be true, the Municipal Board under section 211 of the Act have power to require the owner to remove the structure if it overhangs, projects or encroaches on a street or into or upon any drain, sewer or aqueduct therein. The present suit seems to have been founded on a notice which the Municipal Board caused to be served requiring the plaintiff to remove the chabutra. This notice was served on the 17th of June 1916. Section 326 of the Act provides that no suit shall be instituted against a Board in respect of any act done until after the expiration of two months after the notice prescribed in that section has been served. Now the act of the Municipality which gave rise to the present cause of action was the notice which they caused to be served in June 1916. Admittedly the notice of action served by the plaintiff was on the 14th of July 1916, and the suit was commenced on the 4th of August of the same year, that is, admittedly less than two months after the notice of action had been given. It would seem, therefore, that prima facie the plaintiff's suit was premature. As it originally stood it was clearly a suit for a declaration to establish the plaintiff's title to the land, and ancillary thereto an injunction. In order to avoid the consequence of the want of the prescribed notice under the Act, the plaintiff amended his plaint but only in respect of the relief asked for. His amendment is in reality an amendment in language only not in substance; he still asks for a declaration that the platform and the saiban is ancestral property of the plaintiff and that the plaintiff and his ancestors have been for a long time in possession and occupation thereof, that the Municipal Board has no right to get the same demolished and that according to law the notice issued by the Municipal Board regarding the demolition thereof is invalid and void, and then he prays that an injunction may be issued. The only exception to the provision requiring notice of action is to be found in clause 4 of section 326, which is as follows:—"Provided that nothing in sub-section (1) shall be construed to apply to a suit wherein the only relief claimed is an injunction of which the object would be defeated by the giving of the notice or the postponement of the commencement of the suit or proceeding." Even after the amendment the suit is not a suit in which the only relief claimed is an injunction. Furthermore, from the very nature of the suit and the allegations made by the plaintiff and defendant respectively, it is absolutely clear that the object of the suit would not be defeated either by the giving of the notice or the postponement of the commencement of the suit. The real substance of the suit is the title to the land. Even if the Municipal Board had carried out their alleged threat to demolish the building as it stands, it could very easily be restored after the plaint.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLIII, r. 1 (w), O. XLVII, r. 7—Review, order granting—Appeal, whether lies.

An order granting a review of judgment, though appealable under the provisions of Order XLIII, rule 1 (w), Civil Procedure Code, is subject to the limitations mentioned in Order XLVII, rule 7, of the Code, namely, that there can be an appeal only upon the grounds mentioned in that rule.

Appeal against the order of the Subordinate Judge, 1st Court, Chittagong, dated the 16th of December 1916.

FACTS material to this report are as follows:—

The plaintiff (the present respondent) instituted a suit that a certain Sole-namah, dated 22nd August 1911, "be declared as based on false claim, illegal, fraudulent, false, fabricated, invalid, null and void and fit to be set aside." It was objected that the plaintiff not having prayed for any consequential relief, the suit was not maintainable. The Pleader for plaintiff prayed for time to insert the necessary prayer and amend the plaint. But before he could file the petition, the judgment was delivered and the suit dismissed.

An application for review was filed. It was argued that the prayer "for any other relief" included the necessary prayer for consequential relief. Gopi Narain Khanna v. Babu Bansidhar (1) was relied upon.

On the ground of "sufficient reason" under Order XLVII, rule 1, the review was allowed.

Against the order granting the application for review this appeal was preferred.

Babus Mohendra Nath Roy and Chandra Sekhar Sen, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the defendant against the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge of the First Court at Chittagong, dated the 16th December 1916. The appeal is preferred against an order of the learned Judge granting a review of judgment. Such order, though appealable under the provisions of Order XLIII, rule 1 (w), is subject to the limitations mentioned in Order XLVII, rule 7, namely, that there can be an appeal only upon the grounds mentioned in that rule. It is quite clear that the present case comes within none of the grounds mentioned in Order XLVII, rule 7. That being so, no right of appeal is given to the appellant against the order of the learned Judge granting a review of the judgment. The present appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

Civil revision from an order of the District Judge, Meerut, dated the 9th February 1918.

Mr. A. H. C. Hamilton, for the Appellant.

Mr. W. Wallach, Officiating Government Advocate, and Mr. H. K. Mukerji, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case may be briefly stated. One Puran Atal was the manager of a certain gaddi. It is an admitted fact that the gaddi in question is a trust for religious purposes. Puran Atal was removed from his position as trustee by the order of the District Judge of Meerut on the 7th of May 1909. The present appellant Darshan Das was appointed in his place and certain directions were given to him, among which was one that he should file accounts annually in the month of January. In 1913 two suits were brought against Darshan Das under section 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure both of which failed. In 1916 Puran Atal filed an application before the District Judge calling attention to the fact that Darshan Das had never filed any accounts and making certain allegations against him. The District Judge started an enquiry, in the course of which the Collector of Meerut applied through the Government Pleader asking the Court to make some arrangements for the better management of the gaddi. Notice was issued to Darshan Das and efforts were made to bring him into Court. For reasons with which we are not now concerned, he did not appear and the District Judge made an ex parte enquiry and finally passed the order of the 9th of February from which the present appeal has been preferred. The order was as follows:—"Mahant Darshan Das is prohibited from having any further dealings with the property of the gaddi. Proclamation will be made in the villages belonging to the gaddi that Darshan Das is prohibited from receiving rents or revenue acting in any way on behalf of the gaddi for the future." Certain gentlemen appeared and they were also appointed as a sort of committee to look after the estate, and the Judge suspended Darshan Das from his post pending the filing of a regular suit under section 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure. We also note that more than five months have passed and no attempt whatsoever has been made to file any such suit or to obtain the sanction which is necessary under section 92 for the filing thereof. A preliminary objection is taken that no appeal is allowed by the Code from the order which was passed. As far as we are able to judge the order has been passed without any jurisdiction whatsoever. The preliminary objection, therefore, has force, namely, that no appeal lies. At the same time we are asked to treat this as an application in revision and we think that in the circumstances of the case we ought to do so. If Puran Atal had shown any activity or energy in obtaining sanction or in bringing a suit under section 92 we might have been prepared to reject this appeal on the ground that no appeal lies and to have refused to treat this as an application in revision, because in all probability the matter would come before the Court at a very early date in a regular suit, but it is to the interest of Puran Atal to delay in bringing such a suit and already a delay of some five months has occurred. We, therefore, think it best that we should take up this matter in revision. As we have pointed out, the order is clearly without jurisdiction. There is no suit under section 92 pending before the District Judge. The Code gives him no powers to interfere in this matter unless and until a regular suit is filed in his Court, when it will be open to him to exercise all the powers as to the appointment of a Receiver, etc., the Code gives him in order to protect the property. We fail to see that he has any powers to interfere, as he has done in this case; and to suspend a trustee from his post on the application of a private person who has called attention to the fact that a breach of trust appears to have been committed, ted. The Code lays down a regular procedure for suits on such facts as have been brought to the notice of the Court and until the Court is moved in that way, the Judge certainly has no power of supervision to interfere and to pass such an order. We, therefore, set aside in revision the order passed by the Court below suspending Mahant Darshan Das and prohibiting him from having anything to do with the estate. The Court below has also passed an order directing that the fees of the Government Pleader and the Collector's costs should be met from the gaddi funds. We can see no justification for such an order. That order will also be set aside. The Collector will have to bear his own costs. We think also that in the circumstances of this case, the other two parties to this matter should also bear their own costs throughout the litigation.

RANGA PILLAI v. NARASIMMA AYYANGAR.

Order set aside.

Construction of document—Mortgage—Stipulation to redeem in any Chittirai month at end of 10 years—Covenant, nature and effect of

A mortgage-deed contained a stipulation that the amount due thereunder might be paid "at any cultivation season in the month of Chittirai after the stipulated period of 10 years":

Held, that there was no implied personal covenant to pay at the end of 10 years, which the mortgagee could enforce at once at the expiry of the period.

RAMZAN v. BHUKHAL RAI.

Mr. T. V. Muthukrishna Ayyar, for the Appellant.

Mr. K. S. Ramabadra Ayyar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—It is contended for appellant that the words "at whatever cultivation season in the month of Chittirai in any year after the stipulated period of ten years, I may pay the principal amount, you shall at that time receive the amount" contain an implied covenant to pay at the end of ten years. This stipulation as to payment is one entirely for the benefit of the mortgagor, for it allows him to choose his own time for payment if he wishes to pay. To construe this as a personal covenant to pay at the end of ten years which the mortgagee could enforce at once would be to destroy the whole benefit of the stipulation so far as the mortgagor is concerned. We are not, therefore, prepared to read into the words a covenant which would destroy the whole effect of the express arrangement between the parties. There are no other recitals in the deed to suggest that there was any personal covenant, and, therefore, we agree with the Subordinate Judge's finding that there is none.

As this is the only point argued the second appeal is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

JUDGMENT.—In this case it appears that the plaintiff purported to make a usufructuary mortgage of an occupancy tenancy, which was illegal having regard to the provisions of section 20 of the Agra Tenancy Act. The present suit was instituted by the plaintiff in effect to redeem the property. The Court of first instance decreed the claim. The lower Appellate Court reversed the decree of the Court of first instance and dismissed the plaintiff's suit upon the ground that the mortgage was null and void. It seems to us that this decision is wholly wrong and inequitable. It might be that if the plaintiff came into Court and asked to get back his property without payment of the mortgage money at all on the ground of the illegality of the transaction, that the Court would put him upon terms of paying the mortgage money. Even this view is not universally taken, for one learned Judge at least has held that in such a case the owner of the occupancy tenancy could get back the property without paying the mortgage money. However, in the present case the plaintiff very honestly comes in offering to pay the mortgage money. In our opinion he is clearly entitled to get possession on so doing. We allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and restore the decree of the Court of first instance, with this modification that we decree the plaintiff's costs in all Courts and that we decree that the time for payment be extended for six months from this date.

Appeal allowed; Decree modified.

A partial alienation of her husband's estate by a Hindu widow, even with the consent of the next reversioner, is not valid unless made for legal necessity. The propriety of an alienation with the consent of the next reversioner may come in question not only with reference to the conduct of the widow, whether or not she was justified by necessity, but also with reference to the conduct of the next reversioner, whether or not his conduct was honest. If in the absence of legal necessity he engineered the transaction to suit his own ends and for his own immediate gain, his consent would lose all its virtue. The transaction would stand no higher than a partial alienation in his favour, and would have to be judged from that standpoint. JUDGMENT.

No. 2074 of 1915.

RICHARDSON, J.—Parbati Charan Roy Choudhuri died many years ago leaving him surviving a widow Mangala D-bi, and two daughters Lakshmimani and Saraswati. His estate devolved first on his widow and on her death in 1849 on his two daughters jointly. Saraswati died in 1856 leaving a son Paresh, who died in 1873. The plaintiffs, the appellants before us, claim the property in dispute as the reversionary heirs of Parbati Charan when the succession opened on the death of Lakshmimani in June 1899. The defendants on the other hand set up a title under a conveyance executed by Paresh in their favour on the 11th December 1872. Now at that date Paresh was the reversionary heir of Parbati Charan expectant on the death of Lakshmimani. As such he had a mere spes successionis which he could not validly transfer. That was the view taken by the learned Subordinate Judge in the trial Court by whom the plaintiffs' suit was decreed. In the lower Appellate Court, however, the learned District Judge appears to have found that by some arrangement between Lakshmimani and Saraswati each was in enjoyment of a moiety of Parbati Charan's estate and that on the death of Saraswati her moiety came into the possession of Paresh, who with the consent and sanction of Lakshmimani dealt with it as his own. It is not disputed that if two widows or two daughters taking jointly the estate of their deceased husband or father make an arrangement for separate possession and enjoyment, the arrangement will not ordinarily deprive the survivor of the right to the whole estate or enable the ladies to confer a title on a third party which will not terminate at the latest with the life of that survivor [Dharam Chand Lal v. Bhaurani Misra (1), Dal Koer v. Panbas Koer (2) and Chittar Kuar v. Goura Kuar (3)]. But it is strenuously argued that the District Judge's finding amounts to this that Lakshmimani, by allowing Paresh to retain possession of Saraswati's moiety after her death, relinquished that moiety in favour of Paresh, who thus acquired an absolute title under and by virtue of the doctrine of acceleration. On the face of it the decision of the Full Bench in Debi Prosad Chowdhry v. Golap Bhogal (4) completely disposes of that contention, because according to that decision there can be no relinquishment of anything less than the entire estate.

It is argued, however, that the judgments of the learned Judges, and especially the propositions on which the late Chief Justice and Mookerjee, J., summed up their views, went beyond the actual point to be decided and are not entitled to the binding force which attaches to judicial precedents. I am not prepared to assent to that. In that case a widow had transferred by way of mortgage, with the consent of the next reversioner, a portion of the entire estate left by her husband. The case turned on the effect of such a transfer. It is said that the question might have been decided on the narrow ground that a transfer of a particular property, part of the entire estate by way of mortgage, is not a transfer of the whole estate even in that part, because the widow retains what is commonly known as the equity of redemption. But it is obvious that the case as put by Sir Rash Behary Ghose in argument for the respondent claiming under the transfer had a wider aspect and that the limited answer suggested would not have been a complete or sufficient answer.

The case law of Bengal recognises not merely the relinquishment by the widow of her husband's entire estate but the sale of the entirety to the next reversioner or with his consent to a third party [Nobokishore

SRYAMADAS ROY v. RADHIKA PROSAD.

Sarma Roy v. Hari Nath Sarma Roy (5)]. It was the recognition of such a transaction which caused the difficulty. Did the result depend on the consent of the reversioner or on the doctrine of relinquishment and what were the legal consequences?

Sir Rash Behari Ghose contended for the broad generalization that, apart from any question of relinquishment, the widow and the next reversioner possessed between them a complete power of disposal over the whole or any part of the husband's estate. The Full Bench had to deal with that contention and they rejected it.

The power of the widow to sell the entire inheritance to the next reversioner or with his consent, was traced to a lax application of the doctrine of relinquishment and acceleration. It could only be supported, if at all, on the basis of a sort of fictitious relinquishment. But the fictitious relinquishment still resembled the true relinquishment in this that it must be a relinquishment of the entirety of the husband's estate.

It followed that Nobokishore Sarma Roy's case (5) was no authority for the validity of a partial alienation of the husband's estate, even with the consent of the next reversioner. It was held that a partial transfer, whether by way of sale or mortgage, had nothing to do with relinquishment. The term had no meaning in such a connection and so much had really been conceded by Sir Rash Behari Ghose himself [Debi Prosad Chowdhry v. Golap Bhagat (4)]. A partial transfer was a transfer and nothing more and could only be supported by necessity. The consent of the next reversioner was merely strong presumptive evidence of necessity [Kalee Mohun Deb Roy v. Dhununjoy Shaha (6), Raj Lukhee Dabea v. Gokool Chunder Chowdhry (7), Bijoy Gopal Mukerji v. Girindra Nath Mukerji (8)].

That, as I understand it, was the decision of the Full Bench on the case presented for their consideration and we are bound to follow and apply it.

In arriving at the decision the majority of the learned Judges expressly relied on the language of the Privy Council in Behari Lal v. Madho Lal Ahir Gayawal (9). The relevant passages in the judgments of Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C. J., Stephen, J., and Mookerjee, J., will be found at pages 750, 765* and 780* of the report. Harington, J., expressed a somewhat different view on the point (page 756*), but arrived at the same conclusion as the other members of the Bench as to the principle applicable to partial alienations (page 759*). Holmwood, J., concurred generally with the Chief Justice.

It is idle, therefore, for the learned Pleader for the respondents in the present case to rely upon the two subsequent cases which purport to follow Nobokishore Sarma Roy's case (5), namely, Hem Chunder Sanyal v. Sarnamoyi Debi (10) and Pulin Chandra Mandal v. Bolai Mandal (11). These two cases were fully considered in Debi Prosad's case (4), where Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C. J., and Mookerjee, J., pointed out that the results arrived at were in part due to a misapprehension of the effect of Nobokishore Sarma Roy's case (5).

A few days after Debi Prosad Chowdhry's case (4) was decided, judgment was delivered by a Bench presided over by Mookerjee, J., in Gopeswar Misra v. Gopini Brishnabi (12). It was held that Debi Prosad's case (4) had settled the law relating to partial alienations and that Pulin Chandra Mandal's case (11) had been overruled. Apart from anything else we are bound by that view of the effect of the decision of the Full Bench.

In the present case, the result is plain. On Saraswati's death, Lakshmimani, apart from any arrangement which might be binding on her for her life-time, became entitled as the survivor to the entire estate. If she chose to leave half the estate in the hands of Paresh, that was not a relinquishment. Paresh, though he was the next reversioner, did not acquire an absolute title by acceleration and no alienation made by him could enure for a period longer than Lakshmimani's life.

In my opinion the judgment and decree of the District Judge in the suit out of which Appeal No. 2074 arises should be discharged and the decree of the Subordinate Judge decreeing the suit restored. The plaintiffs are entitled to their costs in this Court and the Court below from the defendants.

No. 2858 of 1915.

In the suit out of which Appeal No. 2858 arises the plaintiffs claim under a conveyance, dated the 14th November 1872, executed not only by Lakshmimani but by Paresh the then next reversioner. No doubt the fact that Paresh joined in the conveyance is strong presumptive evidence of necessity but the presumption is not conclusive. The trial Court held on a careful consideration of the evidence and the circumstances that it had been rebutted. The learned District Judge came to a different conclusion, but the reasons assigned by him in his judgment are unsatisfactory. He seems to be of opinion that the Privy Council in Hari Kishen Bhagat v. Kashi Parshad Singh (13), "held that the consent of the reversioners will make the sale valid." It is hardly necessary to say that that is not the effect of the decision.

The propriety of an alienation with the consent of the next reversioner may come in question not only with reference to the conduct of the widow, whether or not she was justified by necessity, but also with reference to the conduct of the next reversioner, whether or not his conduct was honest. If in the absence of legal necessity he engineered the transaction to suit his own ends and for his own immediate gain, his consent would lose all its virtue. The transaction would stand no higher than a partial alienation in his favour and would have to be judged from that standpoint. Nevertheless whatever might be said of the conduct of the widow or the next reversioner, the transferee if he made due enquiry and acted bona fide would still be entitled to the benefit of the equitable rule laid down by the Privy Council in Hunoomanpersaud Panday v. Musammatt Babooee Munraj Koonweree (14) and now enacted in section 38 of the Transfer of Property Act. Nor would the antecedent mismanagement of the estate affect him unless he was in some way a contributory party thereto (Mayne's Hindu Law, section 636).

In the present case the Appellate Court has not correctly stated the law applicable. As to the facts, the express findings of the Subordinate Judge are not categorically displaced and the conclusions—so far as any definite conclusions are stated—seem to be based rather on a priori considerations than on an examination of the evidence.

If the case must, as I think, be remanded, it is undesirable to say more, except perhaps this that the question of necessity, as it arises here, must be considered with reference to the estate as a whole, not solely with reference to that portion of it which was in the actual possession of Lakshmimani or solely with reference to that portion which was in the possession of Paresh.

The appeal should, in my opinion, succeed to this extent that the decree of the Court below should be discharged and the case remitted to that Court in order that the appeal thereto may be re-heard.

Second appeal from a decree of the Additional Judge, Meerut.

The Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru and Mr. Nihal Chand, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. A. Haidar and Dr. S. M. Sulaiman, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This and the connected Appeal No. 1065 of 1916 arise out of a suit brought by Musammât Ratan Moti for a declaration that a sale-deed executed by Jagan Lal, defendant No. 3, in favour of Tilak Chand and Hushiar Singh, defendants Nos. 1 and 2, on the 14th of February 1911 is null and void as against her interest. The sale-deed relates to a shop which admittedly belonged originally to one Chunni Lal. Chunni Lal had a son Kunwar Sen, whose widow was Musammât Badamo. It is alleged by one party and denied by the other that Kunwar Sen predeceased his father, but the fact is admitted that after Kunwar Sen's death Musammât Badamo was in possession. It is alleged on behalf of the plaintiff that the affairs of Musammât Badamo were managed by her son-in-law, Fakir Chand. In 1881 Musammât Badamo made a gift in favour of Roshan Lal, the son of Fakir Chand by Badamo's daughter. Fakir Chand had another wife by whom he had another son, Mahabir defendant No. 5. Roshan Lal died in 1900 leaving his widow Musammât Parsandi defendant N. 4. On the 22nd of June 1911, Parsandi made a gift in favour of the plaintiff. By virtue of this gift the plaintiff claims to be the owner of the property and she alleges that Jagan Lal had no right to sell it to Tilak Chand and Hoshiar Singh. The defendant Mahabir claims the ownership of the property by reason of his being the son of Fakir Chand who, he says, became entitled to it under the gift made in favour of Roshan Lal. Mahabir has, therefore, been arrayed as a defendant,

The Court of first instance made a decree in the plaintiff's favour but the lower Appellate Court has reversed it without trying the suit on the merits but only on the ground that the plaintiff was entitled to further relief, that she ought to have claimed possession of the property and that as she had not done so section 42 of the Specific Relief Act barred the claim. The lower Appellate Court holds that the shop being in the possession of one Moti Lal who executed a rent agreement in 1906 in favour of Fakir Chand, the plaintiff must be deemed to be out of possession, and it must be held that Fakir Chand was in possession and after his death Mahabir Prasad (his son) is in possession.

The plaintiff has preferred this appeal and it is contended on her behalf that having regard to the circumstances of the case the only relief that she could have claimed was a declaratory decree. In our opinion this contention is well-founded. It has been found by the lower Appellate Court that a rent agreement was executed in favour of Fakir Chand; but it has also found that Moti Lal paid rent to Musammât Badamo so long as she lived and that after Badamo's death Moti Lal refused to pay rent to either party until one party or the other established his or her title to the property. This being the state of things, Moti Lal's possession cannot be said to be the possession of the defendant Mahabir. It is true that as between a landlord and his tenant the latter is estopped from denying the title of the former. But there is no question in the present case as between landlord and tenant. Therefore the numerous rulings which have been cited on behalf of the respondents do not seem to us to have any bearing on this case. Moti Lal having refused to pay rent to any one his possession can only be deemed to be possession on behalf of the rightful owner and, therefore, the Court in this case instead of dismissing the suit on a preliminary ground should have tried the question of title and determined whether title was in the plaintiff, or in Mahabir, or in the defendants Nos. 1-3. As no question of title has been tried it cannot be said that the possession of Moti Lal is the possession of Mahabir. The plaintiff could not frame the present suit as a suit for possession inasmuch as the person in possession, namely, Moti Lal, has not denied her right and she has consequently no cause of action against him. Under these circumstances we are of opinion that the decree of the Court below is incorrect and must be set aside. We accordingly allow the appeal, discharge the decree of the lower Appellate Court and remand the case to that Court with directions to re-admit it under its original number in the register and to try it on the merits bearing in mind the observations made above. Costs here and hitherto will be costs in the cause.

Appeal decreed; Cause remanded.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Madura, in Appeal Suit No. 404 of 1915, preferred against the decree of the District Munsif, Tirumangalam, in Original Suit No. 295 of 1915.

FACTS.—A suit was filed in the Court of the District Munsif of Tirumangalam to declare that the decision of the Sub-Collector of Dindigul in Miscellaneous Case No. 1 of 1914, dated 8th May 1915, was void and invalid and not binding on the plaintiff and that it did not confer any right on the defendant, and to recover Rs. 48.11.0 as damages.

The plaintiff allegations were these. The land in question was old waste land belonging to the plaintiff. In Faslies 1321 and 1322 defendant cultivated and enjoyed it unlawfully without taking the plaintiff's permission. Plaintiff gave 'Angami' Pattas to the defendant for the said Faslies, charging him with Rs. 14.13.6 for Fasli 1321 and Rs. 23.2.0 for Fasli 1322 for rent and damages for unauthorized cultivation. Defendant received those Pattas but refused to pay more than Rs. 11.12.5 per Fasli. Defendant had no right to the land. In Fasli 1323 defendant demanded the plaintiff to give him a permanent Patta but the latter refused to do so. He then applied to the Sub-Collector of Dindigul on the 29th August 1914 for a permanent Patta alleging some payment of kist to the Village Munsif for rent of Fasli 1313. The land had prior thereto been sold by the plaintiff in auction and it had been purchased by one Rangaswami Konan. Plaintiff contested the above application put in by the defendant to the Sub-Collector, on the ground that the defendant had no right to maintain it and the Summary Court had no jurisdiction to try it, but the Sub-Collector overruled these objections and decided the application in favour of the defendant on the 8th May 1915. An appeal against that decision made by the plaintiff was pending with the District Collector. "For the above reasons, the decision of the Sub-Collector is opposed to law and invalid and will not bind the plaintiff." Besides, under section 46 of the Estates Land Act, the Sub-Collector can only issue a Patta to the defendant and cannot make any decision. It did not appear that a Patta was issued to the defendant by the Sub-Collector. Yet as the defendant relied on the above decision, the suit was brought to declare that it was void and invalid and to recover the damages due to plaintiff for Faslies 1321-22.

The defendant stated as follows:—
The plaintiff mentioned lands were not old waste. Item No. 1 thereof was land belonging to the defendant for which the plaintiff had granted a permanent Patta. Item No. 2 was ryoti land, for which among others he put in a Darkhast to the plaintiff in December 1910 and obtained a Patta. Subsequently the plaintiff wanted to treat the said land as defendant's temporary occupation and refused to grant him a proper Patta. He, therefore, applied to the Sub-Collector of Dindigul under section 46 of the Madras Estates Land Act for grant of a proper Patta by Miscellaneous Application No. 1 of 1914, and the Sub-Collector decided it in his favour overruling the plaintiff's objection. No "Angami" Patta is recognised under the Estates Land Act. The defendant is not aware of the auction-sale referred to in the plaint or the alleged purchase by Rangaswami Kone. They are, even if true, invalid and of no effect as against the defendant. Rangaswami Kone never took possession of the plaintiff mentioned lands. This Court has no jurisdiction to try this suit. It cannot set aside an order of the Revenue Court made on a matter which was exclusively triable by it. The suit is res judicata by the decision of the Sub-Collector of Dindigul. The mesne profits claimed are excessive. The suit is barred by limitation and should be dismissed with costs.

The District Munsif dismissed the suit by the following judgment:—

"Miscellaneous Application No. 1 of 1914 on the file of the Court of the Sub-Collector of Dindigul was put in by this defendant under section 46 of the Madras Estates Land Act. Clause 2 of that section entitles a non-occupancy ryot of old waste, whose application for a grant of a permanent right of occupancy under the preceding clause is not accepted by the land-holder, to make the necessary deposit in the Collector's Office and apply to the Collector to confer on him such permanent right of occupancy, and the following clause empowers the Collector to comply with such application after giving notice to the land-holder and hearing him, if he appears, and making such enquiry as he thinks necessary.

The Sub-Collector duly issued notice of the above mentioned application to the present plaintiff, the landlord, who appeared and contested it and after making such enquiry as he thought necessary, he gave judgment to the applicant, the present defendant, with costs.

Now, it cannot be, and was not, contended that the Sub-Collector had no jurisdiction to entertain or dispose of an application filed under clause 2 of section 46. What is stated by the plaintiff is that the defendant was not a "non-occupancy ryot" within the meaning of the said section but a mere trespasser, and the Sub-Collector ought not, therefore, to have applied that section in his favour or given judgment for him. This is the simple ground on which this Court is asked to declare that the Sub-Collector's decision is void and invalid.

The point above mentioned as to whether this defendant was a non-occupancy ryot or a mere trespasser was raised before the Sub-Collector in the above-mentioned application and decided by him in favour of this defendant before he proceeded to give judgment in his favour. That decision may be right or may be wrong. Assuming for the sake of argument, that it is wrong, the plaintiff may appeal against it (as admittedly he has done), but he cannot, it seems to me, maintain a separate suit to declare the judgment void and invalid. Even apart from any special provision of the Estates Land Act, it appears to be an elementary principle of law that a decision made in one proceeding cannot be declared void by a separate and independent proceeding on the simple ground that that decision is not correct (assuming the decision is not correct). A suit or proceeding may lie to declare the decision made in another suit or proceeding void, if it had been obtained by fraud or there was total absence of jurisdiction, or under an express provision of Statute as in cases of summary orders on claim petitions and the like, but no such considerations exist in the present case.

It also appears to me that the suit is barred by section 189 of the Estates Land Act, clause 3 of which provides that the decision of a Revenue Court in any suit or proceeding under the Act falling within the exclusive jurisdiction of that Court shall be binding on the parties thereto and persons claiming under them, in any suit or proceeding in a Civil Court, in which such matter may be in issue between them. The application contemplated by clause 2, section 46, is within the exclusive jurisdiction of the Revenue Court and the decision therein that this defendant was a non-occupancy ryot and entitled to get a permanent right of occupancy is, therefore, binding on the plaintiff, who was a party thereto. And on this footing the plaintiff has no case in this Court.

For the above reasons I hold that this suit is not maintainable and dismiss the same with costs."

On appeal, the District Judge confirmed the Munsif's decree in the following judgment:—

"Plaintiff sued to declare that the decision of the Sub-Collector of Dindigul in Miscellaneous Case No. 1 of 1914 is void and invalid and not binding on plaintiff and does not confer any right on the defendant and to recover Rs. 48-11-0 damages.

The lower Court has held that it had no jurisdiction to try the suit.

The land in dispute is an old waste, and under section 46 of the Estates Land Act defendant applied to the Revenue Officer to confer on him a permanent right of occupancy therein. The Sub-Collector acting under section 46 (3) gave notice to the land-holder and after hearing him and making an enquiry conferred a permanent right of occupancy upon the defendant.

It is sought in this suit in the Civil Court to declare that that order is invalid on the ground that the Revenue Court had no right to maintain the application, as the defendant was not a non-occupancy ryot. Also that the order under section 46 (3) of the Collector conferring a permanent right of occupancy is not a judicial order, but an executive order and that, therefore, a civil suit will lie to establish that it is not binding on plaintiff.

There would be something in this argument if the wording of section 46 (3) were not as clear as it is, that notice is to be given to the land-holder and after hearing him and making such enquiry as is necessary, the Collector is to execute the instrument required. It is clear from this that the act is not a purely official one, but is an enquiry in which both sides are to be heard and a decision is to be arrived at, or in other words, the Collector is to constitute himself into a Revenue Court for the purpose of the section.

It is true that the order so passed has no appeal provided, but there is a right of revision to the District Collector still. The order of the Sub-Collector is a 'decision' and, therefore, it cannot be questioned by a Civil Court.

It is argued that section 189 shows that, as section 46 (3) is not within part A or B of the Schedule, it is a matter which is not taken from the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts.

But the wording of the section is very wide. 'Of the nature specified' is intended to include all suits and applications (this is an application) which in substance amount to proceedings of the character enumerated in the schedule [Samiasi Kavundan v. Akkulammal (1)].

It is to be noted that section 46, the proviso, is included in the A Schedule and section 46 (2) is a corollary of the proviso and, therefore, in substance amounts to proceedings of the character enumerated in the schedule.

I think it is well established law that suits do not lie in Civil Courts to obtain declarations that the decisions of Revenue Courts do not bind the plaintiff, provided the matter adjudicated upon falls within their exclusive jurisdiction even though such matter is not specified in the schedule, for it would amount to the Civil Court deciding matters which have been taken from them by Statute, Thiruvengadam Pillai v. Ramanujulu Naidu (2) and Uman Shanker v. Bhagwan Din (3).

In this case the Collector under section 46(3) had to decide whether the applicant before him (defendant here) had a right to a permanent Patta and had, in order to decide that, to decide whether he was or was not a non occupancy tenant. The Collector after his enquiry decided that he was a non occupancy tenant and therefore gave Patta.

This is a matter that the Collector has to decide in order to decide on giving or withholding the Patta and, therefore, it is a matter which once he has decided, the Civil Court cannot again decide as it would have to do for the purposes of this declaratory suit. The finding of the Revenue Court is binding on the Civil Court, and as the Revenue Court has found the defendant to be a non-occupancy tenant entitled to a permanent Patta, the Civil Court cannot re-open the question—it is resjudicata.

I consider the lower Court was correct in finding that the suit was not maintainable in a Civil Court.

This appeal, therefore, fails, and is dismissed with costs."

The plaintiff preferred a second appeal to the High Court.

JUDGMENT.—Under section 189 (1) of the Madras Estates Land Act, jurisdiction is conferred upon the Collector to hear and determine, as a Revenue Court, the suits and applications specified in parts A and B of the Schedule to the Act, and there is a corresponding provision depriving the Civil Courts of jurisdiction in such matters. As regards section 46, part B of the Schedule confers upon the Collector jurisdiction to dispose, as Revenue Court, of applications for settlement of rent of land for the purpose of section 45 under the proviso to that section, and makes orders passed under that section appealable to the Court of the District Collector, if there is no dispute about the rate of rent under the proviso to section 46 (1), there is nothing in section 189 or in the Schedule to oust the jurisdiction of the Civil Court or confer jurisdiction on the Collector as a Revenue Court; and even if there is such a dispute, jurisdiction is only conferred with respect to it.

Under section 45 (3) the Collector may execute an instrument conferring a permanent right of occupancy upon the tenant, and the execution is to have the same effect as execution by the land-holder. The right to apply for a permanent right of occupancy is only conferred by the section on "a non-occupancy ryot", and the power conferred upon the Collector to execute an instrument conferring it is subject to the same limitation. If the Collector purporting to act under the section executes an instrument conferring occupancy right on a person who is not "a non-occupancy ryot", he is acting ultra vires; and, as the matter is one which he is not authorised to dispose of as a Revenue Court under section 189 read with the Schedule to the Act, the jurisdiction of the Civil Court is not ousted. The appeal must be allowed, the decrees reversed and the suit remanded for disposal according to law. Costs hitherto will abide.

Appeal allowed.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 91—Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), s. 10—Mortgage of sir plots—Sale of proprietary rights by mortgagor—Mortgagor, whether can redeem.

Plaintiff executed a usufructuary mortgage of certain sir plots. Subsequently his proprietary rights in the land were sold and were purchased by the defendants, who later on also purchased the mortgagee rights in the sir plots. Plaintiff brought a suit to redeem the usufructuary mortgage executed by him:

Held, that as soon as the plaintiff's proprietary rights were sold he became an ex-proprietary tenant of the sir plots under section 10 of the Agra Tenancy Act, and that as the mortgage stood between him and his right to occupy the land as an ex-proprietary tenant, he was a person who had an interest in the property within the meaning of section 91 of the Transfer of Property Act and was, therefore, entitled to redeem it. JUDGMENT.

RICHARDS, C. J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for redemption. The facts may be very shortly stated for the purpose of explaining the question which we have to decide.

In the years 1898 and 1899 two usufructuary mortgages were made. The property mortgaged was sir plots. Later on, after the year 1902, the mortgagor's proprietary rights were sold and purchased by the defendants or some of them or the predecessors of some of them. Subsequently the defendants (or some of them) purchased the mortgagee rights. It is unnecessary to discuss which of the defendants purchased which of the mortgagee rights. Then the present suit was instituted to redeem the mortgage of 1898. The Court of first instance decreed the claim. The lower Appellate Court reversed the decree of the Court of first instance and dismissed the suit. On the case coming before a single Judge of this Court it was referred to a larger Bench.

The argument in favour of the defendants is that the plaintiff having lost his proprietary right has ceased to have any interest in the property and he cannot, therefore, redeem. It is said that what he mortgaged was his proprietary right in the sir plot. When the proprietary right was sold the right to redeem the mortgage (if any) was transferred to the vendee of the proprietary right. This is the argument. I consider that the contention is not well founded. As soon as the proprietary rights of the mortgagor were sold, he became entitled to the rights which the Tenancy Act gives to an ex-proprietor in respect of his sir land, that is, the right to occupy the sir land at a preferential rent so long as that rent is paid and the statutory conditions fulfilled. The mortgage of 1898 stood between the mortgagor and his right to occupy the sir land as an ex-proprietary tenant and in my opinion he was a person who had an interest in the property within the meaning of section 91 of the Transfer of Property Act. In my opinion if the mortgagor, or his representative, of the mortgage of 1898 had gone to the original usufructuary mortgagee, and if that usufructuary mortgagee had never parted with his mortgagee rights, the mortgagee would have no answer to the claim for redemption upon payment of the mortgage money. If the original mortgagee would have had no defence to such a suit I cannot see that the purchaser of mortgagee rights, even if he has also acquired the proprietary rights, has any answer to a suit for redemption. I would allow the appeal and restore the decree of the Court of first instance.

TUDBALL, J.—I fully agree. When the appellant's proprietary rights were sold the law reserved to the ex-proprietor one out of his bundle of rights, so that he certainly still retains an interest in the property mortgaged sufficient in my opinion to enable him to redeem.

By THE COURT.—We allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and restore the decree of the Court of first instance with costs in all Courts. We extend the time for payment to three months from this date.

Appeal allowed.

An order of remand by an Appellate Court contained a direction that costs before it should abide and follow the result:

Procedure Code. The trial Court has no discretion to refuse such costs.

The word 'event' means nothing but the outcome or result of the proceedings and includes the description applicable to the withdrawal of a suit and its consequences with reference to Order XXIII, Civil Procedure Code.

Petition under section 115 of Act V of 1908, praying the High Court to revise the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Kistna at Ellore, dated the 16th December 1916, in Original Suit No. 10 of 1905 (Original Suit No. 21 of 1903 on the file of the District Court, Godavari).

Mr. P. Nagabhushanam, for the Petitioner.

Dr. Swaminadhan and Mr. Chenchiah, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The question raised relates to an award of costs. As regards the Rs. 100 awarded, as I read the order, for costs incurred before it, the lower Court seems to have exercised its discretion and it is not shown to have done so in any respect unjudicially. With such an exercise it is not open to me to interfere in revision.

There is, however, in the order no reference to the costs incurred by 3rd defendant in this Court or to the fact that the order of this Court, remanding the case, directed that costs before it should abide and follow the result. It is urged on the one hand that the lower Court had no choice but to give effect to this order; on the other that (1) it has used its discretion to refrain from doing so; (2) there was nothing in this Court's order by which that discretion was taken away. Reference to the lower Court's order shows that it did not mention expressly or impliedly costs in this Court and that, to judge by its tenor, only costs before itself were in its mind. This Court's decree is in a usual form and there is no reason in the present case for refusing its ordinary effect to the wording or for holding that the learned Judges concerned did not mean costs before them to be paid to the party or parties, in whose favour the litigation might end. It is said that when a litigation ends, as this has done, in the withdrawal of the plaintiff's claim, there is no 'event' which costs can abide and follow. But the authorities relied on in Myers v.

Defries (1), Myers v. Defries (2) and Howell v. Dering (3) do not support this conclusion. They relate to the effect of findings on issues and the identification of such findings with the "event". That is, they involve attempts to define "event" in a connection and for a purpose different from that now in question. Speaking more generally, however, Buckley and Kennedy, learned Judges in the last case referred to, fully recognise that the 'event' was nothing but the outcome or result of the proceedings and there is no reason why the word should not be the description applicable to the withdrawal of a suit and its consequences with reference to Order XXIII, Civil Procedure Code. Taking this view, I hold that the lower Court ought to have given effect to this Court's order as to costs and that it did not do so.

It is then necessary to mention that a preliminary objection has been made, that no appeal lies. I do not deal with the objection on its merits, because in the absence, as I hold, of any attempt by the lower Court to apply itself to this part of defendants' claim, there was clearly a failure on its part to exercise jurisdiction and if there is no appeal, defendants will suffer distinct prejudice by the lower Court's order and have no remedy against it. I, therefore, decide to treat the appeal in the alternative as a revision petition and to modify the lower Court's decree by inserting in it as payable to 3rd defendant, who alone is appealing here, provision for the payment to her by plaintiffs of the costs incurred by her in this Court in Appeal Suit No. 111 of 1910, in addition to the amount already awarded. Plaintiffs and 3rd defendant will pay and receive proportionate costs in these proceedings, on the basis that they are in revision and not appeal. Defendant No. 2, who has appeared here, will bear his own costs.

Order varied.

A suit was instituted against a father and son on the basis of a mortgage. The son put forward the plea that there was no family necessity. The Court gave a simple money decree against the father, which stated that the son was "exempted" and that he should get his costs from the plaintiff. The latter executed the decree against the father's estate, and that having proved insufficient, he sought to attach and sell the son's estate. The son objected in execution and his objection was allowed. Thereupon the plaintiff brought the present suit seeking a declaration that the son's property could be sold in execution of the decree on the principle of the pious obligation of a son to pay his father's debts:

Held, (1) that the effect of the decree was to dismiss the suit as against the son with costs;

(2) that under section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code the order on the son's objection in execution was final and that the suit was barred under that section.

Mr. Kanhaya Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises under the following circumstances. A suit was instituted against a father and son on the basis of a mortgage. A plea was put forward on behalf of the son that there was no family necessity. The result of the suit was that the Court gave a simple money decree against the father and held that the son was not liable, and in the decree stated that the son was "exempted" and that he should get his costs from the plaintiff. We may pause here to say that we consider that this was exactly the same as if the Court had by the decree expressly dismissed the suit with costs as against the son. The plaintiff-decree-holder executed the decree against the father's estate. That having proved insufficient he sought to attach and sell the son's estate. The son objected in execution and his objection was allowed. Thereupon the plaintiff brought the present suit seeking a declaration that the son's property could be sold in execution of the decree on the principle of the pious obligation of a son to pay his father's debts. The learned Judge of this Court, on being informed that a difficult question of Hindu Law, particularly having regard to certain remarks of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the recent case of Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (1) arose, referred the appeal for the decision of two Judges.

On behalf of the respondent it has been pointed out that this question of law really does not arise because the allowing of the son's objection in execution was final and the present suit cannot be brought. Under section 47 all matters relating to the execution and discharge of the decree arising between parties to the suit must be disposed of in execution and not by a separate suit. There had been some conflict of authority previous to the passing of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1908. This Court had held that the parties must not only be parties to the suit but they must be parties to the decree. Any conflict of authority has been set at rest by the explanation which has been added to section 47, namely "for the purposes of this section, a plaintiff whose suit has been dismissed and a defendant against whom a suit has been dismissed are parties to the suit." It was contended on behalf of the appellant that this explanation does not apply where a defendant has been merely "exempted." We think there is no force whatever in this contention. The expression in the decree exempting a particular defendant was probably an inaccurate expression, but the operation of the decree was to dismiss the suit as against that particular defendant. We dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

THE PUBLIC PROSECUTOR—APPELLANT
versusMADDILA MUTAYALU AND ANOTHER—ACCUSED.Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 372, 373, scope of—“Letting to hire”, “obtaining possession,” meaning of—“Kanyarikam” ceremony, performance of, whether within the section.

Under sections 372 and 373, Indian Penal Code, there must be making over of possession of the minor girl either by sale or by hire or by some similar arrangement in order that a case may come within the mischief of the law. [p. 866, col. 1.]

Reg. v. Arunachellam, 1 M. 164; 1 Weir 358; 1 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 109, Padmarati, Ex parte, 5 M. H. C. R. 415; 1 Weir 356; Public Prosecutor v. Kannammal, 18 Ind. Cas. 257; 24 M. L. J. 211; 13 M. N. 479; 10 M. L. T. 501; 12 Cr. L. J. 566, distinguished.

Where the only evidence against the accused was that he performed the kanyarikam ceremony, i. e., the nuptials of a minor girl and had sexual intercourse with her for 3 days successively, but the girl continued to live with her parents who never parted with possession of her to the accused:

Held, that these facts were not sufficient to support the conviction of the accused under section 373 of the Penal Code and the conviction of the girl's parents under section 372 of the Penal Code. [p. 866, col. 2.]

Appeal under section 417 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, against the acquittal of the aforesaid accused by the Sessions Judge, Ganjam, in Criminal Appeals Nos. 25 and 26 of 1917, on his file (Calendar Case No. 39 of 1917 on the file of the Court of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Berhampore).

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. E. R. Osborne (Public Prosecutor), for the Crown.—The order of acquittal is wrong and is based on an erroneous view of the law. The Kanyarikam ceremony performed by the 2nd accused was to effectuate an immoral purpose. The ceremonial has the effect of permitting the man who does it to use the bed of the girl for 3 successive days. That is tantamount to taking possession of the girl on hire for a short period and is within the mischief of sections 372 and 373, Indian Penal Code. The house where the 2nd accused had sexual congress with the girl was rented by him. The case is analogous to the dedication to temples as Dasis.

Mr. T. Prakasam, for the Accused.—Sections 372 and 373, Indian Penal Code, do not apply to the facts of this particular case. There is no evidence that the parents of the girl ever parted with possession of her and the sections require a loss of control or dominion over the girl to make the action indictable. The performance of the “Kanyarikam” ceremony will not affect the case as the essentials of the offence are wanting.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against the acquittal of two persons, the first of whom was charged with an offence under section 372, Indian Penal Code, and the other under section 373, Indian Penal Code. The first accused is the mother of a Hindu girl under 16 years of age and the 2nd accused is a Komattee. The latter kept the elder sister of the girl until she died and on her death, the evidence is that a ceremony called Kanyarikam was performed between the 2nd accused and the girl with the help of the 1st accused. The Kanyarikam ceremony, according to the witnesses, has the effect of an arrangement by which a person has intercourse with a girl who has just attained puberty for 3 days. P. W. No. 1 says: “The 2nd accused Krishnamurthy performed the Kanyarikam ceremony which means her nuptials.” The man that performed the ceremony enjoys the girl's bed for 3 days successively. They may afterwards continue their friendship or may separate. The evidence, however, shows that the minor girl continued to live with her parents, that is, the 1st accused and her father in the same house as before. The house had been rented by the 2nd accused and he paid the rent while his former mistress, who was the sister of the girl concerned in this case, was living. The same arrangement was continued. There is evidence to show that the parents of the girl in no way parted with the possession of her to the 2nd accused. There is no suggestion, except that the ceremony of Kanyarikam was performed, that she was let to hire for any term. The question is, whether the performance of this ceremony and the above mentioned facts bring the case within section 372, Indian Penal Code, so far as the mother of the girl is concerned, and within section 373, Indian Penal Code, so far as the 2nd accused is concerned. We may take it that the 2nd accused did have intercourse with this girl D. W. No. 9. The main question in the case is, whether what has taken place amounts to letting to hire or otherwise disposing of the minor within the meaning of section 372, Indian Penal Code, or hiring or otherwise obtaining possession within the meaning of section 373, Indian Penal Code. The first section is aimed at the person who disposes of the person of a minor for immoral purposes, and the other section is directed against the man who obtains possession of a minor girl for such purposes. We think that the language of the two sections is sufficiently clear to show that there must be making over of possession of the minor girl either by sale or by hire or by some similar arrangement in order that the case may come within the mischief of the law. This seems to us to be also the effect of the rulings. One of the earliest cases in this Court is that reported as Queen v. Shaik Ali (1). That is a decision of three Judges. It is pointed out by Scotland, C. J., in his judgment in that case that to bring a case within section 373, Indian Penal Code, there must be evidence to show that complete possession and control of the minor's person was obtained by buying, hiring or otherwise with the intent or knowledge specified in the section. It is further pointed out that "the provision seems to exclude the supposition that an obtaining of possession in the sense in which that expression is, no doubt, sometimes used, of merely having sexual connection with a woman, could have been in the contemplation of the framers of the section." Innes, J., says: "I am of opinion that 'possession' in the section under which he is indicted means possession with a power of disposal, and in this sense there is no evidence that the prisoner had possession of the girl." The same view of the law was taken in Queen-Empress v. Sukee Raur (2). That was a case under section 373 and Pigot, J., held that section 372, Indian Penal Code, contemplates a case of letting or hiring or other similar transaction by which the possession of a girl is obtained with the intention of employing her habitually for the purpose of indiscriminate sexual intercourse. Mr. Mayne in his commentary on this section at page 589, fourth edition, states the law to be that "the words refer to a making over of a minor either in perpetuity or for a term, and not merely for the commission of isolated acts of sexual intercourse." We have on the other hand been referred to a number of decisions with respect to the dedication of a minor girl to a temple or a god as a Dasi. We do not think that those cases have a very close bearing on the present question. Those are the class of cases reported as Reg. v. Arunachellam (3), Padmavati, Ex parte (4), Public Prosecutor v. Kannammal (5), Srinivasa v. Annasami (6) and Public Prosecutor v. Rajammal (7). We hold that the facts proved in the case are not sufficient to support convictions under sections 372 and 373. The order of acquittal will, therefore, stand.

Appeal dismissed.

marrying second wife—First wife refusing to live with husband—Sufficient cause.

Ordinarily the fact that a Burmese Buddhist husband takes a second wife might be a good reason for the first wife declining to live with him, unless he provides her with a separate house. Where, however, a husband marries a second wife owing to the refusal of his first wife to live with him, but is willing to take back the first wife, the latter is not entitled to maintenance under section 488 (4) of the Criminal Procedure Code.

Mr. Maung Gyi, for the Applicant.

Mr. W. Po Thit, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Applicant has been ordered to pay maintenance for his wife Ma Shwe Kin. His case was that there was a divorce but this was not proved. It is clear, however, that owing to incompatibility of temper or other cause they separated and the wife ceased to live under her husband's protection. About seven months after the separation applicant re-married. Respondent declines to return to live with applicant who is willing to take her back, unless he provides her with a separate establishment.

Ordinarily the fact that the husband took a second wife might be a good reason for the first wife declining to live with him, unless he provides her with a separate house. In the present circumstance, however, I do not consider the claim is reasonable. Respondent chose to live separately from her husband and there is evidence that when asked to re-join him she declined.

She was apparently willing to effect a divorce. By her conduct she could only expect that the natural result would be to force her husband into marrying again. In fact his re-marriage was the natural result of her refusing to live with him and separating from him for a number of months. Applicant is not a well-to-do man, and cannot afford to maintain two separate establishments.

His offer, therefore, to support his wife, if she will resume conjugal relations, is reasonable and I do not consider that she is entitled to maintenance because she elects to live apart from him. She must be prepared to accept the result of her own conduct. I set aside the order of the Magistrate for maintenance of Ma Shwe Kin.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 408—Criminal breach of trust by clerk or servant—Marksman engaged by station master, whether servant of Railway Company—Overcharge retained by marksman—Offence.

Accused was engaged by a station master to mark and load goods delivered to the Railway Company for despatch and was paid out of an allowance granted by the Company to the station master. The latter also entrusted the accused with the writing up of the cash register. The accused recovered a certain sum as an overcharge from a consignor of goods and converted it to his own use. He was thereupon tried and convicted of an offence under section 408 of the Penal Code:

Held, that the accused, not being a clerk or servant of the Railway Company, could not be convicted of an offence under section 408 of the Penal Code in respect of the sum received by him. [p. 868, col. 1.]

Criminal revision from an order of the Sessions Judge, Allahabad.

Mr. Perry Lal Banerji, for the Applicant.

Mr. R. Malcomson (Assistant Government Advocate), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—Karim-ud-din has been convicted of three offences, each offence under section 408 of the Indian Penal Code, and sentenced to six months' rigorous imprisonment on each offence, the sentences to run consecutively. It appears from the record and the arguments addressed to me that station masters on the East Indian Railway get some kind of allowance from the Railway in return for goods to be despatched by the Railway to be marked and loaded or otherwise handled. The station master Raghunath Pershad appointed Karim-ud-din and gave him Rs. 10 a month for doing this work. There was no contract of any kind between the East Indian Railway Company and Karim-ud-din. Raghunath Pershad appears to have made or permitted Karim-ud-din to write a number of Railway registers. It is not for a moment asserted that the East Indian Railway Company sanctioned this allotment of work to Karim-ud-din or were in any way cognizant of it.

GAHAR MAHAMMAD V. PITAMBAR DAS.

Raghunath Pershad took leave and was succeeded by one Rikhi Lal. Rikhi Lal appears to have gone a step further than Raghunath Pershad in employing Karim-ud-din in this kind of work and to have given him the cash registers to write up. The result or alleged result of these proceedings was that certain items of money disappeared. The accused was charged with embezzling three separate different items. The nature of these items is somewhat different. The first item is an item of Rs. 5-10-0. The prosecution allege that this was an overcharge upon certain goods consigned through the East Indian Railway to one Sat Narain. Sat Narain appears to have paid the sum under protest, and to have written to the Railway Company on the point. The item was represented in a letter, the writing of which is traced to the accused but the signature on the writing is that of Rikhi Lal's. The money never came into the hands of the East Indian Railway Company. It was described as a demurrage charge, while I understand that the Railway have never put it forward as money due to them either on account of goods consigned or demurrage thereon. The other two items are of the same description, but for the purposes of this revision I need not go into them. The contention raised before me is that with reference to the first item no offence coming within section 408 of the Indian Penal Code has been proved and the trial of the accused for the three offences under section 408 of the Indian Penal Code is illegal, a joint trial of the three items not being allowable by law. It is really round this first charge that the argument in revision centres. I accept the plea that even if the facts be considered proved, the first is not an offence which falls within section 408 of the Indian Penal Code. Karim-ud-din was neither clerk nor servant of the Railway Company, he was not employed as clerk or servant of theirs and not being so, he could not be entrusted in such capacity with this sum of Rs. 5-10-0. It is contended before me that Karim-ud-din having chosen to take upon himself the duties and responsibilities of a clerk of the East Indian Railway Company, must be regarded as a clerk and cannot afterwards say that he is not such a clerk, and my attention was called to the case of Queen Empress v. Parmeshar Dat (1). There is, however, an important difference in the case cited and the present case. Parmeshar Dat was recognised by the authorities as filling the position of a public servant. There was no such recognition in this case, nor can I suppose that there would ever have been such a recognition. The probabilities are that if the attention of the East Indian Railway Company had been called to the fact that this marksman was posting up registers and receiving moneys, they would have utterly refused to recognise him and would have called Rikhi Lal to account for such an irregularity. Then further my attention was called to what was argued, how far the sum of Rs. 5-10-0 taken under the circumstances stated would come at all under the crime of embezzlement. It was not the property of the East Indian Railway Company, it was repudiated as not being their property and whatever may have been the offence committed in respect of that Rs. 5-10-0, it was not the offence of embezzlement. The joint trial under the circumstances was illegal. I quash it, set aside the convictions and sentences. Karim-ud-din must be released.

Conviction set aside.

Rule against the order of the Deputy Magistrate, Dinajpur, dated the 31st October 1917.

FACTS material to the report will appear from the following orders of the Deputy Magistrate and the District Magistrate of Dinajpur, respectively:—

"The complaint is that on the morning of the 21st August, Pitambar Das, a peon of the Civil Court, went to execute a warrant of arrest in the house of the accused Gaher Muhammad and the accused persons obstructed him in the discharge of his public functions. Halimuddin instituted a civil suit against his wife Masiran Bibi for the restitution of conjugal rights and got a decree. An appeal was preferred by the defendants against the order of the Munsif, and it was dismissed with costs. Masiran Bibi was detained by the accused Gaher Muhammad in his house as he wanted to marry her with his son Abdul Aziz. The peon went to Gaher Muhammad's house on the morning of the 21st August accompanied by Nasir Sheik, Halimuddin and Ajibulla. They found Masiran Bibi sweeping the inner yard of Gaher Muhammad's house. Halimuddin identified his wife, whereupon the peon asked him to seize her. Gaher Muhammad wanted to see the letter of authority and the peon showed him the warrant of arrest (Exhibit 1). Halimuddin and Nasir were beaten by Gaher Muhammad and others. Nasir Sheik instituted a case under section 323, Indian Penal Code, against Gaher Muhammad and others, and it has been disposed of by me to day. The peon gave "dohai" of Government, but to no effect. The accused Gaher Muhammad ordered to snatch away Masiran Bibi. Abdul Aziz, Esar and others then dragged her away. The peon then wrote a report (Exhibit 2) in the outer yard of Gaher Muhammad's house. The first Munsif granted sanction to the peon to file a case under section 186, Indian Penal Code (Exhibit 3), on the 22nd August.

"It appears from the deposition of P. Ws. Nos. 1 and 2, that the peon asked Halimuddin to seize Masiran Bibi. The prosecution witnesses have satisfactorily proved that the peon showed the warrant to the accused Gaher Mahammad and that Masiran Bibi was dragged away by Abdul Aziz, Esar and others under the order of Gaher Muhammad Sarkar.

"The defence story is that Nasir Sheik, Halimuddin and others numbering about 30 or 40 men trespassed into the house of Gaher Muhammad, at about 4 A. M. of the 21st August. There was no peon with them and that nobody gave "dohai" of Government. Rai Mahamed, the father of Halimuddin, asked Gaher Muhammad to produce Masiran Bibi. An altercation ensued and Gaher Muhammad was wounded on his head by Rai Muhammad. The defence story does not seem to me to be a probable one. I cannot believe that D. Ws. 1 and 2 were sitting wide awake at that hour of the night and saw 30 or 40 men passing by their houses. Apparently the defence attempted to change the time of occurrence for their own advantage. I have seen the General Diary Book of the Chirirbandar Police Station for the 21st August. One of the sons of the accused Gaher Muhammad lodged an information of mar pit at the Thana. He stated then that there was a Hindu peon with the party. The prosecution ought to have examined the Police Officer and got the entry in the Diary marked as an Exhibit.

"The warrant was a legal one as Masiran Bibi had an opportunity of obeying the decree and wilfully failed to obey it (vide rule 32, Order XXI, Civil Procedure Code). Masiran Bibi had appealed against the order of the Munsif, and consequently she had full knowledge of the decree. The appeal was dismissed by the Officiating Additional Sub-Judge on the 31st July. The warrant was issued on the 20th August. It is clear, therefore, that she had nearly three weeks' time to obey the decree. Pitambar Das peon was obstructed in the discharge of his public duties by the aforesaid accused persons and he was authorised by law to execute the warrant.

"I, therefore, find the accused Gaher Muhammad Sarkar, Abdul Aziz and Esar Muhammad guilty under section 186, Indian Penal Code, and sentence each of them to pay a fine of Rs. 10 (ten only), in default to undergo rigorous imprisonment for a fortnight. They are further directed to pay Rs. 1-8-0 to the complainant as the cost of Court-fee."

"The facts of the case seem properly proved. It is urged that the procedure was irregular on the part of the peon as he did not properly communicate the purport of the warrant to the woman, and that the proper way was to inform her of the order and then for the Court to deal with her by civil imprisonment or fine if she did not obey. But it seems from the evidence that the peon was not given time for attending to any such procedure but was attacked at once. I can hardly think that the action of the appellants in resisting the orders of the Court was not punishable. I think the conviction is correct. The appeal is dismissed."

Babu Girija Prasonna Sanyal, for the Petitioners.

JUDGMENT.—In this case we think that the warrant, the execution of which is said to have been resisted, was illegal. The petitioners should not, therefore, have been convicted under section 186, Indian Penal Code. We set aside the conviction and sentence and direct that the fines, if paid, be refunded.

Rule made absolute.

Burma Excise Act (V of 1917), s. 37—Unlawful possession of tari in district where tree-tax system is not in force—Offence.

In a district in which the tree-tax system is not in force and in which, consequently, the law does not prohibit or place any restriction upon the manufacture of tari, it cannot be unlawfully manufactured, and section 37 of the Burma Excise Act does not, therefore, apply to the possession of tari manufactured in such a District. [p 870, col. 2.]

Mr. H. H. Lutter, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This is one of seven cases in which the accused have been convicted and sentenced to pay fines under section 37 of the Burma Excise Act (Burma Act V of 1917). The charge in each case was that the accused had been in possession of less than four-quarts of tari which had been illegally manufactured, and that such possession was within five miles of a licensed tari shop. The District Magistrate is doubtful whether the convictions can stand.

Burma Act V of 1917 only came into force on the 1st October 1917, and though the law in respect of the possession of tari does not appear to have been materially altered, this result has been arrived at by a somewhat different method to that followed in the Act which has been superseded. For the purpose of the present case it is sufficient to point out that unfermented tari has been declared to be alcoholic liquor, and that alcoholic liquor is included in the meaning of the term "excisable article," while "manufacture" includes the tapping of tari-producing trees and the drawing of tari from trees, section 2, subsections (a), (f) and (m). The manufacture of excisable articles is forbidden except under the authority and subject to the conditions of a license granted under the Act by section 12 (a) of the Act, and by a notification of the Financial Department No. 72, dated the 18th September 1917, the Local Government has been pleased to exempt from the provisions of section 12 of the Act tari where the tree tax system is not in force.

The District Magistrate reports that the tree-tax system is not in force in his District. The provisions of section 12 (a) do not, therefore, apply to tari and there is no other provision in the Act making its manufacture illegal. Section 37 of the Act provides a penalty for the possession of an excisable article which the person possessing it knows or has reason to believe has been unlawfully manufactured. It is clear, therefore, that in a District in which the law does not prohibit or place any restriction upon the manufacture of tari, it cannot be unlawfully manufactured, and section 37 does not, therefore, apply to the possession of tari manufactured in such a District.

The District Magistrate has expressed doubt as to whether the possession was lawful in view of the fact that it has not been shown that the tari had been collected in unsmoked or unlimed pots. This doubt, however, has reference to another set of facts. Section 16 (1) of the Act provides that the Local Government may, by notification, prescribe a limit of quantity for possession of any excisable article, and in exercise of the authority so granted the Local Government has, by Financial Department Notification No. 77, dated the 18th September 1917, prescribed a limit of four reputed quart bottles in the case of tari; where the quantity of tari exceeds four quart bottles, its possession is an offence punishable under section 30 (a) of the Act subject to further exceptions made by Notification No. 72 referred to above, of which the first clause permits possession of tari intended for the manufacture of gur, jaggery, molasses or sagar, in a District where the tree tax system is not in force, if the tari is drawn either in smoked pots or in pots treated with lime. But inasmuch as in each of the cases here referred to the quantity of tari found was less than four quart bottles, it is clear that no offence was committed, however the tari may have been drawn.

The convictions and sentences are set aside and the fines must be refunded.

Convictions set aside.
